SENATE.

FRIDAY, September 25, 1914.

(Legislative day of Thursday, September 24, 1914.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

PROPOSED ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. The unfinished business, I understand, is the Alaska coal bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but a conference report is always a privileged question, and the Chair is compelled to put the motion at any time when it is made, regardless of anything else.

Mr. SMOOT. There are only about half a dozen Senators in the Chamber, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Johnson	Overman	Simmons
Bryan	Jones	Page	Smith, Ga.
Burton	Kenyon	Perkins	Smoot
Chamberlain	Lane	Pittman	Sterling
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Ransdell	Thornton
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Reed	Vardaman
Culberson	Nelson	Robinson	Walsh
Hitchcock	Norris	Shafroth	West
James	O'Gorman	Shively	White

Mr. PAGE. I dsire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I wish to have this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees,

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. ASHURST, Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. KERN, Mr. OWEN, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names when called.

Mr. TOWNSEND. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] is absent on important business. He is paired on all votes with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

I wish also to announce that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is absent by leave of the Senate and that he is paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

I will also state that the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is unavoidably absent. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. STONE, Mr. BANKHEAD, and Mr. POINDEXTER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 15657.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, having in charge the Alaska coal bill——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. Under the rule the motion is not debatable, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion to proceed to the consideration of a conference report is, under Rule XXVII, not a debatable question. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but as this matter is excluded from the pair, I have a right to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I will withhold my vote for the present, as I notice that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], with whom I have a general pair, is not in the Chamber.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH].

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when Mr. THOMAS's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] by leave of the Senate and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and I ask that this announcement may stand for the day. I now vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], which I transfer to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and vote "yea."

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE], and I vote "yea."

Mr. JAMES. I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Is it too late for me to cast my vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I desire to withdraw my vote and to be counted as present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). In view of the fact that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has voted, having transferred my pair to that Senator, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently, forgetting that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is out of the city. In voting I expressed my preference. I desire to withdraw my vote and to be counted as present for a quorum.

The roll call resulted—yeas 33, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ashurst	James	Pomerene	Thompson
Bankhead	Johnson	Ransdell	Thornton
Brady	Kern	Robinson	Vardaman
Bryan	Lane	Shafroth	West
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	White
Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Williams
Culberson	O'Gorman	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] the yeas are 33 and the nays are 14. Senators CHAMBERLAIN, SMITH of Georgia, and REED being in the Chamber, a quorum is present, and the Chair declares the motion carried, and lays before the Senate the conference report.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the conference report if he will not ask to have it temporarily laid aside until we can dispose of the Alaska coal-leasing bill? In making the request, I base it on these grounds——

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Nevada about how long it will take to dispose of the bill to which he refers?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know of anyone who desires to make a lengthy speech upon the bill.

Mr. LANE. I will say, for the information of the Senator, that while I shall probably not speak lengthily upon the bill, I want to go into the matter, and I wish to offer some amendments to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that there are other amendments which will be offered to the bill and which will have to be discussed, and it will take a little time to do so.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that we have now been nearly three days discussing the Alaskan bill, and it has been discussed quite fully by those who, I believe, take the greatest interest in it. The Senator from Oregon says that he desires to discuss it, but aside from him I do not know of any Senator who desires to discuss the bill at any length. I believe we can finish the bill to-day; I do not think there is any doubt about it at all. Many of the amendments proposed will, I think, be agreed to without objection. Those that I have heard proposed are in the main all good. If we put the consideration of this bill off it means that, when it is again taken up, we shall again go over the entire debate; that the time we have devoted to this bill will be lost. It will not have been a saving of any time to the Senate, but it will have been a loss of time to the Senate. It will mean at least three days' loss of time.

Another thing: I think it is admitted that this leasing bill is an emergency bill. I want to state that it has been supported as an emergency bill by the administration. The bill should either be enacted now or it should be defeated now, so that we may proceed to some other emergency legislation. There is not any doubt that the conditions which bring about the necessity for the bill demand an emergency act of some kind. I do not understand that the trust bill is such an emergency act as is this. We all admit that legislation on the trust question is necessary, but I do not know that it presents such an emergency that it would make any difference whether the conference report was agreed to to-day or next week; and I am inclined to believe that the conference report will not be agreed to before next week anyway. I am perfectly satisfied that, if the policy is persisted in of displacing the Alaskan coal bill after it has proceeded to the length which it has, it will not result in any good toward legislation in this body. I am satisfied that the result of it will be to unnecessarily delay legislation, and not only that, but that it may result in the absolute defeat of the consideration of the bill which this body has agreed to consider, and which has been considered for now three days.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Nevada if, in case the unfinished business should be laid aside until half past 1 o'clock, he thinks the consideration of the Alaskan coal bill can be concluded by that time?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I do not. I think it will require all day. Does the Senator from Texas mean——

Mr. CULBERSON. I mean if the unfinished business, which is the conference report, be laid aside until half past 1 o'clock, which will give two hours for the consideration of the Alaskan coal bill, will that be sufficient?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think not. I think its consideration will require all day.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, several Senators around me insist that, if unanimous consent is requested to postpone the consideration of the conference report until the Alaskan coal bill is disposed of, if it takes more than the day at least, they will object. Under the circumstances I shall not make the request.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the conference report, and I ask my associates on the Judiciary Committee, who are interested in its adoption, whether they can not accord to us to-day. Let us try to pass the Alaskan coal bill to-day and defer consideration of the other matter until to-morrow morning. One day can not possibly make much difference.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Texas that, if he would ask to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside, we might proceed with the Alaskan coal bill and get through with it long before the day is over. If we should not do so and the Senator desires to take up the conference report, I presume a demand for the regular order at any time would bring it before the Senate. I think, however, if we would proceed for a while with the Alaskan coal bill it would probably be disclosed that we could get through with it perhaps before the day is over.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, under the circumstances, and after conferring with Senators around me, I take the responsibility of asking unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, while I dislike very much to be out of accord with my friends who are in charge of this bill, I feel that it is my duty to withhold my consent.

Mr. WALSH. I move, then, that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that the motion of the Senator from Montana is to proceed to the consideration of House bill 14233.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope the Senator from Montana will not make that motion. The Senator has already agreed to proceed to the consideration of the conference report, and it is well understood that those who voted "nay" on that motion did so in the interest of the unfinished business at that time—the Alaskan bill.

Mr. WALSH. I feel that Senators who voted that way voted without any real consideration of the situation which confronts us, and that, the condition being now explained to Senators, they will not withhold their consent to proceeding to-day, if necessary, with the consideration of the Alaskan coal bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14233. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. WHITE. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those in favor of proceeding to the consideration of House bill 14233 will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The motion is agreed to, and the Chair lays before the Senate House bill 14233.

ALASKA COAL LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14233) to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask leave to submit an amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will hasten to conclude the remarks which I had begun on this bill yesterday, because I desire it to come to a vote, and I do not want to be the means of delaying action upon it.

We are confronted by two alternatives with reference to the coal situation in Alaska. We will either have to adopt some such measure as is proposed by this bill or else we will have to leave the coal situation of Alaska in the same condition in which it has been during the last five years, a condition which has given rise to universal complaint. We will have to leave the coal locked up there, unused by people who need it, and at whose doors it is lying, or else we will have to adopt some such measure as this.

There are only two general systems upon which the coal of Alaska can be developed and mined. One of them is by reverting to the old policy of our public-land laws, under which the conveyance of the title to the land out of the hands of the Government was encouraged in every way possible, with no restrictions, the object apparently being to get the land into the hands of private parties; the other is a system such as that proposed by this bill, under which the Government will retain the power to regulate, restrain, and control these resources and to prevent a monopoly of them.

Now, I venture to say—and I think it is a very conservative statement—that it never will be possible to revert to the old system. I do not think that public opinion will allow us to do so; I do not believe that it would be possible to pass such a bill through Congress. So we must adopt some plan of Government control and Government regulation of the operations of the coal mines in Alaska, or they will remain locked up, which is an economic crime, under the circumstances in which the people of that Territory are placed.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that it would be better to lock up the coal mines than to lock up and postpone the possibility of the admission of Alaska as a State for 50 years?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that question is rather vague, and the answer to it would depend a good deal upon the circumstances surrounding the coal mines and surrounding the prospect of the admission of that Territory as a State. It seems to me, however, if the Senator will pardon me, that it is irrelevant. There is nothing in this bill, in my judgment, that would interfere in any way with the admission of the Territory of Alaska as a State.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that with a foreign population in Alaska working in the coal mines, a population having no interest locally in Alaska, but which was transported there simply to find employment for the time being, and with the ownership of those leases in the hands of citizens throughout the other States, the admission of Alaska into the Union will be retarded? Will it be to the interest of the foreign holders, who will be exempt from taxation for 50 years, to admit Alaska as a State? Rather, will it not be to their advantage and to their interest to let conditions remain as they are and to hold that section in its Territorial state, so that the coal property may be exempt from State taxation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, Mr. President, in the first place, in my judgment, the leaseholds of this property will be subject to taxation; and if there is any doubt about that it can be resolved by Congress. They can be made subject to taxation. In the second place, it has been demonstrated by experience that under the system of unconditional grant of these lands the same condition of absentee landlordism which the Senator fears will be foisted upon this Territory. It had actually developed. The entire resources of the Territory were under control of a man who never had been in Alaska, and never has been there; who has resided in New York. His word was law.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, if these leaseholds could be made subject to taxation, would not that increase the price of the coal?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The suggestions of the Senator are so varied that it requires a great deal of mental acrobatics to keep up with them.

Mr. WEST. That was exactly in line with the discussion yesterday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is objecting on one hand to a leasehold because it is not subject to taxation. Then, when we say that it is subject to taxation, he objects to it because it might be subject to taxation, and says it will increase the price of the coal. If you are going to lock up these coal mines because you are afraid there will be some foreigners there working in the mines, of course we will not argue that question with you. You might as well say that all the coal mines in the United States ought to be closed because there are foreigners working in the coal mines. There is not any more prospect of foreigners occupying this industrial field under such a system as proposed in this bill than there is under any other system. That is a matter of the regulation of the immigration laws—whom we will admit to our territory and who can work in mines and who can own mines.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator see that whenever you exempt from taxation United States lands, as the laws of all the States do, you do not give the State and you do not give the Territory the means of maintaining government? Only one-fiftieth of 1 per cent, one five-thousandth part, of Alaska is in private ownership. Can it be possible that one five-hundredth part of the Territory must maintain public schools? Is it possible that you are going to deprive it of its taxable resources of coal? And there will follow the other mineral products also.

It goes to the very fundamental principle that the Federal Government can not undertake this without destroying a State to the extent to which it exempts its public lands from taxation. The Senator says that as a matter of fact you can tax a leasehold estate. There are none of them taxed in the United States. I have heard of private-owned properties being leased, and then the owner pays the tax or else he stipulates that the lessee shall pay it. It is by reason of a contract with the lessee, but there is no power in the State to impose such a tax on United States lands or leases. It would be double taxation if it were imposed upon individual property.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can not understand why, especially on this side of the Chamber——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington is objecting to further interruption.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not understand that the Senator was objecting.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was going to remark that the fact that there is double taxation does not make the taxation unlawful. There is no State in the Union that does not have double taxation, sometimes triple and quadruple taxation. Whether or not that shall be the case is a matter of public policy. There is nothing in the law against double taxation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is not in this bill at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The law of nearly every State in the Union, I apprehend—and I know of a good many of them—provides that property shall be taxed, of every form, every kind, every nature; and a leasehold of this kind is property, of course.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that there is nothing of that kind in this bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There does not have to be anything of that kind in it. It does not deal with the question of taxation at all. It would be irrelevant and not germane to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have never heard of a leasehold estate being taxed in this country.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. I want to say, for the benefit of the Senator from Colorado, that I live in a State where there are 35 counties that produce coal. It is the second coal-producing State in the Union, producing now over 70,000,000 tons of coal a year, with many hundreds of coal companies and coal operators. In that State we have a general provision of our constitution requiring that all property shall be taxed, both real and personal. The point was made in our State by holders of the leasehold that it could not be taxed. It is taxed, however. The supreme court held that it could be taxed, and it is taxed all over that State.

While I am on my feet, if the Senator from Washington will pardon me, the statement was made yesterday that there was really no basis of value for a bond issue upon a leasehold. That was a very surprising statement, in view of our experience in West Virginia. I know of large bond issues that are made solely upon a leasehold as the basis. A man or a company takes a lease upon a tract of land for the purpose of producing coal from it. He generally leases from 800 to 1,500 acres. That would be about the average. The owner of the leasehold puts his improvement upon it. That is taxed. I have in mind one leasehold that sold in the last two years for a million dollars—just the leasehold. The improvement upon the property—the houses and buildings and works, the plant, with the right to mine coal from that leasehold—was sold for $1,000,000 in cash. So it seems to me that our experience has answered both of the suggestions of the Senator from Colorado in that respect.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad, indeed, that the Senator from West Virginia gives us the benefit of those actual experiences in West Virginia; and, of course, the same law and general principles would be applicable in Alaska.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, Mr. President, of course you can tax improvements. There is no question about it in the wide world. The Government has said, however, that some of the coal lands in my State are worth $400 an acre; and I should like to know how, under any principle, you can tax that land that is worth $400 an acre when it belongs to the Government. You can tax the improvements, of course, but that is a mere bagatelle.

Of course you are going to have purchasers when you have machinery there that is worth a million dollars. Persons will buy and pay that for a mine with improvements upon it, because they are principally buying the improvements, and the lease is worth something, too; but when you go to tax all these matters, and you have the land, and you have the coal in the ground, and the coal is worth, according to what the Government says, as high in some instances as $400 an acre in my State, you can not possibly get revenue out of it by virtue of assessing for taxation the land belonging to the Government.

Thus, Mr. President, the result is simply this: Whenever you give to the Federal Government the right to exempt its lands from taxation forever, it means you have the power, then, to annihilate a State. You are depriving the State of the very means of conducting a republican form of government which the Constitution of the United States requires of every State in the Union.

It seems to me that on this side of the Chamber, which is supposed to be anxious to preserve the rights of the States that were not delegated to the Federal Government, there should be at least a strong sentiment against the Federal Government interfering in local affairs and annihilating the power of taxation which exists in the States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator is very hard pressed for arguments against this bill, when he undertakes to place the Territory of Alaska upon the same basis as a State. It is in an entirely different relation to the Union, and an entirely different situation. The argument he is making has been thrashed out, so far as the States of the Union are concerned; and the people of the West, in my judgment—although I know there is some difference of opinion upon the subject—do not agree in the main with the Senator from Colorado. I think they agree with some of the criticisms which he makes of the administration of these laws.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment, if the Senator please. They do not agree, however, that the Federal Government should surrender—and that seems to be the trend of the Senator's argument—all control over, and all power to regulate the natural resources of the public lands, and particularly they would not accept his position as applicable to a Territory.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I just wanted to say at this juncture, in view of the fact that the Senator from Colorado has made, by his remarks, rather a party appeal to his party associates to vote against this bill, that I know of no doctrine of the Democratic Party which opposes the power of the United States to make laws, rules, and regulations for the conduct of Territorial possessions. I have been a Democrat all my life, and I never heard of any such Democratic doctrine at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, we have heard a great many theories in this debate that I think we never heard of before with regard to the title of the Government to its public lands and the power of the Government to administer its trust in the public lands.

Mr. President, something was said on yesterday about the character and value of the coal in the Bering River field, which is the field most accessible, and consequently, in my judgment, the most valuable. I want to read a paragraph on that subject from the report of the Geological Survey:

> The higher-grade bituminous (semibituminous) coals of the Bering River and Matanuska fields are comparable in composition and heating power with the Georges Creek, New River, and Pocahontas coals of the East.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am reading fom Bulletin 442 of the Geological Survey, page 49.

> Many of these beds also include a large amount of slack, which may, however, be utilized under boilers or for making coke. The lower-grade Alaska bituminous coals compare favorably in composition with the coals of Japan, Vancouver Island, Washington, and Australia. This is an important point, as these are the fuels with which the Alaskan coal must come into competition.

In that connection, I ask leave to print as a part of my remarks a tabulated statement of analyses of Alaskan coals from these various fields.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Analyses of Alaska coals.[1]

District and kind of coal.	Moisture.	Volatile matter.	Fixed carbon.	Ash.	Sulphur.
ANTHRACITE.
1. Bering River, average of 7 analyses	7.88	6.15	78.23	7.74	1.30
2. Matanuska River, 1 analysis	2.55	7.08	84.32	6.05	.57

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I referred on yesterday to an amendment which I would offer, directing the Government to open and operate mines for the benefit of the Navy and the Army, with the power of distributing the coal, with the power to sell to the public. I think the latter power is one that was intended by the framers of the bill to be conferred, but I should like to see it made specific. In addition to that, I shall offer an amendment, to which I want to refer briefly now, stating only the nature of it, specifying the conditions under which labor shall be employed in these mines, both in the Government mines and in the leased mines, prohibiting child labor, authorizing the Government to fix reasonable rules and regulations as to the place of employment, and providing for compensation of injured employes by their employers, whoever may be operating the mines, to be attached as a condition to the lease. I shall offer another amendment—and I have some hope that it will be accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill—prohibiting any combination or restraint of trade with reference to these mines, and enjoining in comprehensive terms—the same terms, in fact, that were employed in the original law—any monopoly of coal mines in this Territory.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall take but just about 10 minutes of the Senate's time to refer to the present situation of sugar.

Last year the Democratic Party enacted a law reducing our import duties. "Let us buy in the cheapest markets in the world" was their slogan. They predicted unprecedented prosperity and a general reduction in the high cost of living in this country through the passage of the Underwood bill. The Democratic leaders in Congress singled out sugar as the one food commodity that should be subjected to absolute free trade. It mattered not that at the time the Democratic tariff bill was passed the American consumers were purchasing their sugar cheaper than it could be purchased in any other country in the world, with the exception of Great Britain. The fact that sugar constituted only 5 per cent of the total food necessities of the American family and that in the last decade the retail price of all food commodities, with the exception of sugar, had increased an average of 80 per cent, while the price of sugar had decreased nearly 6 per cent, was eliminated in their consideration of the sugar schedule of the tariff law.

Mr. President, sugar is a striking illustration of the great blunder which the Democratic Party committed in its passage of the tariff law of 1913. Under this law the tariff duty on imported sugar was reduced 25 per cent, and this commodity will automatically be placed on the free list on May 1, 1916. I will not dwell upon the effect of this law on the domestic sugar industry further than to say that 10 of our American sugar-beet factories have closed their doors since its passage. That the price of sugar to the consumer was not reduced by the 25 per cent reduction in the tariff rates is clearly borne out by authoritative statistics, for, as a matter of fact, for 10 weeks prior to the outbreak of the war in Europe, when normal conditions existed in the sugar market, the retail price of sugar was from one-fifth to one-third of a cent per pound higher than it was for eight weeks before the 25 per cent reduction became effective, and during all this time the profits of the sugar refineries had increased about the same amount that the duty was decreased.

But, Mr. President, I especially desire to direct the attention of the Senate and of the country to the enormous burden which has been placed upon the American people through a combination of events, the outbreak of war in Europe and our dependence upon foreign countries for a large part of our sugar supply, which constitutes one-fifth of the world's production.

I have predicted on the floor of this Senate that some day there would be a great armed conflict in Europe, with a resultant shortage of the sugar crop on that Continent, and that our only hope of escaping the exorbitantly high price of sugar, which would be brought about in the world's markets by reason of such shortage, would be to encourage and protect the domestic sugar industry until we produced under the American flag all of the sugar which we annually consume. My prediction has been realized, but God knows I did not expect the blow to fall so soon.

Think, Mr. President, of the great financial burden which the American people are bearing to-day because we are not producing at home a great food necessity which we easily can produce under a safe and sane fiscal policy. Owing to the war in Europe, the wholesale price of sugar in the world has increased at least 3 cents per pound since the 1st of August. On our annual consumption of 4,000,000 tons this means an increased burden on the American people of $240,000,000. How long the present European conflict will continue it is impossible to forecast, but even though peace be brought about within the next two months, the present high price of sugar undoubtedly will continue to prevail for at least another year, and the enormous sum of $480,000,000 will be added to the sugar bill of the American consumer.

A beet-sugar factory with a daily slicing capacity of 500 tons can be erected in this country for approximately $500,000. With the additional $480,000,000 which the American people will be required to pay above the normal price of the sugar they consume in two years 960 beet-sugar factories could be erected, with an output of 6,500,000 tons of sugar; thus it will be seen that the increased cost of sugar to the American people for one year alone would be ample to build a sufficient number of sugar factories to produce all the sugar, with the quantity we are at present producing, to supply our entire consumption.

It is claimed that the purchase by Great Britain of some 50,000 tons of sugar in the New York market in August last forced the price in this country up 2 cents a pound. Mr. President, if the Government had adopted a fixed and stable tariff policy in regard to the domestic sugar industry; if the men who have invested or contemplated investing their capital in the beet-sugar industry could have been assured 10 or 12 years ago that their investment was safe and that they would not be thrown into competition with the low-wage product of Europe and the Tropics, we could have sold to Great Britain this 50,000 tons and much more without increasing the domestic price of that commodity. If those interested in the beet-sugar industry could now be assured of a stable tariff policy as regards sugar for a sufficient length of time, even with the existing rate of 1 cent per pound, the time would come in the not distant future when we would produce enough sugar at home for our entire needs. In this case, with the United States independent of the world's markets, the price of sugar to the consumer would never be more than 4½ or 5 cents a pound. Naturally, as the industry grows and the manufacturers are able to inaugurate economies in the cost of manufacture, the cost of production will decrease, and thus the price to the consumer will decrease.

The Democratic biennial threats and the insistent demand of the sugar refineries for free sugar have prevented capital, always more or less timid, from flowing into the industry as it would have flowed if it could have been assured of proper protection against the cheap-labor product of foreign countries. And because of this lack of a definite policy on the part of our Government the American people will be filched of $480,000,000 within two years—an enormous price to pay for the lack of wise statesmanship. I imagine I can hear my Democratic friend saying "War does not come very often, and war alone can bring about such a deplorable condition as exists to-day." But, Mr. President, "forewarned is forearmed." We had our warning in 1911, when a shortage of something over a million tons in the European sugar crop sent the price of sugar up 2½ cents per pound in this country. The effect of our domestic beet-sugar industry was felt when the beet crop came onto the market in October of that year and forced the price of sugar down 1¾ cents per pound in 10 weeks. But this warning was not heeded. The Democrats have passed a law which in two years will entirely destroy our home production of sugar and make this country even more dependent upon foreign nations for this great food commodity.

The United States is a country of almost limitless resources. There is hardly any staple commodity we consume which can not be produced within our own borders, and it is a significant fact that those commodities of which we produce enough to supply our consumption have risen little, if any, in price since the outbreak of the war in Europe. The Agricultural Department states in Farmers' Bulletin 620 that "on September 1 the index figure of crop prices was about 3.7 per cent higher than a year ago." These commodities include cereals, potatoes, cotton, and so forth, all of which are produced in sufficient quantities for home consumption and export.

But with sugar, Mr. President, it is different. Because we are not producing a sufficient supply of this commodity for our home consumption the American people are to-day paying prices nearly 100 per cent higher than we paid before the outbreak of war. When will this blundering and un-American policy cease?

Scarcely 50 per cent of our present sugar requirements is now grown under the American flag. A little over 40 per cent comes from Cuba, while less than 10 per cent is furnished by other foreign countries. A shortage in the sugar production of the world often happens, and from many causes.

Let us stop and think a moment what it would mean to this country if a protracted revolution should break out in Cuba or a severe drought should occur on that island. The United States would be cut off from the source of nearly one-half of its sugar supply, and we would find ourselves in the same predicament in which Great Britain finds herself to-day—cut off from the source of nearly 75 per cent of her sugar supply, which she derives from continental Europe. We would be compelled, as Great Britain is compelled at the present time, to engage in a competitive fight in the world's markets for our sugar, with the same results that are being experienced to-day—an inordinate increase in sugar prices.

The Agricultural Department states that a total of 2,000,000 acres planted to sugar beets would free this country from dependence upon foreign sugar. Think of it, Mr. President, but 2,000,000 acres! Why, the 16 or 17 States which now produce sugar beets contain more than 2,000,000 farms and 278,000,000 acres of improved lands.

If one farmer in four in these States were to plant a 3-acre tract to sugar beets, it would be unnecessary for us to buy foreign sugar. About two-thirds of 1 per cent of the improved land in this area is all that we would require to cease buying sugar abroad. More than that area lies absolutely idle every year. Colorado, Idaho, California, Montana, and Utah not only could supply all of this sugar, but the increase in our consumption for the next 20 years. The diverting of 2,000,000 acres of land to sugar-beet culture would not be felt in the production of other crops; in fact, the experience of sugar-beet growers, both in this country and in Europe, demonstrates that by rotating sugar beets with cereal crops the yield per acre of the latter is increased from 50 to 100 per cent, so that the total yield of grain would be increased rather than diminished by devoting this area to sugar-beet culture.

Mr. President, let the present condition of the sugar market be a lesson to us. I suggest to my Democratic colleagues that, instead of placing sugar on the free list in 1916 and by so doing reduce our home production of sugar 700,000 tons, the domestic-beet and cane-sugar industries be encouraged and protected; that they be allowed to expand until we have reached that fortunate position of producing all of our sugar at home, a condition which the present exigency proves to be so very highly desirable.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in relation to this bill, which proposes to lease the coal lands of Alaska, I want to say that having had some experience with the leasing system I question very much whether the Government or the people of Alaska will secure good results from it. I have no doubt that the bill is put in here in good faith, and that it is intended to relieve a condition which exists in Alaska at this time, whereby the people of that Territory, the pioneers, the miners, the farmers, and the other people in that country who are trying to make a living from its resources are deprived of the coal which in some districts they need badly.

There are some parts of Alaska where there is but little timber. In fact there are certain portions of that country where the people have to burn willow brush the largest sized twig of which they can secure in the country for hundreds of miles will be no larger than your thumb, and it has to be dried out before it can be burned. So you can understand the difficulty they have securing enough fuel with which to cook their food. That condition does not prevail down near the southern coast country. There is plenty of timber there, plenty of fuel, and at the same time there are large deposits of what is said to be excellent coal. I do not know from personal knowledge, but it is said that that coal is equal in quality to the best coals of Pennsylvania. The people there should be allowed to use it to the extent that they need it. At the same time I think it should be guarded in such a manner that they will not lose control of it or that it will not be mined or disposed of in a way in which the people will have to pay excessive prices for it.

It does not seem to me that a system of leasing provides the remedy. The people of Alaska and the people of the Pacific coast would like, if they had their wish, that the Government itself, which intends to build a railroad in there, should mine that coal and sell it at cost. I notice that one of the distinguished Senators here shakes his head in dissent. Yet the Senator knows just as well as I do that the Government undertakes many things in his State and all over the country, and is paternalistic in some things, and is getting to be more so all the time. We make the improvement of harbors and rivers, and the Senator does not protest against them nor consider it to be an invasion of State rights when we go down into his country with large-sized appropriations to open up rivers and harbors. He considers that to be a very proper method of carrying on business, and it does not hurt his pride in State rights a little bit. But the minute we start off to do something else equally important for another community, very vitally important to it, he shakes his head in a most sad way in negation. It pains me very much to see how my friend can entertain such entirely different views on the questions involving the same principles.

Mr. WEST. The two cases are not at all parallel.

Mr. LANE. They are not exactly alike, for in one case the Government gives the money for waterways in your State and in mine and in other States of the Union, and in this case I am trying to provide fuel with which the people may cook their food and keep warm. It comes nearer to the well-being of every human being to keep warm in winter, to keep from freezing to death, and is more important than to have improvements elsewhere by which to carry commerce.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. I should like to interrupt the Senator to say that I am fearful if Congress permitted the Government to go into the business of supplying coal in that Territory it would pay higher for it than if it gave individuals or corporations an opportunity to go into it; that is, if the Government got cost for it.

Mr. LANE. There is a difference of opinion in regard to that. I am of opinion that the Government could mine it just as cheaply as anyone else and dispose of it without loss and without any attempt to make profit. The private individual in carrying on mining or any other business is naturally interested in securing the greatest amount of profit which he can obtain for himself in carrying it on. I am not going into that subject.

What I wished to call attention to was in relation to leasing. I have seen that method of business carried on in connection with mining—not coal mining, but gold mining—for a great many years of my lifetime, and I have never known it to be successfully entered into. It is a wasteful method, and I will tell you why. You lease a certain tract of land to a man for a certain number of years at a certain rental. It is sometimes called a "lay"; that is, a temporary lease. You can make it for as long a term as you want; it does not matter. There is every inducement for the lessee to make as much money out of such a mining proposition as he can for himself. There is no inducement for him to care for the future of the property, to look out for its ultimate welfare. So, in miners' parlance, he "guts" the mine; that is, he finds out where the richest streak lies, and he concentrates his efforts upon it. The other ore, the cheap ground, which should be kept in shape for future mining, is neglected, for the reason that perhaps it will not pay so well, it being the lean streak. He avoids that, leaves it to be removed and mined later by some one else, whereas, if properly mined, the rich streak would carry it along at a fair profit. He, in his attempt to secure the most possible profit in a limited period of time, reaches out only for the richest part of the deposit. It is very natural for him to do that. It is so natural that it is done in every instance I have ever seen.

There is another thing about leasing for a fixed period. It is this: If the lessee has a limited period—this bill gives 50 years—for the first half of the time he will keep the mine in shape, the facing, the timbering, so that it will last through the time in which he is going to operate the mine. During the latter part of his lease he begins to neglect it. His lease is up at a certain time, and there is no inducement for him, or it would be a loss, in fact, to properly timber the mine and keep it in shape.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I am ignorant about this matter. Could not the Government, acting through the Interior Department, prescribe conditions under which the work should be done?

Mr. BORAH. I wish the Senator from Georgia would speak a little louder.

Mr. LANE. The Senator from Georgia inquires if the Government could not provide a method of inspection and permits. I will come to that later. I will not be too long.

Now, in relation to this lessee and the shape that he leaves the leased ground, as I said, he proceeds to gut it, and during the last half of his leased time, in the ebb of the time of his lease, he begins to neglect to keep the property up on a sound workable footing.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator, it seems to me, ought to know that, of course, a private individual who would have coal land worth two hundred or five hundred or a thousand dollars an acre would not lease such land to a tenant if it were possible for the tenant in a few years to destroy the property, and what a private individual can do to protect his fee the Government can do with its tenants.

I could say the most of the coal in West Virginia is mined under the leasing system. A man has a fine tract of coal land, five hundred or a thousand acres, leased out. He can protect himself by covenants in the lease. He can require that his engineer shall map out the way in which it shall be mined. He will provide that it shall be timbered in a certain way and that if the lessee fails to do it he shall forfeit the lease. He can provide for daily or weekly or monthly inspection to see that it is mined in a particular way. Otherwise he would not lease it.

I take it, Mr. President, that where a private individual owning valuable coal lands in Pennsylvania or in West Virginia can protect himself against improvident lessees, then by the same rules and the same regulations the Government can protect itself against improvident lessees.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. My observation and my information in regard to the leasing system of West Virginia and those places is that it is a most wasteful method of working mines.

Mr. CHILTON. It may have been at one time, but as the coal gets more valuable that is not the fact.

Mr. BORAH. That was not, however, what I wanted to ask the Senator.

Mr. CHILTON. It is not the fact at all.

Mr. BORAH. If the Government can as a private individual protect itself under the leasing system by careful supervision——

Mr. CHILTON. By a covenant in the contract?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; if the Government can do those things why can not the Government go a single step farther and eliminate the middelman, who has to make profit, and so forth, and work the mines itself?

Mr. CHILTON. I did not get up to answer questions. I arose to make the statement I made. That is the Senator's own question, and he can answer it.

Mr. BORAH. I have already answered it, but I wanted the experience and the wisdom of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CHILTON. The government of West Virginia does not mine any coal. I can say that I have no experience in that line.

Mr. BORAH. Have there ever been any symptoms shown there that the State might desire to mine its own coal?

Mr. CHILTON. The State has not any coal to mine.

Mr. BORAH. It has parted with all its coal?

Mr. CHILTON. The State of West Virginia has not had any coal land since it ceased to be a part of Virginia. The State of Virginia conveyed it in trust to the Federal Government in 1794, and created that great trust for the benefit of the Government and some other States, and the United States Government has never been fair enough to settle that trust and give an accounting of the trust subject. Of that I will talk to the Senate later, at a more opportune time. At one time it did own a vast area now composing the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and a part of Michigan, and it made the United States Government a trustee to hold that as a sacred trust, not implied but expressed upon the face of the grant, clearly stating what the trust should be, and that it should be for no other purpose. I have been dingdonging the Judiciary Committee, and sometimes the Senate of the United States, to allow those States the poor privilege of suing in the Supreme Court of the United States to get back a part of that trust fund which the United States Government has given away and squandered, and which it will not settle for. That question, however, is not involved here. If the State of West Virginia had its rights, it might have some coal land to lease and some money with which to carry on its government and not have to tax its people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a moment. I regret to hear the Senator from West Virginia say that the United States Government as a trustee has given away and squandered this great wealth, when we are preparing here to turn over to the United States the opportunity to again do the same thing.

Mr. CHILTON. No; Mr. President. If the United States, when it had the Northwest Territory, had leased its great mining deposits and had kept that trust subject as the Government is proposing to do now with Alaska, the Government of the United States would now have billions in its Treasury, and the States, the cestui que trustent, would have a vast sum that would relieve every one of them from taxation for a long time. I think the United States ought to discover, by the leasing system, what it has in Alaska before it gives away the land or sells it out to Tom, Dick, and Harry. Alaska is not a State with obligations or debts, but is a Territory that belongs to the United States, and my theory is that the United States ought to ascertain what it has; it ought to get an estimate of its value and keep that great treasure up there for the benefit of all the people. If it had done so with the Northwest Territory, it would not now be in the position before the world of a defaulting trustee, who will not account to those who are entitled to the trust, and it would be much wealthier besides.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I should be very glad to ask the Senator from West Virginia if he does not take too narrow a view of this situation? If the Federal Government would have had billions in its Treasury by retaining the coal in West Virginia, and by that means also have enriched the State of West Virginia, really would not the United States Government have had many billions if it had retained all the agricultural lands in that way and operated those lands under a leasehold system?

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon, who is very patient and courteous to us all, will permit, I will answer the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I am very much surprised that anyone on this floor would intimate that the United States Government owned any part of West Virginia. West Virginia and Virginia until 1863 were together. Virginia was organized as a colony long before the United States was formed; it took a most prominent part in organizing the United States Government, and before that Government was organized it dedicated and gave under a certain trust a vast territory to the United States Government. The United States Government never owned an inch of land within the confines of either Virginia or West Virginia any more than it ever owned any in the colony of Massachusetts.

As to the other suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, I may take a narrow view of this question, but I hope I do not, as I do not intend ever to take a narrow view of anything. I always want to take a just view.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. With the further consent of the Senator from Oregon, I wish to say that I was inapt in expression when I spoke of the Federal Government having any title to the lands in West Virginia. I of course knew better than that; but I understood the Senator from West Virginia to say that the Federal Government by its failure to exercise justly and fairly its powers as trustee over those lands had greatly wronged the State of West Virginia.

Mr. CHILTON. That is true.

Mr. WHITE. It must be true, then, that the Federal Government did have some interest as trustee or otherwise; but what I had reference especially to was its absolute ownership of the Northwest Territory, the title of which was conferred upon it by the State of Virginia. If to have retained control and to have exercised its proper duty as trustee it would have enriched the State of West Virginia by retaining the coal mines of that State, would it not also have greatly enriched itself and the Northwest by withholding agricultural lands from entry and farming them for the benefit of the Federal Government and for the benefit of the States that were created, and leasing them out, as the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] suggests? Is not the principle the same, and is not the loss to the Federal Government and to the States now composed of that territory a great deal more by the failure to hold the Northwest Territory than the loss has been by the failure of the Federal Government to pursue and exercise the duties as trustee imposed upon it with reference to the coal lands of West Virginia?

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I was saying that during the latter period of the lease the lessee is, in justice to himself, compelled to neglect to keep the timbering of the mine in proper condition. He then has a diminishing period before him in which to make profit from his adventure. Necessarily he neglects everything but the one object, which is to follow the fattest "pay streak" to the ultimate limit and to timber the mine just as scantily as he can in order to preserve life and accomplish his aim of getting out the mineral for which he is searching. He does not timber for permanent results, for safety, or for the future of the mine.

Any of you who have ever been in a mining country and have gone into the drifts, as they call them there—the tunnels—upon a piece of land which has been mined by a lessee, knows that in going through those drifts with your candle in your hand you also take your life in your hands. A miner has to be a hardy man who will go through those tunnels and prospect such a mine so as to tell you what the condition is for a future purchaser or what should be done to it to put it again in shape for mining. I have seen mines left in such a condition that when they came back into the possession of the owner he had to face them all up and abandon large bodies of good ore which had been overlooked by the lessee. In many cases the owner was compelled to spend, in putting his mine in shape to operate it, three times more than the sum he had received from the rental under the lease.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, while the Senator is on that subject I should like to make a suggestion to him, with his consent.

Mr. LANE. Very well. I do not promise that I will accept the suggestion, but I will listen to it.

Mr. WHITE. Not only is it true that the bad conditions inside the mine to which the Senator from Oregon has referred result from the leasing system, but is it not true also that if the mines are not properly taken care of the surface will cave and great injury will result to the public by reason of the condition in which the surface is left?

Mr. LANE. I will say to the Senator that that may be true, but it does not often happen that way in placer gold mining and in other mining operations in that section, for the reason that the country is different.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I was wonderfully struck with a remark which dropped from the lips of our genial friend the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. He said, "As coal gets more valuable." That is the whole thing. Coal is constantly getting more valuable. That is all we are arguing about. If coal were not of any value, we would not worry our souls about it; but its value in heat and gas units will remain the same throughout all time. The condition, however, also remains—and you can not argue it away—that in the very nature of things the quantity of coal can not be increased. The amount of coal in the ground may remain there for a thousand years without perceptible increase, but the demand for it will continually increase, and as our population multiplies our necessities will make it more and more needful, and hence more valuable. In the nature of things this must continue, and hence I feel it to be our duty to enact such legislation as shall inure to the benefit of the people.

Our friends talk continually of "the people"; but, in the name of heaven, how do the people get the benefit? The coal has got to pass through the mill and through the various methods which the owners or lessees of the coal mines and the leased coal lands may adopt. When we were conducting an investigation in the beautiful and glorious State of West Virginia we extracted from Mr. Pratt some horrid testimony. I remember I asked him, "Mr. Pratt, do you live in West Virginia?" He replied, "Oh, no." I said, "Where do you live?" He responded, "I live in Brooklyn, N. Y." "Well, how large a tract do you own in West Virginia?" He replied, "Oh, I do not just know; but I have 15 miles one way and 20 miles the other way." It was so large that when the parties who had the lease said to a man, "Get off my territory," it was equivalent to saying to him, "Get off the earth," for the tract, as I have said, was 15 miles one way and 20 miles the other. Then I said to him, "Mr. Pratt, you own this land; of course, with your tremendous ownership, you feel impressed with the fact that you are a guardian, so to speak. A great population have settled here; they have great interests here; and you feel yourself a guardian, do you not?" "Well, no; not exactly," he said. I then asked him, "Do you not feel zealous as to the well-being and as to the needs, moral and physical, of this great population who are digging in the bowels of the earth to bring this great product out?" He replied, "Oh, not particularly. So long as I get my dividends, I do not pay much attention to or care much for the rest."

After that expression I said to myself, and I think everybody else felt it, "By the Eternal God, I will never vote to continue such a nefarious system under which a man may own and control in his own hands and under his purse a stretch of territory 15 miles one way by 20 miles another way, live in luxury in Brooklyn, N. Y., and salve his conscience and satisfy his higher thoughts with occasionally doling out a sum to the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, to help some poor girl learn threadwork or needlework."

I say, that is the evil. The benefits do not reach the people; and I feel that it is a part of good legislation, I feel that it is a part of broad-minded, big patriotism, so to legislate that the benefits will accrue to the people.

The Senator from Alabama asks if the situation in regard to coal is not the same as that in regard to wheat. I say to him that it is entirely different. Wheat will grow almost anywhere under God's sunshine on our soil; but, in God's wisdom, coal has been pocketed up, bound up in strata far beneath the surface of the earth; it demands extraordinary labor and extraordinary effort to get it out; it is a prime necessity with us to-day; we need it for the cooking of our food; we need it for the heating of our bodies so as to protect them against the rigors of winter; and we need it in our manufacturing and in the arts. It can not be compared with wheat.

I will say to my friend from Alabama that, with all the wonderful results which have been accomplished in the vicinity of his home at Birmingham, Ala., with the riches with which that section of the country has been blessed, it is uncanny and unfair that, instead of those resources of nature inuring to the profit and happiness of the whole people, the fabulous wealth of Alabama should have accrued to the benefit of a few.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Senator from New Jersey must have misunderstood me in some way. I never in my life compared wheat with coal.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator referred to other fields or other products, did he not? He inquired why not take other products and treat them in the same way?

Mr. WHITE. I was asking the Senator from West Virginia whether, if to operate a coal mine was a good thing for the Government, it would not be a good thing to operate farms.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Of course, I know the Senator was trying to bring into disrepute the idea of the Government operating coal mines.

Mr. WHITE. I was trying to bring into disrepute the operation of farms and every other kind of business by the Government.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, the Senator will fail signally in his effort. Make up your mind, Mr. President, that the world is moving. We have stood still too long; the world is moving; and enlightened public intelligence will not tolerate these fabulous sums, wrung out of the masses of the people, inuring to the benefit of the few; but some day they will demand of you through legislation, and, if not through legislation, by some other means which I fear to express, results that will not be pleasing to any of us.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, one word further. I was discussing with the Senator from West Virginia the question of the Government leasing out its land. That was the question up for consideration.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have no apologies to make for anything I have said, but I regret if I have trenched upon the Senator or accused him of things of which he is not guilty.

Mr. WHITE. I have as much sympathy for the men who delve in the bowels of the earth to make their living by digging coal as has my distinguished friend the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I realize that, Mr. President. Great God, it is not in me to charge the Senator with a lack of sympathy for the masses of the people. I believe God gave the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from West Virginia that sympathy, even though the Senator from West Virginia does live in a State which was unconstitutionally formed. I remember the time very well. I pardon you for all that; of course you can not help it, and I think you are just as broad, just as great, and just as Christianlike as any other Member of the Senate of the United States; but, unfortunately, you have lived in an atmosphere, it seems to me, that has been largely that of greed. Some people seem to forget, in contemplating the beautiful hills and the glories of the magnificent Commonwealths of West Virginia and Alabama, which are groaning on all sides with undeveloped wealth in gas, oil, coal, iron, and almost everything else—they seem to forget that there is another side, the side of humanity, suffering the dire pangs of distress and want. I speak earnestly, and I have no quarrel, God knows, with any man in the world; but I want to do my little best to relieve the situation. I believe one of the curses of our times has been the ownership and control of fabulous deposits of mineral wealth by a handful of men for their own profit and their own glory.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I was taking the position I did and saying what I said with no other view in the world than to secure to the settlers of Alaska the right to enter 160-acre tracts of land and own those tracts themselves, instead of binding and tying up the land for 50 years by a leasing system, in order that citizens of other States and citizens of foreign nations might exploit that country.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am quite willing that they should exploit it for agricultural purposes; but I say coal is unlike agricultural products and the like, and I believe the mining rights are reserved by our Goverament when they sell or cede these tracts.

After the experience of Colorado and the sad experience of West Virginia—which, I am happy to say, is now quite peacefully and amicably settled—I say, in God's name, do not let the Senate advance the idea of a further leasehold system. Do not let us plant it or transplant it or establish it in Alaska. God knows we have had quite enough of it in Colorado. The President of the United States has seen fit to try to intercede to placate the troubles there with the miners. The miners have finally agreed to arbitration; but this other interest, the parties that own it, the great Rockefeller family, through Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., who claims to be the manager of that particular tract, sees no particular reason for arbitration, and in his conscience he can not think of arbitrating the situation.

Could you have seen the sad faces and woebegone looks of some of these poor, unfortunate miners and their wives and children from the Colorado mines who came to me, I believe your heart would be touched and your tears would overflow down your cheeks.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the big-hearted Senator from New Jersey saw West Virginia with its worst face turned to the world, in a very unfortunate time, and that has impressed him so that it has gotten the better of his judgment and prevents him from taking cognizance of well-known facts.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Not a bit.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I do not want to harrow the Senator, but——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, you can not worry me to save your life.

Mr. CHILTON. But the world will laugh when a Senator from New Jersey talks about anybody from West Virginia being obsessed with greed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I did not want to say just how, but——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey has had his chance. The Senator from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, a State that sends out to the world corporations which are admitted to be outlaws by the State itself, that go out to prey upon the commerce not only of all the other 47 States but upon the commerce of the world, and that can do business everywhere except in the State of New Jersey, and a State that lives and moves and has its being by money collected from those corporations, ought not to talk about greed anywhere.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just one moment right there?

Mr. CHILTON. No; I have not the floor, except by the courtesy of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will not interfere with the Senator at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey will take his seat.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can do that, too.

Mr. CHILTON. I can not possibly yield, because I am speaking in the time of some one else.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. CHILTON. New Jersey is not wholly to be blamed for the condition which I have mentioned, nor is the Senator. Just to show how circumscribed is the view taken of the great State of West Virginia by the Senator from New Jersey, I want to say to him that the people who own the tract of land on Paint Creek that he is speaking of have within the last few years sold 30,000 acres of land to citizens of West Virginia for $20 or $30 an acre—coal land and timberland combined.

I do not want to do anybody an injustice, and I do not want to see anyone done an injustice here or elsewhere. A few years ago West Virginia was going into the markets of the world, and was inviting the people from other States to come there and develop her coal lands. These men mentioned by the Senator came there and bought land. The reason that induced them to do it, I happen to know, is that a citizen of West Virginia—a very prominent citizen, who is now one of the leaders of the great Bull Moose movement in that State, a very wealthy man now, but who was then a poor man—went to school with Mr. Pratt and some others at one of the northern colleges, and through that acquaintance he got them to come down into West Virginia and invest in coal lands. What they have done with it is not my business; but they came there honorably, lawfully, and, at the invitation of the people, to help develop the State.

Mr. President, the Senator does not know that there is absolute competition among the coal people of West Virginia. There is no such thing as a coal trust in that State. The hundreds and the thousands of coal operators in that State have been for seven or eight years working under most terrible conditions regarding markets. They are farther from the eastern and the western markets than some of their competitors, and there were years when no coal operator in that State made much, if any, money. Now our conditions are getting better; and when I said "as the coal lands improved in value" I meant when market conditions got better.

Why, Mr. President, if the coal mines of West Virginia would run full time, instead of producing 70,000,000 tons of coal, we could produce 150,000,000 tons of coal a year from that State; and we have barely scratched the great coal area that we have from which to produce coal.

Now, just a little further. The Senator talks about a great monopoly there. That coal works of which he spoke is in Kanawha County. The production of the county of Kanawha is third or fourth in the State. The largest production in the State is in McDowell County. It produces from 11,000,000 to 15,000,000 tons of coal. The next is the county of Fayette, which produces something less. The next, I think, is now the county of Kanawha. It is third, as I recall the facts. What the Senator is talking about is a small part of the production in the third county in production in the State. If you take the whole production of the Paint Creek region that he is talking about, it is not half the production of the Cabin Creek region, and the production of Cabin Creek and Paint Creek combined is not more than about one-half what Kanawha County produces; and the production of all Kanawha County is only a very small percentage of the production of the greater field, and that field produces only a fair percentage of the coal produced in the whole State.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator can not call that any great trust.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, well, I am not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield for just a moment?

Mr. CHILTON. I have not any right to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Chair for just one moment? It is not a pleasant duty for the Chair to call attention to the observance of the rules governing debate. No rule of this body is more frequently violated than Rule XIX, which seems the simplest, most graceful, and at the same time one of the most important in the book. It reads:

When a Senator desires to speak he shall rise and address the presiding officer, and shall not proceed until he is recognized.

A little farther on it says:

No Senator shall interrupt another Senator in debate without his consent, and to obtain such consent he shall first address the presiding officer.

The consent of a Senator to interrupt is not obtained by a Senator rising and saying "Mr. President," and then straightway turning his back on the Chair and proceeding to discuss the question or interrupting the Senator who has the floor. This occurrence is taking place every day in the Senate of the United States. It leads to confusion and to the talking of two or three Senators at the same time. It is not a matter of any moment to the occupant of the chair, but the official reporters of the Senate are wholly unable to take the proceedings of the Senate when they are conducted in this manner, and they can not make an intelligent record of the interruptions or of the speeches. There have been very frequent interruptions when Senators, without any reference to the Chair and without any regard to the Senator who had the floor, have risen and proceeded to talk on the floor.

This is not a matter of any interest to the presiding officer, except to have the proceedings of the Senate conducted in an orderly and respectful way. The presiding officer has no more regard for one Senator than for another, but he does have some little regard for the official reporters, who are doing their level best to take the proceedings of the United States Senate.

The Chair for weeks has been considering the necessity of calling attention to the violation of these rules, so that Senators who are not knowingly or intentionally violating them may comply with the rules, and that the record may be properly made up by the reporters.

The Chair has no personal feeling about the matter and has no animosity against any Senator for anything that has occurred, but requests that there may be some slight attention paid to the method of conducting debate upon the floor of the United States Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Now, Mr. President, most respectfully, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LANE. I do, if the Senator from West Virginia has finished.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I had nothing further in the world to say. I was speaking in the time of the Senator from Oregon, who has been most courteous and kind; but the Senator from New Jersey keeps constantly harping upon West Virginia and her coal situation. Now, that situation is all right. She can take care of herself anywhere she may be assaulted. She is doing nothing wrong and her people are doing nothing wrong. About the only thing she has which nags her is a supreme court that does not always announce the law, and that fact is constantly offending the sensibilities of our people, as it has offended the sensibilities of the people of the United States in the matter of the military trials. When we get that matter corrected, West Virginia will go along and take care of herself.

There is no need of any Senator holding up West Virginia as an example, especially a Senator from the State of New Jersey. As long as I can in a proper way get the right to speak on this floor, I intend to answer that kind of an assault upon West Virginia. It is out of place, and it should not be done upon this floor. Whenever it is done I shall have to take care of that State, and I shall do it with a great deal of pleasure.

I want now to thank the Chair for his courtesy and to thank the Senator from Oregon for his great patience.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must again call attention to another rule, Rule XIX, section 3, which provides:

No Senator in debate shall refer offensively to any State of the Union.

Mr. BRYAN. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRYAN. I object to the Senator from Oregon yielding for a speech by any other Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am not asking to make a speech. I am just asking——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A ruling was recently made, when the present occupant of the chair was not here, which the present occupant of the chair believes to be a correct ruling. The Chair believes that a Senator occupying the floor can not farm out the floor by permitting Senators to interrupt him and make speeches without unanimous consent of the Senate, because it is the right of the Senator who can first get the eye of the Chair, if the Chair happens to be looking at him, to address the Senate. Therefore, if it is insisted upon, the rule will be enforced that no Senator occupying the floor can yield for an interruption without unanimous consent, except for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. BRYAN. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I yielded in each case out of courtesy to other Senators, assuming that they had some information to impart, either to the Senate or to myself, or some inquiry to make. It was not for the purpose of dividing my time, nor prolonging the debate, nor to farm out my time, nor even to lease it out for a definite term, for that matter.

I notice, however, that that rule is more honored in the breach than in the observance, and I have noticed that considerably right lately. If that rule is going to be insisted on in one case, I would love to see it carried right down the line; and whereas I may have inadvertently granted too much liberty to other Senators, if the rule is to be applied and other Senators want that rule well adhered to, I think I can arrange it so as to make it exceedingly entertaining.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I rise, then, to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I object to that.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator has no right to object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has the floor. If he chooses to yield——

Mr. LANE. I have no objection to the Senator from New Jersey rising to a question of personal privilege——

Mr. BRYAN. I object.

Mr. LANE (continuing). Unless it is against the rules. If it is against the rules, I do not wish to be a party to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with the decision which the Senate of the United States made, and which the present occupant of the chair did not make, if the Senator from Oregon yields to the Senator from New Jersey he yields the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not want to ask the Senator to yield the floor. I simply rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Oregon yields to the Senator from New Jersey he yields the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will not ask the Senator to do that. I was simply asking for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Oregon yields to the Senator from New Jersey he yields the floor. The Chair would like to know whether he does so or not.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will not ask for it, then. I do not want to take the Senator off his feet. He is preaching too true a gospel for me to take him off his feet.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I am sorry that this discussion of the question of leasing coal lands in Alaska has brought on so unpleasant a parliamentary situation. What I was addressing myself to, or what I was trying to address myself to, was the fact that I consider—and that is my personal opinion, founded on my personal experience, and it has to go for what it is worth—that it is not only wasteful but also, in my opinion, offers an incentive to the lessee to loot the most valuable portion of the coal from the mines; that a private owner would work it to better advantage so far as the mine is concerned, and, if he were fair in his prices to the public, it would be better equally for the public.

I have in mind the fact that the Government now leases hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of acres of land of which it is the guardian, and in no instance that I know of has it leased them to advantage. In every instance in which my attention has been directed to them—and in some cases it has been, in detail—they are handled in the most grossly careless manner.

The owners of the property not only derive no benefit from it, or in many cases none, but in no instance do they derive the full benefit. I have no reason to believe that the Government will take better care or exercise a higher type of supervision over the leasing of coal lands than it does now over grazing lands in other portions of the country. The Government is now busily engaged in sending out inspectors to inspect inspectors.

It is my opinion that the people would prosper and Alaska would develop more rapidly and that benefits would accrue not only to the people of Alaska but to all the people along the Pacific coast if the Government itself mined the coal and sold it, or at least placed it for sale at the nearest seaport, of which there are plenty there. I am of opinion that the people of Alaska would do better and acquire greater profit if the Government gave half its coal lands away and merely retained the other half and held them as a check over the wasteful management and the methods which will be pursued, in my opinion, by the lessees.

The men who lease this land will not only mine it wastefully and at the greatest profit to themselves in the way of driving their shafts and tunnels through the coal veins, but they will also beat down the price of labor to the lowest possible price at which they can obtain it, and it will be but a few years more before they will be here, if we enter upon this plan, asking permission of Congress to give them the right to import labor from Asia, and they will work it at any price at which they can obtain it.

Take the coal mines in the Eastern States and you find them filled not with American citizens but with importations from all over Europe, nearly every nation in Europe being represented in strata like the coal measures in proportion to the different importations that have been made, the Greeks to replace the Slavonians and the Italians to replace the Greeks, the wages having been driven down that way. We will have the same conditions in Alaska. It was stated here the other day that in Colorado at this time 1 per cent of the coal is being mined, as I understood the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not being mined, but only 2.8 per cent of the coal lands are in private ownership.

Mr. LANE. And you see the conditions they are having there, and the troubles they have had with the labor problem, combating and fighting to secure the work of men in those mines at the lowest possible living wages. It would seem, judging by the statistics, that if you were to follow this to a legitimate conclusion, if in that State and other States where they are having similar troubles as in Colorado 10 per cent of the coal area was being mined, the National Government would have to go to Europe and buy a lot of the new type high-powered, long-range Krupp guns to keep the mines in operation. The Government is at this time under expense and is being compelled to pay the cost of policing those mines. I do not want that condition to obtain in Alaska. I believe if we enter into this leasing system, not only will the methods be wasteful and the consumer of the coal have to pay the top price, as he does now, but we will then also have labor wars, too, and the Government will have to keep troops there to maintain peace between the employers and the employees.

For that reason, and for many others, I think it would be both profitable and wise for the Government to retain those coal lands and mine them. If there is any miner or farmer or anyone else who wishes coal for his personal use, give him a permit upon easy terms to secure the same. If you do that, you will open up that Territory, that wonderful country. The Government will probably not have to open the mines, it may be, for years to come, if you will give those people permission to go and secure the coal they need for their own use, and if you want that coal to come on down to our country in the region where I live, where we pay eight, nine, ten, and eleven dollars a ton, and as much as seventeen and eighteen dollars a ton for anthracite coal shipped from this part of the country, it is a different proposition. When we burn coal from Wyoming, we pay $9 a ton. If we use anthracite coal, we pay seventeen and eighteen dollars. If we use coal from Australia, as we sometimes do, we pay $11 a ton. With Alaska's great coal fields we could, if the Government mined it, secure it at a very much lower rate than that, and it would benefit many, many thousands of people without the loss of one-quarter of a cent to anybody, without any competition, without any of this waste and the labor wars which go on in all the coal mines in the country. The mines would be better ventilated and there would be fewer accidents if the Government would do this work, for the Government would do it thoroughly.

Under the leasing system which it is proposed to establish by this bill I look for collusion in acquiring the rights to lease the better and most accessible portions of that coal land. That coal land is not all accessible to the markets; some is more favorably situated than others, and the man who secures the best-located claim is the man who will have especial advantage over the man who is farther removed over the next range or across some deep gulch. I think the people of that Territory wish that the Government shall mine and operate and not lease these coal mines.

In my mind I had mapped out quite a good deal which I wished to say on this subject which I thought would be pertinent and bear directly on it, to the edification, perhaps, of the Members of this body, but there grew up such a battle between different Senators here that I have lost track of a good deal of what I wished to say; so I will not detain the Senate longer.

I will offer an amendment to the bill and allow the Senate to vote upon the proposition that the Government shall reserve unto itself all the coal lands in these coal fields, with the right to mine the same. I have accomplished that by merely striking out certain parts of the bill as it was presented by the committee, and I am going to ask for a vote on the amendment. I will tender it at this time and ask the Presiding Officer at what time it will be in order to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). The Chair will state that it is in order at the present time.

Mr. LANE. To consider it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To consider it.

Mr. LANE. I send it to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon.

The SECRETARY. In section 1 of the substitute reported by the committee, page 12, line 21, after the word "River," insert "Nenana"; in section 2, on page 13, line 6, after the word "disposition," strike out the words "not exceeding 5,120 acres of coal-bearing land in the Bering River field and not exceeding 7,680 acres"; in line 8, before the word "of," insert the word "all," and after the word "of" insert the word "the"; in line 9, after the word "Matanuska," insert "Nenana and Bering River" and strike out "field" and insert "fields"; and in line 17, after the word "relief," insert "to the people of this country."

Strike out all of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9.

In section 11, on page 18, strike out the first seven lines of the section, to the word "Provided," in line 6, on page 19.

On page 19, line 9, after the word "within," strike out "such lease" and insert "this act"; in line 11 strike out the word "lessee" and insert "Government"; and in line 12, after the word "therein," strike out the remainder of section 11, and sections 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to survey the lands of the United States in the Territory of Alaska known to be valuable for their deposits of coal, preference to be given first in favor of surveying lands within those areas commonly known as the Bering River, Nenana, and Matanuska coal fields, and thereafter to such areas or coal fields as lie tributary to established settlements or existing or proposed rail or water transportation lines: Provided, That such surveys shall be executed in accordance with existing laws and rules and regulations governing the survey of public lands.

SEC. 2. That after the execution of the surveys provided for in this act the President of the United States shall designate and reserve from use, location, sale, lease, or disposition all of the coal-bearing land in the Matanuska, Nenana, and Bering River fields: Provided, That the coal deposits in such reserved areas may be mined under the direction of the President when, in his opinion, the mining of such coal in such reserved areas, under the direction of the President, becomes necessary, by reason of an insufficient supply of coal at a reasonable price for the requirements of Government works, construction and operation of Government railroads, for the Navy, for national protection, and for relief to the people of this country from oppressive conditions.

SEC. —. That in order to provide for the supply of strictly local and domestic needs for fuel the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in advance, issue to any applicant qualified under section 3 of this act a limited license or permit granting the right to prospect for, mine, and dispose of coal belonging to the United States on specified tracts not to exceed 10 acres to any one person or association of persons in any one coal field for a period of not exceeding 10 years, on such conditions not inconsistent with this act as in his opinion will safeguard the public interest, without payment of royalty for the coal mined or for the land occupied: Provided, That the acquisition or holding of a lease under the preceding sections of this act shall be no bar to the acquisition, holding, or operating under the limited license in this section permitted. And the holding of such a license shall be no bar to the acquisition or holding of such a lease or interest therein: Provided, That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act, may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within this act under existing law or laws hereafter enacted in so far as said surface is not necessary for use by the Government in extracting and removing the deposits of coal therein.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe the necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act.

SEC. —. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I am going to ask this body to consider those amendments and express an opinion upon them. If there is any function which the Government can perform for the benefit of the people of the country to better advantage than private individuals, it is my opinion that the Government should do so. It can be engaged in no better business than serving the general interests and welfare of the people of this country to the best possible advantage.

Alaska is a new Territory. It has few roads, few trails, in it. The methods of traveling are exceedingly difficult. Some portions of that country you can only enter from the remainder of the world during the summer season, when the rivers are free of ice. After you get into the interior of the country the best season for traveling comes later along, when the ground is frozen, when the dogs can travel over the snow, and the trails are broken. But they have no permanent roads. They have very few good trails. It is a country which is immensely rich in possibilities. It has nearly every mineral that is known, some in enormous quantities. Gold is found in pay streaks that are exceedingly rich. Some entire areas are gold bearing, and no man knows what amount of gold they will produce in the future, for the reason that but a very small portion of it has been prospected. In order to prospect it it is necessary to work down through ground that is frozen to an unknown depth. In Siberia they have been down 3,000 feet and found it still frozen. It is hard to take into that country the apparatus for thawing the ground in order to prospect. Yet prospecting blindly in the least likely looking places, with the haphazard of chance, some of the richest mines in Alaska have been found.

No man knows the amount of other minerals that Alaska contains. The interior of Alaska contains much good timber, and there is coal scattered pretty generally all over Alaska. Much of it is of inferior quality, yet it is very valuable at the place in which it is located. It would require the Government to handle a proposition of that kind for the ultimate and general benefit of the country, for the reason that the private individual, the corporation which has its agents out prospecting the country, will acquire and secure possession of the richest portion of it first and hold the balance of the community away from participating in the benefits to be derived from it. It is an entirely different proposition, I think, from any other that presents itself, on account of the character of the country and the climate, and it deserves special consideration. That is why I am asking you to consider this amendment of mine at this time, which calls for the Government to mine this coal itself. It is a measure which will meet, I am sure, with the approbation of every man who has ever been in Alaska and the people who live there, although there are many here who question the right of the Government to enter upon such an enterprise.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I understand this amendment strikes out the part on page 14. So I desire to offer an amendment to the text of the amendment reported by the committee, and the amendment I offer has, I understand, the approval of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that, as there are a large number of amendments to be offered, the Senate vote on the substitute offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. JONES. If that substitute should be adopted, then all on page 14 goes out. Of course I suppose the Senator is confident that it will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE].

Mr. POINDEXTER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Kern	Page	Smith, Md.
Brady	Lane	Perkins	Smoot
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Pittman	Sterling
Burton	Lewis	Poindexter	Stone
Chamberlain	Lippitt	Pomerene	Thompson
Chilton	McCumber	Ransdell	Thornton
Clapp	McLean	Reed	Walsh
du Pont	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	White
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Williams
Hollis	Myers	Shively
Hughes	O'Gorman	Simmons
Johnson	Overman	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask if there is an amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a substitute pending, the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE].

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Secretary to state the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The Secretary again read Mr. LANE's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which, I understand, is satisfactory to the Senator in charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "force," in line 2, page 14, insert "as then interpreted and the rules, regulations, and practice of the department," so that if amended it will read:

> Which said rights may be perfected under the law as in force as then interpreted and the rules, regulations, and practice of the department at the time the same were initiated.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I know of no objection to that amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to know the meaning of the amendment. I did not catch its reading.

Mr. JONES. It simply provides that the rights referred to in the bill shall be perfected under the law as interpreted, and the rules and regulations of the department at the time the rights were initiated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, the effect of the amendment is simply to have titles which had been initiated determined as of the date, so far as the law and regulations are concerned, when they were initiated.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. When the hearing would have come up in due course to have been disposed of?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to inquire of my colleague what interpretation he gives to the words in his amendment "as then interpreted"? The amendment provides that such rights shall be decided in accordance with the rules and regulations and practice of the department. There have been various interpretations of those rules with changing officials. It seems to me the effect of the language of the amendment, "as then interpreted," might lead to a good deal of confusion.

Mr. JONES. My understanding is that it allows these cases to be settled in accordance with the interpretation of the law that was enforced at the time of the initiation of the claim; at least that is the purpose of the amendment. Certain interpretations were placed upon the law under the practice of the department at a certain time; then a few years afterwards a different interpretation was placed on it. The purpose of the amendment is simply to provide that whatever interpretation and practice were in force at the time the claims were initiated, where the parties did what they thought was a compliance with the law, should govern in the adjustment of the claim. That is practically the language frequently used by the department in its rules. For instance, the department in 1913 adopted a rule for the adjudication of land cases, which is as follows:

> Every claimant for lands under the public-land laws is entitled to have his claim adjudicated under the interpretation of the law, the rules, and regulations and the practice in force at the date his right attached to the land.

So it will appear that I have followed substantially, almost word for word, the language of the department itself.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me, Mr. President, that when we say in the bill itself "said rights may be perfected under the laws in force at the time the same were initiated," we cover the entire ground.

Mr. JONES. I think that would be correct, except on account of the fact that the department interprets the law differently at different times. At one time they interpret it that the entryman, in order to comply with the law, must do certain things, and then, three or four years afterwards, they interpret the law as requiring him to do other and different things. Hence the necessity for the amendment, and hence, I suppose, the necessity for the rule prescribed by the department. It is for the government and adjustment of these entries. The department itself did not seem to think that a general expression that the parties should comply with the law was enough to protect the different rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I offer one other amendment. At the close of the section I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 15, line 16, at the end of the section, it is proposed to insert the following:

> All claims of such existing rights to any of such lands in which final proof has been submitted and which are now pending before the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior for decision shall be adjudicated within one year from the passage of this act.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I know of no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 15, page 21, line 1, after the word "hereunder," it is proposed to insert:

> An appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia may be taken from any judgment or order of the Secretary of the Interior canceling existing coal claims, and such appeals may be taken within the time under such proceedings and determined in the same manner as provided by sections 4911 to 4914, Revised Statutes, for appeals from the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Oregon delay the consideration of that amendment for just a moment while I ask a question in regard to a previous amendment before we pass upon the Senator's amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask those in charge of the bill, who have given more time to it of course than have the rest of us, if section 3, as amended a few moments ago by inserting the words "as then interpreted, and the rules, regulations, and practice of the department," is entirely satisfactory to them?

In other words, I presume it has been considered what effect that amendment might possibly have upon certain claims and interpretations which were put upon the law and regulations at that time, which claims have generally been considered as perhaps fraudulent. Do those in charge of the bill think there is any danger of validating some claims under peculiar interpretations or construction of the law that really ought not to be validated?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I was asking a question. I have only had a moment to consider the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not so understand the amendment. I understand the amendment to apply to the laws then in force and to the rules and regulations as then interpreted.

Mr. BORAH. Of course I understand what the object of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is, and undoubtedly what the object of those in charge of the bill is; that is, simply to give a hearing upon the reasonable construction of the law as it existed at that time.

Mr. JONES. That is all.

Mr. BORAH. But, in view of the peculiar situation which existed with reference to a number of claims and allegations which have been made with reference to constructions which were put on the law and the rules at that time, I simply desire to call the matter to the attention of those in charge of the bill in order that they might at least have it thoroughly under consideration in conference.

Mr. PITTMAN. I can assure the Senator, as I probably will be one of the conferees, that in the meantime those who have charge of the bill, and will probably be on the conference committee, will give it very careful consideration. At the present time I am under the impression that the amendment simply protects against any retroactive legislation. That is the sole intention of it.

As I recollect the contests which took place over the coal lands in Alaska, they nearly all involved a question of fact rather than a question of the construction of the law. It was simply a question of fact as to fraud, and that same question of fact will arise now on the hearings under the amendment. I am satisfied now that the amendment goes no further than to protect against an adjudication based either upon a retroactive law or rules of the department, which have the effect of law in some cases.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Now that this matter has been mooted, I think that it is only fair that an exposition be made of the actual practical meaning of the amendment to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has referred.

The amendment is directed to this condition: At the time most of these Alaska claims were initiated the department had ruled that the right was initiated by the opening up of a deposit of coal by prospecting shafts and other similar workings. It is contended that the department now holds that the proper construction to be given to the law requires that something more than mere prospecting operations be conducted, and that, in order to have initiated the right under the statute, there shall be workings intended for the production commercially of ore from the mine. The effect of this will be to reestablish the rule originally obtaining if there is any difference in them.

I feel like saying in this connection that I do not approve the amendment, and I am not to be regarded as voting in favor of it. If the original interpretation of the law was wrong, I do not conceive that any locator of a mining claim or a coal claim has any vested right in the perpetuation of an erroneous determination of the law by the Interior Department. If that determination were wrong, it ought to be corrected. My own individual opinion about the matter is that it was right and that the latter interpretation of the law is erroneous; but I do not think that it is right for this body to undertake to say that the one or the other is correct. In my judgment it ought to be left to the department to determine which is the correct interpretation of a law as it is written in the books.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, addressing my remarks to the Senator from Montana, I inquire would not this amendment, under the construction which has been placed upon it by the Senator, which seems to me to be a sound one, go to the very heart of the controversy as to whether a mine had been validly and legally located at that time and as to the bona fides, perhaps, of the location?

Mr. WALSH. In answer to the Senator from Idaho, I will say that my understanding about it is that the bona fides are assumed. The man attempted bona fide to acquire title. What he did was simply to conduct prospecting operations until he had actually disclosed a valuable deposit of coal. His workings, however, were not of such a character as would suffice for the commercial extraction of ore from the mine, and he could not honestly say that he intended to use them for that purpose. My understanding is that the department now holds that that is insufficient for the initiation of a right, and that the right has not been initiated until workings have been constructed with a view to the extraction of coal commercially.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I repeat that I have no doubt as to what the purpose of the amendment is; I simply desire to endeavor to arrive at a construction as to what it is so that there may be no misunderstanding hereafter; but I will not detain the Senate upon this matter now, because the bill will not pass out of the Committee of the Whole yet, and I desire to give it some consideration before I shall make up my mind as to the construction which should be given to the amendment. I only say now that the provision in the bill—> subject to any prior valid existing rights, which said rights may be perfected under the laws in force at the time the same were initiated—seems to me to cover the situation, unless we are going to reach over and take advantage of the peculiar situation or interpretation which arose under a peculiar state of facts at that particular time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand that there is nothing really before the Senate except my proposed amendment and that the amendment which Senators are now discussing has already been adopted.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but I should like to make one suggestion in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I merely want to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that for several years the department made certain interpretations of the law as to what would be required of the coal entryman in initiating his entry in Alaska. That interpretation was followed for several years, and a number of entries were initiated under the law as then existing and as then interpreted. Several years thereafter, and before these entries had gone to patent, a different construction of the law was made; a different interpretation was given; different requirements were laid down for the entrymen under the same law that was existing at the time the entrymen made their entries. It is held that they are subject to that later interpretation.

It does seem to me—and that is the only purpose of the amendment—that any of those claims that are yet undisposed of should be disposed of under the interpretation of the law and the practice and rules of the department under which these people made their entries. If they comply with those requirements in good faith, it would seem to me—and that has been the practice of the department, too—that they should be permitted to make their proof. That is the sole purpose of the amendment. I hope the Senator will look into it very carefully. If he should be in sympathy with that proposition and does not think the amendment covers the ground, or if he thinks the amendment goes too far, I shall be very glad, indeed, to join with him in getting it perfected, for I do not want it to go any further than justice really requires.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I think it is hardly fair for Senators to ask me to continue to yield when there is really nothing before the Senate except the amendment proposed by me, the amendment which is being discussed having been adopted. I have yielded, I think, as much as I ought to be asked to yield on a matter which has been settled by the Senate. If any Senator wants to make a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Washington was adopted, it can come up later. I do not want to be discourteous to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I merely desired to ask a question as to the particular amendment which is now being discussed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think the Senator ought to ask it, as a matter of fact, until my amendment is disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It may take longer to dispose of it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can not help that. The Senator can do as he pleases about that.

Mr. President, now I ask to have the amendment proposed by me stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 1, after the word "hereunder," it is proposed to insert the following:

An appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia may be taken from any judgment or order of the Secretary of the Interior canceling existing coal claims, and such appeals may be taken within the time, under such proceedings, and determined in the same manner as provided by sections 4911 to 4914, Revised Statutes, for appeals from the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the amendment really speaks for itself, and even a word of explanation is hardly necessary; but I feel it my duty to say something in reference to the matter.

There are a number of people in my State—not a great many, but a few—who have coal claims in Alaska and who have been hung up, like Mahomet's coffin, between heaven and earth for many years. The whole condition with reference to these claims has been unsettled for a great many years. This amendment simply proposes to give the right of appeal from the Secretary of the Interior in cases where he cancels a claim.

I do not mean to question the integrity of the Interior Department, but it is a matter of recent history, Mr. President, that there has been more or less politics thrust into the question of the validity of the claims of these claimants in Alaska. Altogether I think there have been about 1,129 claims filed in the Territory. Of this number 561 have been canceled or have been really defaulted, because men became brain weary and heartsick over the delays of the department. Of those 561 claimants, a great many of them simply made default and abandoned all hope of ever having their titles perfected. Thirty-three of the 561 claims, I believe the so-called Cunningham claims, are the only claims which have been finally adjudicated determined, and canceled.

With the feeling which has existed in the department, many of these people who believe their claims are just want to have the right to go before the courts in the District of Columbia in order to have their rights determined in case the Secretary of the Interior decides against them.

I deem it but frank to say that the Secretary of the Interior, with whom I took the matter up, opposes this amendment; and in a letter which I received from him he states that the amendment—would discriminate in practice and proceeding between the Alaskan coal claimants and other claimants of and applicants for public lands of the United States, in granting the former the right of appeal to the District of Columbia court and in withholding the same right from the latter class of claimants.

Mr. President, the Alaska coal claimants are treated differently, and in fact all of the coal lands of Alaska are treated differently, from the coal lands and coal claimants in other States and Territories. So that there is not anything in that position which the Secretary takes, that it will place the Alaska coal claimants in a different attitude and give them a right which other coal claimants have not in other States. He continues:

I am aware of no reason for making a distinction, for if it be desirable to provide for appeal from the final decision of this department to the courts of the District of Columbia, that right should be extended to the claimants for public lands in Montana or Oregon, as well as to the claimant in Alaska.

I have sometimes regretted, Mr. President, that that right has not been granted, not only to coal claimants but to claimants of public land generally. Under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States the decision of the Interior Department is final, and I know of my own knowledge that in former years there have been many cases which have been finally determined by the department where, if the same question had been before courts of equity or other courts of the country, the decision would have been entirely different. The Secretary says, further:

I do not believe, however, that such legislation is necessary or advisable. The cases can, in my opinion, be tried as fairly and the law and facts considered and determined as well by this department as by the court and with less delay and expense to the claimants.

Mr. President, I do not question the ability of the department to try fairly and determine these cases, but they have been pending here for years, not only before a former department, but for two years during the administration of the present distinguished Secretary of the Interior; so that, while the department may be able to determine them readily and quickly, somehow or other they do not seem to do so.

As already indicated, the transfer of the cases—to the District of Columbia courts would involve the claimants in large additional expense, would necessarily delay the final disposition of the cases, and would, I think, serve no good purpose. My view therefore is that the suggested amendment is not desirable.

Mr. President, as I have said before, there are many of these claimants whose claims are valid. They simply want to have the right to go to the courts in case their claims are held for cancellation by the Secretary of the Interior apparently without reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word with reference to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

This matter was discussed a good deal in connection with these same claims, particularly when the controversy arose before the country as to the Cunningham claims. I dislike very much to oppose anything proposed by the Senator from Oregon, but it seems to me that, if we are going to have a dual system, part administrative and part judicial, it will tend rather to create delay than to expedite the decision of these matters.

I have thought at times that perhaps it might be well to establish a land court for the decision of land cases. That is a matter that is worthy of consideration at least; but to leave the administrative powers of the Interior Department as they are now, to have these cases take a long, tedious course through the Land Office, then before the Secretary of the Interior, and then to pile on that a long course of judicial proceedings in another tribunal would rather intensify than relieve the evils of the situation, and would put in the hands of people to whom the expenses of litiagtion are a small consideration a power to withhold lands from entry and settlement by honest people who desire to use them and to live on them.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator is doubtless aware that the right proposed to be granted by my amendment applies in patent cases to appeals from the Commissioner of Patents. In patent cases the right of appeal to the courts is preserved; and, while it is a right that is seldom exercised, nevertheless it is a salutary one. I do not believe, if this provision were embodied in the bill, that claimants whose claims had been handled would very frequently appeal to the courts. As a matter of fact, the Senator knows that the claims which were charged to have been really fraudulent have all been disposed of, anyway. The amendment applies only to existing claims.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it is a matter that ought to be considered in a separate bill. I think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion of the Secretary that one rule ought not to be made with reference to the Alaska coal claims and another rule retained as to all other claims.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I regret very much to differ with the Senator from Oregon, with whom upon all these questions I usually find myself in entire accord.

The subject of a land court has been, as we all know, very extensively debated, and for many years. It has been argued, and with much force, perhaps, that often very intricate and profound questions of law arise in the determination of these questions before the Interior Department, and that the legal propositions, at least, ought to be subjected to review on direct appeal before some court. But, Mr. President, the sentiment of the country has never been crystallized in the form of law, if it obtains general recognition. My own judgment about it is that it does not; at least, it has never been sufficiently strong to induce the Congress to take up the matter seriously and consider the wisdom of now making a departure from the system which has been vindicated by an experience of over a century and a quarter, which places the disposition of these questions absolutely in the land department.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And yet this very bill, in section 15, departs from the old method of procedure, in that it gives the district court of Alaska jurisdiction of certain proceedings in forfeiture, and also where there are disagreements or controversies arising between the United States and any lessee or other person. So, we are giving to these parties to the contract the right now to go into court.

Mr. WALSH. I think not, Mr. President, because this provision is incidental to the leasing feature. When the party got his title absolutely, in fee, the Government had no longer any interest in it and no concern about it, and there was no reason for any litigation. When he gets a lease, however, and that lease contains certain conditions, and the conditions provide for a forfeiture of the lease for failure to observe them, and a royalty is to be paid, then it will be observed that frequent controversies may arise between the lessee upon the one hand and the Government upon the other. We simply make provision for that here.

I do not desire at this time to engage in a discussion as to the wisdom or the unwisdom of making this departure from the settled practice. I do, however, assert that the suggestion made in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, that it would be an invidious discrimination, can not be successfully met. I do not know how I could go home to my people in the State of Montana who are interested in establishing title to coal claims in my State and explain how I came to vote for an opportunity to claimants of coal lands in Alaska to have a review of their cases before a court if the Interior Department should determine against them while the same right was denied to one who asserted title to coal lands in my own State of Montana. I do not know what answer I should make to that.

But, Mr. President, if you could make an answer to it, the discrimination goes even further than is pointed out in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, because you are going to give the claimant only of coal land in the Territory of Alaska an opportunity to appeal from an adverse decision of the Department of the Interior in his case. His neighbor, who is meeting with some difficulty in establishing his title to a piece of agricultural land, a homesteader, tries out his case through the local office and the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and he is confronted with an adverse decision, and he has no right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to reverse the decision of the Secretary of the Interior. So, likewise, a man attempts to obtain a patent to land valuable for gold, either a placer deposit or a quartz claim, and he finishes his course with the Secretary of the Interior. If the decision there is adverse to him, he loses his land.

I am unable to understand how we could justify ourselves before the claimant of a metallic mineral claim in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is not any question that the laws might be amended if the subject of the disposition of agricultural lands were now before the Senate; but here is a bill dealing exclusively with the coal lands in Alaska, and it is therefore peculiarly fitting at this time that all the legislation affecting it and the method of procedure with reference to title should be included in the bill itself. It seems to me, speaking of the conditions in the Senator's own State and what excuse the Senator could make to his people if this discrimination were indulged in toward Alaska, that it is situated differently. The laws governing the two sections are entirely different.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon—who has had a distinguished career as a lawyer, as well as a governor and a Senator—if he does not think that a matter of the kind he now proposes ought to be referred to the Judiciary Committee and considered by that committee very carefully before it is acted upon by the Senate? And would it not be far more convenient, when such a proposition is considered, if it is considered as applicable to all of the public resources of the country, instead of taking out of it one territory and one particular set of claims, and undertaking in a very ill-considered and hurried manner to establish a mode of judicial procedure with reference to those particular claims?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will permit me a little further, as a general proposition that might be correct. If we had under consideration a measure establishing the land court, which has been advocated here before, it would be well to have it go before the Judiciary Committee and have their consideration; but here is a bill dealing with particular kinds of lands in a particular territory, and covering the whole subject. Therefore it seems to me that it would be entirely appropriate to consider now the question whether or not in particular cases particular decisions rendered by the Secretary canceling claims might not be appealed from. We all have confidence in the courts, and I do not see how anybody could object to granting an appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia from a decision of the Secretary of the Interior canceling a claim, if the claimant felt he had just cause for an appeal.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator from Oregon that if I did say to my constituents who are interested in coal claims that there is some difference between the coal laws applicable to Alaska and the coal laws applicable to my State, and if I were asked to point out the difference, it seems to me I should be unable to find out any difference that would justify granting an appeal in the one case and refusing to grant an appeal in the other. Undoubtedly there is some difference in the details. There is no question about that; but there is no such difference, it seems to me, as would justify any legislative body in granting an appeal in the one case and refusing to grant it in the other.

Now, let me continue further, I feel that the necessity for the land court is very largely dispensed with by an act passed at the present session, under which a board of review is appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, charged with the duty of trying these cases. That board, if the proper members can be found, will be constituted, at least so far as the appointment is made by the present Secretary, of men of the very highest character, men of acknowledged reputations as mining lawyers; and I believe they will act in the matter as though they actually constituted a land court. I trust when the nominations come in they will be of men whose reputation and whose character is so well known and so well established that it will give to the whole country a measure of confidence in the adjudications they may make.

The Senator from Oregon says he has great confidence in the present head of the Department of the Interior, and has no doubt that he would be governed by justice and right in the determination of these causes; but he remarked that causes have been pending there now for a year and a half at least, during the present administration, and have not yet been disposed of. The Senator from Oregon must recognize, and I am sure he does, that with the multifold duties now imposed upon the Secretary of the Interior it is next to impossible for him to consider these cases in the way that similar matters were considered in years gone by, when ex-Senator Teller was at the head of the Interior Department, or ex-Senator Vilas, of the State of Wisconsin, or other eminent lawyers—Justice Lamar, for instance. I think it will be appreciated that the present Secretary of the Interior, who is an able lawyer, has not had the time to sit down to consider these matters, and by reason of that fact this board of review has been created. Its members will be charged with no duty other than the duty of determining these causes as a court would, and I feel that in a very large measure they will take the place of a land court. Let me remark, however, that we have already put in this bill a provision that takes care of the delay feature.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want the Senator to understand that I am not criticizing the Secretary of the Interior on account of the delay. As a matter of fact, I understand and appreciate fully the difficulties in the way. Besides, if this amendment were adopted, I do not think it would relieve that congested condition. I think the delay has been caused largely, both in this administration and in the former administration, by the difficulties of the situation, the doubts that have been in the minds of the former Secretary and this Secretary as to just what they ought to do. I think if this amendment were adopted it might possibly have the effect of expediting the matter a little in this way: The Secretary might feel, "Well, here is a case that has been pending before me for a long, long time, and I have been in grave and serious doubt as to how I ought to decide. I will cancel the claim and then leave it to the court to go into it more fully than I have been able to do."

I am not criticizing the department, because, having been a member of the Public Lands Committee when this subject was gone into, I understand as well as anybody how great the work has been and how congested the conditions there have been; and the Secretaries have all done just as well as they could under the circumstances.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the Senator to speak in that spirit; but we have now provided, by an amendment to this bill, that all of the pending claims must be decided within a year, and it does seem to me that with the effort that has been had in the past they ought to be disposed of within the next year.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator from Montana in regard to the board of review which was created here some time ago. Is it contemplated that this board of review will take the case originally as it comes on appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, or is it contemplated that the board of review will sit with the Secretary of the Interior, or review the decision of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. WALSH. I must say to the Senator that I have not studied in detail the provisions of the act so as to answer definitely, but my understanding about the matter is that they are really advisory to the Secretary of the Interior. They hear the matter as it comes on appeal from the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and the Senator knows, I suppose, at least in a general way, about how much attention the Secretary of the Interior would be able to give to the adjudications of a board so constituted. My own judgment about the matter is that he would perfunctorily O. K. their adjudications.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that this board of review would be a mere supernumerary unless that is true. There would be nothing gained by way of relief in time, and so forth, and in my judgment very little gained by way of relief in any other way, if the board of review is simply going to sit there to pass upon a decision made by the present deciding officials of the Interior Department. Unless this board of review takes these cases as they come originally to the Interior Department, there will be very little relief.

Mr. WALSH. Why, yes; I quite agree with the Senator from Idaho that it would be useless to put a board of review in the Interior Department to actually go over again the same matter that already had been gone over by the Secretary of the Interior himself. They would not reverse the Secretary, being subordinates of the Secretary.

I believe, therefore, that it would be unwise to adopt this amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. I did not hear the reading of the amendment at first. Does it apply to any cases that have been heretofore decided, or does it apply only to those that are hereafter decided?

Mr. WALSH. It applies to pending cases. It would not be applicable to those that have been adjudicated, or those that have been heretofore canceled.

Mr. BORAH. Mr President, I think if we had had the question of a land court up for consideration a number of years ago there would have been very strong arguments in favor of creating it. I think the manner of determining these matters in the Interior Department has always been in contravention to the fundamental principles of courts—that is, that no party should decide his own case. That is practically what the result has been in the administration of the public-land laws for the last few years. In other words, the party having the contest or making claim to the public lands, whatever land it might be, is placed largely in the position of going into a court where, to a greater or less extent, the feeling prevails that it is the duty of the court to look particularly to the interests of the Government which it represents. That would not be so bad, however, except for the fact that there grew up another custom and another method, and that was that when these contests would come up the Interior Department would send out special agents and special representatives to make investigations and report facts, and so forth, and oftentimes the contestant would never have an opportunity to meet those conditions or those facts at all. These men were appointed as confidential agents of the Secretary or the parties passing upon the matter, and their reports were accepted, as those things naturally would be accepted, by one whom you had appointed and in whom you had entire confidence. It resulted in a great many instances in injustice. I am not speaking now with reference to Alaska, but with reference to homestead entries, desert-land entries, and all other entries under the public-land laws.

But, Mr. President, these long years have passed, and we have had no land court, and we are practically at the close of the régime in which we have needed one. Our public lands are pretty well exhausted. I think, though, even at the present time, if the matter stood alone and in a separate bill covering all public-land entries, with the right to appeal in all matters, that I would be inclined to support the bill. I do think, however, that it is hardly a defensible proposition to create a special right to appeal to a court for a particular class of entrymen, not only in a particular territory, but a particular class of entrymen within that Territory. It seems to me that if we are going to legislate upon the subject we ought to legislate upon it in its entirety. If the Senator from Oregon will urge a general proposition of that kind, I shall be inclined to support it, although I think perhaps the great necessity for it has passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have examined the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] since the discussion of it, and I am satisfied that the amendment accomplishes a result that the Senator from Washington does not desire. As I understood the amendment he offered, it referred to the rules and regulations of the department as interpreted at the time the rights were initiated; but the amendment as it reads refers to the interpretation of the laws. I think it well to hold the department to the interpretation of their rules and regulations with regard to the location of coal claims as interpreted at the time the locations were made, but not the laws.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. JONES. Why not? Why not their interpretation of the laws? That is what the entryman relied on.

Mr. PITTMAN. The laws were made by Congress.

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. The rules and regulations were made by the department. The laws should be correctly interpreted.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but, Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Wait just a second. The interpretation of the rules and regulations as made by the department at the time the locations were made was a part of the rules and regulations themselves—that very interpretation. So I see no harm in requiring the Department of the Interior to respect the rules existing at the time of the initiation as construed by that department, because their construction of their own rules constitutes the rules; but I do not think that should apply to the law. The law is passed by Congress.

Mr. JONES. I simply want to make a suggestion to the Senator. Suppose the department interprets the law correctly, but a new Secretary comes in and after four or five years he puts a different interpretation upon the law, one that is really wrong. That is really the situation, in my judgment, with reference to some of these claims; and as I understood the Senator from Montana, he agrees with me in the proposition that the first interpretation of the law was correct.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. WALSH. While the Senator from Montana simply expressed the opinion that that was right, I do not give that as my final opinion. That is simply an impression I have. I should like to put it to the Senator from Washington the other way. Suppose, as a matter of fact, the original interpretation of the law was wrong and the present one is right?

Mr. JONES. Even in that case I would say this, Mr. President: There is just as much reason in protecting the settler and giving him his rights under a wrong interpretation of the law as there is in taking away rights properly initiated by a wrong interpretaton of the law.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, let me answer that.

Mr. JONES. Just a moment. Of course I did not intend to say that the Senator from Montana was convinced in his mind as to the interpretation of the law, but that it was his impression, as he has stated. Let us assume, however, that the law as it was interpreted for 15 or 20 years was correctly interpreted, and entrymen have made entries under that law as then interpreted, but they have not secured their titles. A new Secretary comes in and he interprets the law in a different way, and in a way that takes away their claims. It seems to me that there can be no justice upon the part of the Government in taking advantage of an interpretation of that kind——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. And the entryman has no remedy.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I desired to present to the Senator. Why has not he a remedy?

Mr. JONES. Well, what is it?

Mr. WALSH. Take the particular instance here. Suppose the department should erroneously determine the law; that is, suppose it should determine that although the man had proper prospecting shafts and other workings at that time, as a matter of law the law required him to have actual commercial developments. Now, he is denied the property and it goes to some one else. He has an opportunity to go into court and have the other party declared a trustee in his behalf. The Senator himself has undoubtedly prosecuted cases of that character.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, of course the Secretary's decision is final upon the facts, and the Secretary's finding is so made that the court does not get jurisdiction of it. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that that has been the policy of the department when the department has had rights initiated under the homestead law. I have in mind a particular case that was decided not a great while ago upon a motion for the exercise of the supervisory power of the Secretary of the Interior. The basis for it was that the decision had been made and the entryman's rights determined upon an interpretation that was different from that which existed at the time of the initiation of his entry. In the exercise of the supervisory power of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary followed the very rule that the department itself had laid down—that in the adjudication of these cases they should be passed upon in accordance with the interpretation of the law, rules, regulations, and practice of the department at the time the claim was initiated.

I have no doubt the department adopted that rule simply as a matter of justice to the entryman himself, and it seems to me that it is a just and fair rule. I see the point the Senator from Nevada makes, but I can see just as much injustice in not following the usual interpretation of the law with reference to the initiation of claims that were initiated while such interpretation was pending as in changing the rules and regulations, so far as that is concerned, because they have the effect of law. I will say to the Senator that the purpose of my amendment was not only to cover rules and regulations and the practice of the department, but also its interpretation of the law that was in effect when these claims were initiated.

As I suggested a moment ago, I copied that language largely from the declaration or rule of the department itself, which reads as follows:

> Every claimant for lands under the public-land laws is entitled to have his claim adjudicated under the interpretation of the law, the rules and regulations, and the practice in force at the date his right attached to the land.

So the department itself recognizes the condition that may come about by the department applying a different interpretation. My amendment was intended to cover that, and to go that far.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. Unless it is desired to reconsider at present, I should like to have the Senator reflect upon that matter. While I would be willing to have it considered further by the Senate, and of course would not cut off anything of that kind, I felt the matter might be perfected in conference and put in shape so as to meet the situation which really confronts us.

The Senator, of course, is familiar with the situation in Alaska. The law from 1873, I think it was, to 1907 was interpreted in a certain way and claimants were required or expected to do certain things in order to be entitled to make their proof, but in 1907 a different interpretation was placed upon the law and, according to that interpretation, different requirements were made of entrymen, and some of those who had applied and initiated rights under the law as interpreted since 1873 found themselves confronted with a new interpretation of the law. This is just to meet that situation, because it seems that the application of such an interpretation would be wholly unfair, wholly unjust, and deprive those people of the results of their labors and their expenditure in going in there under the interpretation the department had given to the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Nevada to move to reconsider.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not yet. I still have the floor. I misunderstood the amendment of the Senator. I thought it referred to the rules and regulations of the department. I believe the Senator is right in regard to the rules and regulations of the department, because the department makes the rules and regulations, and their interpretation of the rules and regulations ought to become a part of the rules and regulations. In other words, if the department is asked what they mean by certain rules and regulations and they give an answer, then a locator of a coal claim has the right to act upon that interpretation, but when it comes to the interpretation of a law enacted by Congress no interpretation should necessarily be binding. An interpretation of a court is persuasive, and an interpretation of a superior court is generally followed by an inferior court, but we might just as well pass a law stating that the ruling of the court with regard to a certain state of facts should govern in all similar cases. We know that courts reverse themselves and we know that the Supreme Court of the United States has reversed its decisions. We believe in the reversal of the decisions when the former decisions were wrong.

For instance, in this very case, suppose just subsequent to the initiation of these claims it had been held that they were not initiated under the law; but suppose, as a matter of fact, that at the present time it should be held that they were initiated under the law, your rule would require them to lose their claims, because heretofore it had been interpreted that they did not conform to the law, whereas at the present time, as the courts might look upon it, they had complied with the law. So, while the rule you are attempting to make under the present state of facts might benefit those coal claimants, such a rule in another case might be equally injurious. I simply bring that up to show that any legislation which attempts to state that any prior adjudication of a law shall be final is dangerous in its very nature, and I can never agree to it.

What I have said before is that the rules and regulations are a different thing. They are made by the department. They are a direction to the locator as to the method of acquiring property, and, of course, the interpretation by the department of those rules should bind the department, because the interpretation becomes a part of the rules, and it would not be fair to a locator who has followed——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. In just a minute. It would not be fair to a locator who has followed the instructions of the very department that created the rules to be subsequently told that he had not followed the rules correctly. For that reason I think this matter should be put in a different form as an amendment. I want to see it put in a different form. I am perfectly willing to see it affect the rules and regulations, but not the law. I am compelled, therefore, as one who voted in favor of it under a misapprehension of the form of the amendment, to move its reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada moves a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not going to oppose the motion to reconsider, because I want the Senate to consider it, as far as that is concerned, and I am acting in perfect good faith in this matter; but I wish to suggest to the Senator from Nevada that here is a rule of interpretation under which equities have arisen. Those equities should be protected. Even though the original interpretation of the law may have been wrong, yet it does seem to me that when equities have arisen under such an interpretation those equities should be protected. That has been the policy of the department. It has been the policy of the department for years and years. It may be that that situation would be covered, but I wanted to ask the Senator does he think that the situation I really have in mind would be covered and met by the words "rules, regulations, and practice of the department"? I will say that I am rather inclined to think that might meet the situation, leaving the other reference in the act to the laws in force at the time as it is in the amendment. I should like to have the opinion of the Senator on that point.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am inclined to think that would be sufficient, and yet it would not attempt to construe finally the act itself. In other words, I do not believe in the Department of the Interior attempting to construe the meaning of Congress finally until it is presented in a proper case.

Mr. JONES. I wish to direct the Senator's attention to this situation: The Senator says Congress makes the law. That is true, and yet in this case the department is unmaking the law absolutely. The department interpreted the law as they thought it was and as we think it is, and as I believe it has been for twenty-odd years. Yet in 1907 the department made a different interpretation and nullified the law. There is certainly nothing just and fair in that. It does seem to me that when the equities and rights of the settler come up we ought to recognize those rather than such a strict adherence to the law. The settlers ought to be protected. The United States does not suffer. The United States is not wronged, but the wrong is done by the Government, by the officers of the Government, acting in perfect good faith, of course. If anybody should suffer, it ought to be the Government itself, but the Government would not suffer.

If I was satisfied that the language, "the rules, regulations, and practice of the department" would be sufficient, I would have no objection to cutting out the rest, but the department itself in several cases here, I think, has adopted that language. In fact, here is the rule that was laid down in the department April 19, 1913:

Until otherwise directed, any departmental decision which proposes to overrule a previously settled construction of law or settled practice under which property rights may have been acquired shall be submitted to the Secretary for his personal consideration and signature.

Here is the case of the Rough Rider and other lode-mining claims, decided December 26, 1913, in which the Secretary finds as follows:

It was upon showings such as this that entries and patents were allowed for mining claims in this region at the dates of the locations and entries of the claims here involved. There can be no question, therefore, that at those times a more liberal rule with reference to mining locations situated in this region prevailed in the Land Department than that applied by the department with respect to the claims here in question in its decision of January 31, 1911, and that had said earlier rule been followed with regard to these locations they would, in the absence of other objections, have passed to patent. This being true, and it appearing that these locations and others in that vicinity, based on the same character of discovery, had been, in reliance on such rule, purchased and dealt with as property, the department is now of the opinion that the rule under which the entries were canceled should not have been given retroactive application to the prejudice of the owners of the claims; but, on the other hand, that the said previous and long-continued practice of the Land Department established a rule of property to such claims which should have been adhered to and followed in the determination of this case.

While that decision applies the interpretation of the law and the principle for which I am contending, I do not know but that it also rather carries out the idea that the words "rules, regulations, and practices of the department" would probably meet.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the motion to reconsider is carried, I offer this suggestion to the Senator—after the word "initiated," on page 14, line 3, to insert "and under the rules, regulations, and practices of the Land Department relative to the acquisition of such rights as interpreted by the department at the time of the initiation of such rights."

Mr. JONES. "As interpreted and applied."

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no objection to adding the word "applied."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, while I would rather the Senate would not reconsider and let the matter go to conference and let the conferees work it out, of course, if the Senate does vote to reconsider I shall hope, at any rate, that that amendment shall be adopted, because I shall take the motion to reconsider as an expression on the merits of the proposition. I will not discuss it further, because it has been discussed.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for a vote.

Mr. JONES. But I do hope the Senate will not reconsider it, but will let the matter go to the conference and will let the conferees work it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Now I move as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Washington the amendment that I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 3, after the word "initiated," insert:

And under the rules, regulations, and practices of the Land Department relative to the acquisition of such rights as interpreted and applied by the department at the time of the initiation of such rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Substitute for section 2 of the bill, page 13, the following words:

SEC. 2. That the President is empowered, authorized, and directed to cause to be reserved from private appropriation or lease, in such tracts and locations as he shall determine, one-half of the coal lands and coal deposits in Alaska owned by the United States, including at least, as near as can be estimated, one-half of the high-grade coal (and no coal lands or coal deposits whatsoever in Alaska shall hereafter be disposed of except by lease, as hereinafter provided, and in any public lands hereafter alienated by the United States in Alaska there shall be reserved to the United States title to all coal deposits therein); and he is further authorized, empowered, and directed to cause coal mines to be opened and equipped on the public lands in Alaska so reserved, and to provide for the transportation, distribution, and sale of the products of the same to the Government railroad or railroads, to the United States Army and Navy, and other Government services, and to other purchasers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not desire to speak upon this amendment other than to say that it follows substantially the bill, but makes more specific the power of the President to sell coal to the public, and instead of leaving it in the discretion of the administrative bureaus to open mines for the supply of the Army and the Navy and the Government railroad it directs that to be done.

One of the changes which I think is important is that it reserves for these purposes and for any future disposition that the Government might see fit to make one-half of the coal area in Alaska. The bill reserves only 8 square miles in the Bering River field.

Mr. WALSH. Twelve square miles; and twelve times 640 are 7,680.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the Matanuska field.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; the Matanuska field.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It reserves only 8 square miles in the Bering River field and 12 square miles in the Matanuska; and that is a very small part of the estimated coal area of those two fields, which is 400 square miles.

Furthermore, there are areas of coal far more extensive than these fields in other parts of Alaska. It seems to me that a wise and a foresighted policy on the part of the Government would induce us to reserve one-half, leaving the enormous area—one-half of the coal lands of Alaska—for private operation under the bill.

I am very much in hopes that the Senators in charge of the bill will agree to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to move as a substitute for that amendment to insert, after the words "Matanuska field," on page 13, line 9, the following:

And not to exceed one-half of the other coal lands in Alaska.

And after the word "from," in the seventeenth line, to insert the words "monopoly or," so that it will read:

For national protection and for relief from monopoly or oppressive conditions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have an explanation of that amendment. What is the effect of it?

Mr. PITTMAN. The first amendment is offered for the purpose of reserving one-half of all the coal lands in Alaska, with the exception of lands in the Bering field and the Matanuska field. The amount of coal in those fields is practically known by the Geological Survey. We find that the amount reserved in actual figures is 5,120 acres, about half of the available coal in the Bering field, and that the amount reserved in the Matanuska field is nearly one-half of the available coal in that field. As to the other fields of Alaska we have not any information sufficiently definite, and therefore I simply propose as to all the other coal fields in Alaska that the Government should reserve half.

As to the amendment inserting the word "monopoly," it has been suggested by the Senator from Washington that this bill might be construed only to authorize the President to operate on reserved area for the benefit of Government works and for the benefit of the Navy, and not for the benefit of the public. So I have added the words "monopoly or" for this reason. It would then read:

For national protection and for relief from monopoly or oppressive conditions.

It was one of the objects of reserving these coal lands that if, in spite of all the safeguards thrown around the protection against monopoly in the bill, monopoly should arise, then the Government would be authorized to reserve areas for the purpose of relieving against such monopoly. I think that language covers it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I can not conceive that anybody who has understood the western situation and the direful results that have come from the withdrawal of public lands and the reservation of such lands would want to have any more reserved. Surely, Senators do not understand the situation. If you are going to close this very land and lock it up for something for the Government to do and then make a broad and sweeping provision of withdrawal, I can not conceive how any western Senator can agree to it.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we are going wild in the matter of attempting to hold lands undeveloped. The result, in my judgment, would be—inasmuch as there is no policy provided so far for the Government to work these mines, but just simply to lock them up and even lock them up from lessees as well as lock them up from purchasers—that no territory on earth could be developed under such conditions.

Here is a proposition to take in not only these specific reserves, but one-half of all the balance of the coal land in Alaska.

Mr. President, I can not conceive that the Senate of the United States can more absolutely prevent development there than by the adoption of the substitute or the proposition of the Senator from Washington. Therefore I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there will be no danger of curtailing investment and the industrial development of coal mines either by the substitute of the Senator from Nevada or by the amendment which I offered.

I hold in my hand a report of the Geological Survey in which it is stated, based on a great number of years of most careful reconnoissance and a number of actual surveys, that the total known coal fields include an area of about 12,667 square miles. If we throw open one-half of that to private development, and institute a policy of Government development largely for Government purposes or for the other purposes specified in the amendment with the remainder, there certainly can not be any logical or valid objection that we are unduly locking up coal lands.

I only desire to add, Mr. President, that I do not want to be put in the attitude, as announced by the decision of the Chair, of consenting to this substitute. I will not ask for a roll call. I think that the amendment which I offered, reserving one-half the coal lands in the Bering River and Matanuska fields, is preferable, and also the other language of the amendment. I will ask that the substitute be put to a vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say that I think the substitute is better than the provision which the Senator has offered, and I would vote in favor of the substitute as against his amendment, but I will vote against the substitute when it comes up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the well-known rule of the Senate the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is first in order. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thought that was precluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee has now perfected the text, and the Senator's amendment is to substitute a complete section for the perfected section.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understood that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington was a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is, perfecting the text of the original report from the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think the Senator from Washington so understood it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not differing from the Chair in regard to it. I am perfectly willing to accept that ruling, but I understood that the vote was upon the substitute offered by the Senator from Nevada for the amendment which I offered, and that the adoption of the substitute put his substitute in the place of my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This has been, I think, the ruling a hundred times since I have been here. There is not any doubt about the rule. The committee first perfects the text, and that is always the first question, because a proposed substitute is not in order until the text is perfected. The motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] was to perfect the text of section 2, and the Chair has ruled that the motion was carried. Now the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] proposes as a substitute for section 2 what will be stated by the Secretary, and it is now in order to be voted upon.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 2 and to insert section 2 as printed in the amendment of the Senator from Washington, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the President is empowered, authorized, and directed to cause to be reserved from private appropriation or lease, in such tracts and locations as he shall determine, one-half of the coal lands and coal deposits in Alaska owned by the United States, including at least, as near as can be estimated, one-half of the high-grade coal (and no coal lands or coal deposits whatsoever in Alaska shall hereafter be disposed of except by lease, as hereinafter provided, and in any public lands hereafter alienated by the United States in Alaska there shall be reserved to the United States title to all coal deposits therein); and he is further authorized, empowered, and directed to cause coal mines to be opened and equipped on the public lands in Alaska so reserved, and to provide for the transportation, distribution, and sale of the products of the same to the Government railroad or railroads, to the United States Army and Navy, and other Government services, and to other purchasers.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Nevada what objection there would be on the part of the committee to accepting that amendment? You are endeavoring, as I understand it, to utilize the coal of Alaska for the benefit of the people of Alaska, to relieve them from onerous conditions which makes it rather hard for people to go into that country and open it up. What objection would you have to the Government standing on its rights and holding the balance equally, weighing it to a hair's breadth in justice as between the people and the lessee, the private owner, or the man who will hold it under lease for 50 years? If the committee and if this Congress want to protect the rights of the people in that coal and allow them to participate in the benefits from it, why not allow this? What objection would you have to accepting the proposition?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know whether or not the Senator was in the Chamber at the time, but I have just introduced an amendment which provides for that very purpose.

Mr. LANE. On Bering River, how much do you allow and how much is the total area?

Mr. PITTMAN. I once before stated that there are about 13,000 acres in that very field, according to the Geological Survey, of Bering coal, and that the Government has reserved 5,120 acres out of the 13,000 acres.

Mr. LANE. That is what I understood. In the event that by further discovery or investigation it is found that there is more than that in the Bering River region and more in Matanuska and in Nenana than is mentioned, the Government is circumscribed and bound to a certain definite acreage which is stated here. In the event that it is less, the Government will have the better of it, but you are taking the chance and there may be more. If you are trying to give them half, why not say so in the bill, as the Senator supposes he has done in his amendment? It seems to me that would be a good thing.

There is another thing to which I would like to call the attention of the Senate at this time. Here is a system of leasing for 50 years—a definite period. In all franchises which have been granted in this country it is found that in the latter half of the term of those franchises, the expiring period, the lessee or the person holding the franchise allows the property to deteriorate.

The franchises which were granted in Massachusetts in 1856 for an indeterminate period, with a provision that they should be subject to revocation at any time that the property was managed in a manner which would cause a just complaint to be lodged in a court of justice—in a State court or in a Federal court—that the very moment in which it could be proven that the property was not managed in the interest or was managed contrary to the interest of the general public, the franchise should cease to exist, are the best franchises that have ever been granted in this country, as nearly as I have been able to ascertain, after some study of the subject. Other franchises have given trouble. The owner of such a franchise or of such a lease, knowing that it would not be terminated so long as he kept faith with the people, would carry it on as nearly as he could justly, would keep the property in good shape, and would not allow it to deteriorate. There has never been one of those franchises as to which there has been a complaint lodged.

I was going to ask if you would consent to insert in the bill a provision to that effect, rather than to fix a period which always brings about that state of affairs in the expiring portion of a lease or a franchise. Why not insert a provision here whereby the lessee shall forfeit his lease at any time he does not comply with the terms of the agreement, making it forfeitable at that period when it can be proven in one of the duly constituted courts of law? Would the Senator have any objection to such a provision?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will discuss that later, and perhaps we may agree on something; but the amendment which has just been read we have before us, and I should like first to dispose of that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will not the Senator from Nevada tell the Senator from Oregon exactly what his amendment is? He did not state all of it to him.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the Senator from Oregon was here and heard my amendment stated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think he heard it.

Mr. PITTMAN. The other question I will take up a little later on. I think that is the orderly manner. I offered an amendment to take the place of the amendment which the Senator from Washington has offered, which is now to be voted on; and I think it covers the same ground.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have stated from the desk the amendment which the Senator from Nevada proposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The original section as perfected by the committee?

Mr. SHAFROTH. As perfected by the amendments which have been made up to this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Section 2 as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Nevada reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That after the execution of the surveys provided for in this act the President of the United States shall designate and reserve from use, location, sale, lease, or disposition not exceeding 5,120 acres of coal-bearing land in the Bering River field and not exceeding 7,680 acres of coal-bearing land in the Matanuska field, and not to exceed one-half of the other coal lands in Alaska: Provided, That the coal deposits in such reserved areas may be mined under the direction of the President when, in his opinion, the mining of such coal in such reserved areas, under the direction of the President, becomes necessary, by reason of an insufficient supply of coal at a reasonable price for the requirements of Government works, construction and operation of Government railroads, for the Navy, for national protection, and for relief from monopoly and oppressive conditions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to call attention to the fact that the words which have been inserted are "not to exceed one half of the other coal lands in Alaska."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if I may be allowed, those other coal lands are scattered through Alaska. Some of them are inside of the Arctic Circle, and there the people need coal perhaps worse than they do anywhere else. The quality of the coal is not quite so good, so far as I understand, and the original bill would allow free access to lessees to that coal. Now, it strikes me, and it has seemed to me—and I intended to say it this morning when I innocently caused the verbal combat between other Senators—that the amount of coal in Alaska is a limited quantity. There is an end to the coal measures; it is not a recurring crop; you can not go out and sow the seed and raise coal the same as you do corn or cotton or wheat or potatoes. It was put in the earth by nature for the benefit of mankind, not for you nor for myself nor for your neighbor or for mine, nor for your children nor for my children, but for our children's children clear on until the time when the trumpet sounds the expiration of the time of the existence of man on this earth. It is the duty of the Government, or those who represent the people to handle that limited supply of wealth for the benefit of all mankind. Believing that, as I do—and I believe it—I feel that it is our duty, that it is the duty of the Government, in relation to such articles as coal or other necessary resources—not gold, which is not nearly so necessary to the well-being of man as is iron—that we conserve them.

That is why I offered the amendment here a while ago that the Government should take control of these deposits, should mine them for the benefit of the people, and issue them to the people to the extent of their needs without allowing any man to seize upon them for his private benefit or private gain or for selfish profit—profit which would have to be repaid tenfold in the misery and the suffering of other people.

That is why I am asking now for the retention in the Government of at least one-half of the coal lands of Alaska, not by a guess as to their quantity. The assignment made in this bill may prove to be too much; it may prove to be less than one-half. It seems to me that the people who are to follow us and build up the country are entitled to at least half of the natural resources within our boundaries if they are unable to secure more.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does the Senator realize that the coal fields up there which are known now would supply the world at the present rate of consumption for more than 100 years and would supply the Pacific coast for 5,000 years? Does the Senator want that locked up all that time, waiting for 5,000 years?

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I was reading an article in one of the scientific journals the other day, in which there was shown a cut of a piece of mica. It was brown mica, such as many of you have noticed, with a spot, a radiating starlike looking spot, upon it, which has been noticed in mica for many years and which has always puzzled miners as to why it should be between the compact layers of the mica. A scientist in studying it out has found that it was made by the impingement of minute radioactive particles fired out by radium, or one of the subsalts less active than pure radium, and that it has taken to produce those spots, which are no larger than a copper penny in mica, which is one of the oldest substances known to geologists, 400,000,000 years. If the earth has been in existence that long—and it seems to prove that it has been in existence that long or thereabouts; you might leave off a hundred million or two hundred million years if you like; I am not particular about that; I would not insist upon it—but for the period in the future in which mankind is to live upon this earth without being ground down to some inefficient substitute in order to keep warm in winter, it might be well that we conserve our supply of coal to the extent that it may not be wasted and may last for the benefit of those who shall come after us.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon, who speaks of one-half being reserved, did it ever occur to him which half?

Mr. LANE. The best half, Mr. President.

Mr. WHITE. I mean under the amendment which has been proposed.

Mr. LANE. I will say, in reply to the Senator, that I have an idea that the half which the Government will get when the selection is made will be the leanest and the poorest half, and the most inaccessible and the hardest to mine. I have no hope that the Government will get the best of it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize that under this bill the President can select whichever half he thinks best? Will he not select the best half?

Mr. LANE. I do not think the President, as wonderful a man as he is, is a good judge of coal mines, and probably he will not be able to appoint a man who will guess well on the subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the amendment which I offered provides that the portion which the Government reserves shall contain one-half of the high-grade coal. I think that that is an important provision. So far as the statement of the Senator from Colorado is concerned, that there is enough coal in Alaska to supply the generations of the human race for 5,000 years, if that is true I should think that one-half of it would be enough to turn over to private ownership. It is not so much a question of how much coal is there to supply our people who need it now as it is a question of alienating it for indefinite periods. Under the terms of this bill, which provides for a renewal of the leases at the end of 50 years, perhaps the coal lands would be leased for all time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that, according to the Geological Survey report, there is enough coal in Colorado in private and public ownership together to supply the world for 300 years and more, and in Wyoming there is enough to supply the whole world for 441 years according to the present rate of consumption.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Most of that is in private ownership.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; hardly any of it is. Only 2.8 per cent of it is in private ownership in the State of Colorado. Although we have had liberal land laws under which the coal lands could have been taken up at $10 an acre for 50 years, yet only 2.8 per cent of it is in private ownership. I do not believe there is as much in private ownership in the State of Wyoming. The theory that we are going to have a coal famine does not appear to me to be tenable. You could not have a coal famine according to present indications, for——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Two or three centuries.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not only for two or three centuries, but for thousands and thousands of years.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We could have a coal famine a great deal sooner than that if we turned the ownership of coal lands over to private monopoly. One great trouble is the holding of the land undeveloped.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, you can not have monopoly in Alaska, because there is a statute applicable to that Territory which provides that no corporation, directly or indirectly, by any device whatsoever, shall own more than 2,560 acres under penalty of forfeiture.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has a great deal of faith in that statute, and I myself think it is a fine statute; but I have not nearly so much faith in its actual beneficial effects as has the Senator. We have a statute which provides that there shall not be a monopoly anywhere, that there shall not be combinations in restraint of trade; but we have monopolies in nearly all of the necessities of life, and we are taxed more by those monopolies than we are by the Government for the support of all its departments, notwithstanding the statute.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There has not been any attempt, Mr. President, to enforce the antitrust law to speak of until recently; but corporations are being limited right now, and under the Sherman Antitrust Act I have not any doubt there is going to be a great curb on monopoly in this country. Of course, when that antitrust statute was enacted very few thought there was any validity in it; nobody tried to enforce it; but a public sentiment has grown up against monopolies and combinations, and that statute is now being effectively enforced. So when we have a statute applicable to Alaska which prescribes that no corporation, by any combination of directors or otherwise, directly or indirectly, shall in any way or by any device own more than 2,560 acres, it seems to me that if we have any confidence in our courts or any confidence in our public officials that limitation will be just as effective as a part of the general statutes as if it were made a part of a lease.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have a letter from the Director of the Bureau of Mines in response to a direct inquiry, in which he states:

> The explorations made up to date indicate an area for the Bering River coal field of something more than 50 square miles and for the Matanuska coal field of probably 75 square miles, making a total of 125 to 150 square miles for the two fields.

Of course, as has already been stated, that is a mere estimate—the actual area of coal-bearing lands can not be accurately determined—and so it is all the more important that there should be a provision which should be elastic enough to cover conditions as they develop.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. I see that the amendment of the Senator, at the top of page 2, empowers and directs the President to cause coal mines to be equipped, opened, and so forth. Does not the Senator think it would be well to leave out the word "directed" at this time? I should like to suggest that amendment to the Senator. If he would consent to leave the direction out, I think there would be less objection to his amendment. It occurs to me that we are anticipating conditions somewhat to direct the President at this time to go into Alaska and operate coal mines. I think the purpose would be subserved if the discretion were lodged in the President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course the Senator will observe that there is no requirement in the amendment as to the extent of the operation which the Government is directed to undertake. As we all know from experience—and the Senator has commented on it many a time—we sometimes have subordinate officials in charge of these affairs who are quite unreasonable, but at the same time, on account of the enormous avalanche of work, the administration frequently has to be guided by the action and advice of such officials. So I thought that it was a great deal better not to leave to their discretion the question of opening some coal mines, for the reason that the Government will soon be constructing a railroad in Alaska, which will consume a large quantity of coal both in its construction and in its operation, and the economy of using coal which lies in beds alongside of the railway lines, both being owned by the Government, is so obvious and so conclusive that it seems to me the use of it ought to be prescribed by Congress and not left to the discretion of any official.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, the trouble is that the President is directed to open coal mines. That provision will take effect on the passage of his bill. The railroad which we are going to have built, as the Senator knows, will not be in operation for years. Thirty-five million dollars have been appropriated for that railroad, but no work has yet been done on it, so far as we know. We know the slowness with which that great enterprise must necessarily be carried on. So it seems to me it would be a mistake at this time to direct the President, when there is no exigency demanding it and when we do not know what the expense would be, to open and begin the operation of coal mines. I think the amendment would be in better form if there were left out the direction to the President to enter at once upon this work, and it were left in his discretion to proceed along that line whenever the exigency should occur or the necessity arise. The President, of course, would act, under the powers granted in the bill, without the directing clause, if the occasion should demand that he so act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will call attention to one further fact, and then I will conclude. The Senator gives an effect to the word "directed" there which I think the amendment does not contemplate. I do not think the amendment requires the President to start immediately; in fact, it does not say when he shall enter upon the work. The truth of the matter is that it still leaves, notwithstanding the use of the word "directed," very wide discretion in the President, in reality complete discretion, as to the time when he shall enter upon this work and the extent to which he shall go.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. For the present I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON. I announce my pair as on the previous vote and my reason for voting, and vote "nay."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). For the second time to-day I have voted forgetful of the fact that my pair is out of the city. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], contingent upon the absence of either of us from the city. Under those circumstances I shall be obliged to withdraw my vote.

Mr. STONE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER. I make the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer and vote "nay."

Mr. GORE. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN. I have a pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEA of Tennessee (after having voted in the negative). I notice that the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] has not voted, so I withdraw my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The result was—yeas 11, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Ashurst	Clapp	Lane	Perkins
Borah	Jones	Martine, N. J.	Poindexter

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the amendment of the Senator from Washington the yeas are 11 and the nays are 35, Senators REED, GORE, OWEN, and LEA of Tennessee being present in the Chamber and constituting a quorum; so the amendment is lost.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to perfect the section, to come in at the end of section 8, on page 17.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, at the end of section 8, it is proposed to insert a new section, 8a, as follows:

> 8a. If any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, with consent of lessee, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal entered into by the lessee, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres in the Territory of Alaska, the lease thereof shall be forfeited by appropriate court proceedings.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will state that that is practically an amendment which is on the table, offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. It has been changed in some particulars.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am very glad to see that the Senator has offered it. It is almost identical with the amendment I proposed on yesterday.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I tried to make it as nearly identical as possible. There are only a few little changes of language that I have offered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment which has just been read at the desk is practically the same as the amendment to section 8 offered by the Senator from Washington, which is printed and on our desks?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I so understand.

Mr. BORAH. What is the difference between the two, if any? The Senator's amendment has not been printed, has it?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I simply took the printed amendment of the Senator from Washington and struck out some words and interlined others.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand that amendment, it says that "no coal land shall be subleased nor in any way whatsoever used for speculative purposes."

Mr. PITTMAN. The words "speculative purposes" are stricken out.

Mr. BORAH (reading):

And if any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination——

Mr. PITTMAN. That part there, "in any way effect," is stricken out.

Mr. BORAH. What I was seeking to arrive at was whether or not you proposed to put the proposition of controlling monopolies in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable him by regulations, and so forth, under the lease, to forfeit the lease, or whether you proposed to turn the parties over to the courts and to enforce the law of monopoly in Alaska the same as we are supposed to enforce it elsewhere in the courts?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state to the Senator that this bill allows the department to place in the lease certain conditions necessary to protect the property from waste, to protect the welfare of labor, to protect the Government, and also to protect as against monopoly. There are numerous provisions in the bill protecting against monopoly, and there is a provision of forfeiture in the event that these conditions are violated, such forfeiture to be enforced in a court of proper jurisdiction. This is just an additional condition that will go in those leases.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me that this addition is calculated to confuse the situation with reference to enforcing the law against monopoly. I am frank to say that about the only thing relative to the business which has commended itself to my judgment has been the possibility of a speedy and constant supervisory power of the Secretary of the Interior over that situation. If we are going to have a leasing system, and have no other protection with reference to monopoly in the coal fields and the working of the coal mines of Alaska than that which would arise by reason of the fact that we would prosecute them in the courts, in my judgment there is not very much left to the virtue of this leasing system.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is not an exclusive method of protecting against trusts. All the acts with regard to trusts that would affect those properties, or any action with regard to them, are still in force and effect with regard to them. This is simply an additional protection. In other words, the protection is included in the lease itself, which distinctly goes on to state that if the leases are used to assist any monopoly they shall be forfeited. I do not see why the Senator complains of that. That is one of the advantages of the leasing system. Where you dispose of property outright, your sole remedy then is under the general law, by fine or imprisonment or dissolution of the combination. Your remedy under a lease is the termination of the business by the forfeiture of the lease, the very subject of the trust. I believe that is one of the strongest arguments we have in favor of the leasing system.

Mr. BORAH. That argument has always been one of the strong arguments advanced in favor of the leasing system; that is to say, that we could not sufficiently protect the situation as against monopoly and the control of prices by those holding the coal fields in the courts or under the general law.

Mr. PITTMAN. We have had great difficulty in doing so.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. Now then, if notwithstanding the leasing system we must still depend ultimately for the enforcement of the antimonopoly law upon the courts, instead of upon a forfeiture on the part of the lessor, it seems to me that those who are supporting the leasing system concede that after all there is not so very much in the proposition that you must have a leasing system in order to protect yourself against monopoly.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is just an additional punishment. If the Senator does not desire any additional punishment for monopoly, his contention would be very good.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not so anxious about additional punishment for monopoly as I am for an exhibition of some punishment for monopoly.

Mr. PITTMAN. This would be open to the assistance of the Senator in the enforcement of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Idaho that a prime consideration with those who are in a way responsible for the drafting of this bill was to have it so drawn that it would not be within the power and the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to cancel this lease whenever he saw fit to do so; in other words, that he was not to be the complainant that a forfeiture of the lease had been incurred, and himself the court before which that complaint should be tried. Therefore it was provided that the lease could not be forfeited except by the decree of a court having jurisdiction; and the District Court of the Territory of Alaska was given jurisdiction over an action brought for the cancellation of the lease. Now, this is an additional ground of forfeiture—the utilization of the lease for the purpose of creating a monopoly. It is just the same as any other breach of the condition of the lease. The breach is not to be determined by the Secretary, who is really the complainant, and who is going to be the trial judge. If he contends that that provision has been violated he must go into the court and have the matter adjudicated, the same as in the case of any other violation of a covenant.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as I understand the law, when this bill shall have been passed, it will not be within the power of the Secretary of the Interior at any time, of his own volition or of his own motion, to punish in any way, by forfeiture or otherwise, for what is supposed to be a monopolistic practice on the part of the lessee?

Mr. WALSH. No, sir; and it was never intended that he should have that power; and as far as I am concerned I shall never vote to give him that power. Furthermore, I venture to say that if any such power is ever lodged in the Secretary of the Interior no man would ever take a lease, and in my judgment he would not have good business sense if he did so.

Mr. BORAH. I venture to say that if that is true there will be no difference, so far as the public is concerned, between the enforcement of the law against monopoly in Alaska under a leasing system and its enforcement if these mines were permitted to go to private ownership. If you must resort to the same procedure, the same delay, the same expense of litigation, and the same court when the lands are under lease that you would have to if they were under private ownership, the public will be in precisely the same position with reference to protection against monopoly under a leasing system that it would be under private ownership.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, not so. Under the existing system, if property owned in fee becomes the subject of an unlawful trust, the title to that property is not forfeited. The property was not taken away from the stockholders of the Standard Oil Co. when it was adjudged to be an unlawful trust. It remained in the stockholders. The Government did not attempt to forfeit any property. Now, however, under the leasing system and under this provision, if the leasehold interest shall become the subject of a trust, and it shall be so adjudicated, the right is absolutely forfeited and reverts to the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the protection of the public from monopoly will not be accentuated nor supported in any particular whatever by the mere fact of the forfeiture of title. In my judgment, it is simply an additional form of punishment. In the Tobacco case the decision of the Supreme Court was, in effect, a forfeiture of the property, because it decided that if the defendants did not conform to the decree within a certain time their property could be placed in the hands of a receiver and denied the right to enter the channels of interstate trade, which to them was practically the same as the forfeiture of their property. So the punishment was direct and specific and condign, and just as specific as it would be under any possible lease, so far as this law is concerned.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire of the Senator from Idaho, if the Senator will yield——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana had the floor when this debate started.

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator, if I have the floor. Have I?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana had the floor when it started. The Chair does not know who has the floor now.

Mr. WALSH. Then I desire to say that the result of that would be that the property would be sold and the proceeds would be divided, if it passed into the hands of a receiver for the purpose of sale, and the avails of the sale would go to the stockholders. Here there would be nothing to sell, nothing to go into the hands of a receiver, but the title would be forfeited.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, I see that; but I do not see how the public would be in any different position, with reference to being protected against monopolistic practices or vices, under this system than under private ownership. I had supposed that it was intended to give the Secretary of the Interior some power to deal summarily with a party who was found in connection or in close association or in propinquity with a monopoly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nevada what is the significance of the words which he has inserted in line 9 and line 11 of the amendment of which I gave notice, "with consent of lessee" and "entered into by the lessee," where it says:

If any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or are in any wise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, with consent of lessee, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal entered into by the lessee—

That is evidently a limitation upon the provision. The words as they were before were applicable to "any combination in the form of an unlawful trust," or any occasion when they "form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade." Now, that has been limited by inserting the words "with consent of lessee" and "entered into by the lessee."

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall be glad to answer the Senator as to my object in changing it from the way it was before. It is this: The amendment reads, "or in any wise controlled by any combination." Now, if one of these lessees was involuntarily controlled by a combination, if his leasehold fell under the control of a combination involuntarily, we will say, in any way, not with the lessee's consent or with his approval—which, I take it, would mean the same thing—I think it would be entirely unfair to forfeit that lessee's claim if he was in no way responsible for that matter, if it was beyond his control. That is all I am getting at. If the Senator can think of language any more definite, I should be pleased to have him suggest it; but I do not think a lessee should forfeit his claim if he is controlled by a combination when he has no power to prevent it. That is the only object of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He could not be controlled by a combination in restraint of trade unless he was a part of the combination. Otherwise he would be an independent. I suppose all independent operators suffer to a certain extent from the effect of overpowering monopoly, but they are not called a part of the monopoly because they are affected in that way.

It seems to me to be rather a dangerous complication of the language to insert those words in it. There is no danger of the Secretary of the Interior or of any court punishing the victim of the combination as a part of the combination.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator that I did not like the language there, "in any wise controlled by any combination." I think it is indefinite, and I think the expression "form a part of any combination" is sufficiently definite.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, why not leave all this matter to the trade commission? It is under the jurisdiction of the trade commission. Let it control the situation.

Mr. PITTMAN. The only reason for that is that I believe in being definite wherever we can.

Now, as far as the other amendment is concerned—

Or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal—

A lease might be the subject of a contract between third parties, and certainly the lessee is not to be blamed for a contract entered into between third parties. I simply make the provision there so that the lessee, to be bound by the transaction, must be a party to the transfer. A transportation company might enter into a contract with which the lessee had nothing to do, a contract that they would not carry this coal, or they would not carry other coal, or that they would agree on a price for carrying coal.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada a question before he takes his seat. There are two well-known rules by which a lessee can transfer the interest in his estate. One is by sublease and the other is by transferring or assigning the lease.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. Is there any reason, in the Senator's mind, for leaving out the other method, that of transferring or assigning the lease?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is not left out. The way it reads now is this:

If any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or are in any wise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, with consent of lessee, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal entered into by the lessee—

That is the way it reads.

Mr. WHITE. I understand; but having used the term "subleased," and not using the other term, I wanted to know if there was any purpose in omitting it.

Mr. PITTMAN. The word "leased"?

Mr. WHITE. No; the words "transferred or assigned."

Mr. PITTMAN. There was no purpose at all in it. In reading it the other language seemed to me to control it, and I adopted entirely the language of the Senator from Washington, because it seemed to me sufficient.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. POINDEXTER rose.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will ask the Senator to yield, if he will, because this is simply another amendment, simply to perfect it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order that the other matter is before the Senate, undisposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will rise.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, is it in order to offer an amendment to that amendment? If so, I offer the original amendment proposed by me as a substitute for the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the Senator from Nevada the Senator from Washington proposes to insert the following:

SEC. 8a. That no coal land shall be subleased nor in any way whatsoever used for speculative purposes; and if any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination or are in any wise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres in the Territory of Alaska, the lease thereof shall be canceled, and said individual, partnership, association, or corporation shall forfeit the right thereafter of obtaining lands under lease under the provisions of this act.

Mr. WALSH. I should like the attention of the Senator from Washington. I find it a little difficult to understand what the significance of the first part of this amendment is:

That no coal lands shall be subleased—nor in any way whatsoever used for speculative purposes.

Of course that is plain—

Just exactly what would that mean?

Furthermore, Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Washington that no penalty is attached to using it for speculative purposes; no consequence ensues. It seems to me that the words "no coal lands shall be subleased nor in any way whatsoever used for speculative purposes and" might be taken out, so that it would read, "That if any of the land or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed," and so on, the amendment would have exactly the same significance. I will say to the Senator there is another provision which forbids the subleasing of the land without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That, at the worst, would be a mere repetition and would do no harm. If any mere distinction of verbiage of that kind is needed, it could be very easily perfected in conference or otherwise. It is a prohibition against subleasing and against using for speculative purposes. There are other provisions in the bill which would enable the Secretary of the Interior to include prohibitions of that kind, if authorized by the law, in the lease. The more important part of the amendment is that which has been spoken of already by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which, in my opinion, is necessary to make it really effective; that is, to give power to the Government to take possession of this land and take it out of the hands of a monopoly. The antitrust law of the country contains some more or less drastic provisions, apparently, but through the course of procedure in the courts they have been rendered rather ineffective. The prohibition of monopoly is the most difficult thing the Government has undertaken, and unless the laws relating to it are stringent and the remedies are more or less drastic and the means of using those remedies are plainly given it would be no use whatever to adopt them.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I am anxious to vote for a practical leasing system in Alaska, but if this amendment shall be adopted I want to call the attention of the Senate to what I consider are some of the dangers of it and some of the reasons why it is thoroughly impracticable.

There is no danger of any trust where there is any great risk. If there had been no Dukes and Liggetts and Myers and Reynolds and other people who developed the tobacco business over all the stages of its risks and dangers, and through all the experimental stages, there would not have been any Tobacco Trust. If there had been no Gates and Carnegies and Schwabs who took the chance and brought to bear the individual initiative and inventive genius, there never would have been any Steel Trust.

In the incipient stages of the development of Alaska coal under the leasing system, with all the detective forces in the United States, you can not find any trust in that country. They do not go where there is any risk to run. They wait until the energy, the initiative, the brain, the muscle, and the work of somebody else do the development; then, if they find it pays, the trust comes in and puts in its money or floats its bond issue and pours in the water, and you have the trust.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is mistaken about the fact as to there being no trusts in Alaska.

Mr. CHILTON. I am speaking about the chances of a trust in the coal business under the provisions of this bill, as reported. I want to vote to relieve the people in Alaska who are suffering for coal. I want this leasing system, if we adopt it, to be practical and to work. I want the enterprising people of Alaska and the States to take these leases and develop that coal. If you make it so that the poor man can not go there and make a little money, you are not going to have any development, and the whole thing will be a complete farce and a failure; and the leasing system will be condemned when it ought not to be, because it will not have had a fair chance.

The opening of coal mines is not any play business; it is not any easy business; it has its risks, and it requires a man of knowledge and experience and capacity to do it. If any people go there to develop the coal they will go for the purpose of trying to make some money by developing some kind of legitimate business. If you put every kind of a condition upon these leases, you weight them down so that these men can not get reasonable credit upon the intangible property which they will get from the Government, to wit, the right to mine coal from a piece of land. If they do not have reasonable conditions in the lease by which they can go into the markets or to the banks and get money there will be none of these leases worked; there will be no application for them and no competitive bidding.

Mr. President, to talk about a monopoly of the coal business in the United States, it seems to me, is going away into the future. It will be at that time when something will come along that is big enough to absorb the great fields of the country and take them over, and then the Sherman law and the Clayton bill will prevent the monopoly. Probably there might be some places where the coal business is in a way controlled by local conditions or by some market conditions, but there is too much coal in this country under development and in the control of thousands of different concerns to make a trust now possible. West Virginia has enough coal to supply the United States for many, many years to come, and it is of the highest grade; so has Colorado, Kentucky, and Wyoming; so has the State of Pennsylvania. If West Virginia can get her coals to market, she can supply the navies and the factories of the world with anything that comes under the head of bituminous coal, and with that coal the greatest economies can be secured. The high records in our Navy have been made with her coal; and it has gone to the front upon merit. It will be too far in the future to be the subject of legislation now when coal is scarce in West Virginia or the United States.

Of course, that does not do Alaska any good, since the people up there are paying $8, $10, and $15 a ton for coal, because it costs that much to take the coal there from the States. So the coal land that is there should be developed. I want to have it developed, and it will never be developed, Mr. President, under a leasing system if we put all these impractical conditions upon the leases which the Government will make, so that the man who has a mine can not raise the money to develop it properly.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question? If the Senator be correct in the proposition that there is no danger of a monopoly in Alaska——

Mr. CHILTON. I did not say that. I said that in its incipient stages you will find no trust there taking any leases from the Government. They take no such chances. Probably in the distant future, after men have gone there under proper leases and have developed the coal business, you will find a trust coming along with pockets full of money and a few buckets of water, and they may try to form a corporation and make a trust.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator be correct in his proposition, this provision could not hurt anybody. If there are no trusts there, if there are no monopolies there, this provision which the Senator from Washington is seeking to have incorporated in the bill could not possibly affect anybody, because it only affects those who have formed a combination or a monopoly. It would not be any embarrassment to anybody carrying on a legitimate business or to those whom the Senator speaks of as developing the matter in its incipient stages. It would only apply when the men got there who, he says, come in due course of time.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks the amendment adds anything to the Sherman law?

Mr. BORAH. No; I think——

Mr. CHILTON. Then what is the use of putting it in the bill?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that it does, except that it is a specific proposition for the forfeiture of the lease.

Mr. CHILTON. Then, if hereafter you——

Mr. BORAH. I think it has about the same effect on the Sherman law as the Clayton bill.

Mr. CHILTON. The Clayton bill is a great deal better than it has ever been given credit for, and it will stand on its own legs when we come to the discussion in the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I have not discovered any legs on which it could stand.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator was not looking for legs; he was looking for trouble. If the Senator will look for legs and teeth, he will find plenty of them.

Mr. President, I just want to ask the Senator this question: When the time comes that there is danger of a trust, or if a trust should actually exist in the Territory of Alaska, and this should be the law, would the Senator proceed against the trust under this law or the Sherman antitrust law? Certainly you can not have both of them at the same time.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, you could; because this is in reference to the power of the Secretary of the Interior himself to forfeit the lease. That is a more expedient, summary method of disposing of the proposition, and if the Secretary of the Interior had knowledge of it he would not have to wait for the Department of Justice to bring an action. It is simply adding a more summary proceeding with reference to the disposition of the matter in case a trust is formed.

Mr. CHILTON. Then why not amend the Sherman law generally by providing that whenever the Secretary of the Interior finds any other kind of a trust he shall dissolve it. Why shall we vest in the Secretary of the Interior the power that is now vested in the Supreme Court of the United States? Does not the Senator think that that would be dangerous?

Mr. BORAH. The whole argument in favor of this leasing system before the people of the country has been that through the summary action of the Secretary of the Interior he can deal more effectively with those who are trying to monopolize, by combinations, the coal lands and the output therefrom. If there is nothing but the general provisions of the law which already apply to Alaska, if you are simply going to rely upon the general provision to destroy monopoly, why not permit this coal first to go to private ownership? The only question you have left is the mere question of getting more revenue out of it.

Mr. CHILTON. Then the Senator's position is to vest jurisdiction in the Secretary of the Interior to enforce the antitrust laws in Alaska as to the public domain.

Mr. BORAH. No; not at all.

Mr. CHILTON. It is part of it.

Mr. BORAH. I would invest the Secretary of the Interior with power to cancel a lease for a certain reason, and that reason is that he shall discover a combination or a trust. Now, as the lessor of the Government he has charge of the matter, and I would simply vest him with power to take care of the leases upon certain terms and conditions.

Mr. CHILTON. Would the Senator vest in the Secretary of the Interior the same power as to all homestead lands and as to all grants by the Government?

Mr. BORAH. If it was a leasing system, undoubtedly.

Mr. CHILTON. Why not in regard to a grant? Why let an individual take a piece of land from the Government and not put in a condition that if at any time he uses it with a trust or with the grantee to propagate a trust the Secretary of the Interior shall forfeit the grant? Why do you want to do that with a leasehold and not with a grant? Both are really grants from the Government, and a trust clause that is good for one ought to be good for the other.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think that has very much relevancy to this situation, because we are now dealing with the proposition of leasing purely and simply; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that when the title passes to that land, the manner of dealing with the land, and so forth, becomes a matter for the State to deal with entirely and not the National Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. POINDEXTER. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], I vote "nay."

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair that I made on the last vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I inquire whether the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have a general pair with that Senator and withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote, unless it is necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With the same transfer of my pair that I have made before to-day, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN. While I am paired, I should like to be counted for a quorum.

The roll call resulted—yeas 12, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Borah	Jones	Martine, N. J.	Perkins
Brady	Lane	Nelson	Poindexter

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] the yeas are 12 and the nays are 35. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] are in the Chamber and constitute a quorum. The amendment is rejected. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I propose the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask that the same be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 12, page 20, line 3, after the words "undue waste," it is proposed to insert:

Including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency, provisions securing the workers complete freedom of purchase, requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to secure fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner.

Mr. ASHURST. The proposed amendment was prepared by Representative LEWIS of Maryland, and is substantially the same as that adopted by the House and placed upon the bill (H. R. 16136) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium. It occurs to me that we should write into this proposed law a requirement that the leases shall contain the provisions as specified in my amendment, for this reason: When parties appear before the Secretary of the Interior attempting to secure a lease it may be that they will not display much solicitude as to requirements and provisions regarding the safety of labor. We do not know in the long years to come just who will be Secretary of the Interior, and it seems to me that adequately to protect labor we should, as the other House did, insert in the bill the amendment I have just offered.

The provision for "freedom of purchase" means that the laborers shall not be subjected to the odious scrip or "boletta" system which is common in some mining camps. In other words, the amendment simply looks toward the better protection of the men who dig the coal out of the ground. The justice of my amendment seems so obvious that argument appears unnecessary.

It may be urged, however, if any Senator should oppose the amendment, that section 12 fully covers the matter, but I doubt if it does. Section 12 simply provides:

That no lease issued under authority of this act shall be assigned except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property, a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed shall be observed, and such other provisions as are needed for the protection of the interests of the United States.

There is, in the bill, no specific mandate requiring that these beneficent provisions for the protection of labor, as set out in my amendment, shall be incorporated into and made a part of the law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I did not catch the full reading of the amendment. Has the Senator a copy of the amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask the Secretary again to state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 12, page 20, line 3, after the words "undue haste," it is proposed to insert the words:

Including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency, provisions securing the workers complete freedom of purchase, requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to secure fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I know of no objection to that amendment. I have heard no one make objection to that character of amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. To come in after the amendment just adopted, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment last agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

And every such lease granted under the provisions of this act shall also be upon the conditions that the lessee will at all times sell the coal extracted from the leased premises at just, fair, and reasonable rates, and without any discrimination in price or otherwise, as to persons or places; that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, upon its own initiative, or upon the complaint of an aggrieved party, have the same power to pass upon, determine, and prescribe the present and future rates at which the coal shall be sold by the lessee as is given the said commission by the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, in respect to the transportation rates charged by common carriers; and that the lessee will conform to the rates prescribed by the said commission.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that this amendment is similar to a provision contained in Senate bill 9955, reported in the Sixty-first Congress from the Committee on Public Lands. I know that the committee at that time gave the matter very careful consideration, and my recollection is that it was a unanimous report of the committee.

The amendment has for its purpose the fair treatment of the consumers of Alaskan coal. It is a provision in the interest of the consumers, looking toward reasonable prices for the coal to those who are really interested in the development of the Alaskan coal mines.

The provision places this matter under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is done because that commission has had a great deal of experience along this line and has had to do with matters in regard to prices and rates.

In a bill which passed the House a short time ago, and which is now pending in this body, it is attempted to place in the hands of the Secretary of War the right to regulate prices at which energy developed by water power may be sold. In my judgment that will simply result in creating another bureau in the War Department, because there is nobody there now who is expert in the matter of rates. So, if we should attempt to give the Secretary of the Interior the power which my amendment proposes to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission, it would result in the building up of another bureau in the Interior Department. Therefore the amendment gives this authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which now has to do with matters of this kind, and which, I think, can handle them with very little more expense to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I trust the Senate will thoroughly understand the nature of the amendment now offered by the Senator from Washington. If I have gauged correctly the general trend of the sentiment of this body, the amendment will receive very little support. I myself am unequivocally opposed to the amendment.

A certain school of thought in this country advances the idea that we ought to have great monopolies, enormous aggregations of capital, combinations of all kinds engaged in handling our industries, and that the right way to take care of the situation is for the Government to regulate the prices at which they shall sell their products. I do not think that public sentiment approves that general doctrine. This amendment is an application of that theory. The idea is that perhaps, in some way or other, monopolistic conditions may come to exist in connection with the production and sale of coal in Alaska; that competitive conditions will not regulate prices, and that it will be necessary for some governmental agency to fix the prices at which the coal can be sold.

Mr. President, this bill is framed on an entirely different theory. This bill is framed upon the theory that, as yet at least, we may confidently rely upon competition to regulate prices and to bring those prices down to the level of a fair return upon the money invested in the enterprise. So it has been provided, for the purpose of taking care of competition, that no person or association shall acquire more than 2,560 acres of coal land in Alaska. It is confidently expected that at least three or four operators will go into the Bering River field and that from half a dozen to a dozen operators will go into the Matanuska field; so that the Matanuska field will be competing against the Bering River field and the latter against the former; and the individual operators in the Bering field will be competing against each other, and so with the individual operators in the Matanuska field.

We have just adopted a drastic provision the effect of which will be to forfeit every lease that is controlled by any combination which is a conspiracy in restraint of trade or which falls into the hands of a monopoly.

Mr. President, I feel that we have provided all the safeguards that are necessary, and that it is not at all essential that we now take the step which embarks this Government on the proposition of regulating the prices of commodities. We have not only taken that position, but we have provided for the construction of railroads in the Territory of Alaska into the various coal fields there, so that not even a monopoly of railroad and other transportation facilities can be enjoyed or can be seized by anyone for the purpose of establishing a monopoly.

If we get half a dozen operators in the Matanuska field and four or five in the Bering River field, and there is a Government railroad there which will offer exactly the same opportunities and facilities to each operator, we have done everything that we ought to try to do at this time to assure that only fair prices shall be received for coal; in other words, we have done everything that can be done under a competitive system; and let us not go into the general subject of price regulation by the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, my purpose in voting for this bill is to try to help the people of Alaska. I confess that I do not like it. I shall vote for it as being the best possible thing that we can do under present conditions. If you keep loading down your leases with all sorts of handicaps, the poor man will have just about as much chance in Alaska as he would have on Fifth Avenue in New York City.

You can not develop a country by holding it under foreign landlordism. The worst landlord in the world is the one that has the most heads and the fewest hearts. With the Government sending out its emissaries, each one anxious to make a reputation for himself, in his devotion to his public duty he must find daily some fault with somebody. Our wealth, our prosperity, the other side of the Rocky Mountains—yes; from this side on—has never grown under any such conditions as those, and Alaska, having less people to-day than it had 20 years ago, when we pass a few more "beneficent" measures like this it will have much less population than it has to-day.

We start out and go wild about a monopoly of things in a vast country, and we speak of a day's labor when the day lasts six months in a part of Alaska. [Laughter.] That is what we are doing, under the fervor of excitement and hysteria, to protect things. The fear of being called in favor of monopoly, if we talk common sense, makes us all accede to propositions which we know very well, or ought to know, are not going to help the purpose I have in voting for this bill, and that is to give Alaska and her people some chance, so that through the exercise of their individual American rights, with the acquisition of property, the individual poor man can have a chance in this the only unoccupied part now of our American possessions.

There is not a man who is going to take a lease in Alaska under this bill, in my judgment, who is not eminently able to do it as much so as if he were a corporation. He will not have to make a combination with anybody. He can take leases. These other men can not borrow a dollar under leaseholds that the Secretary of the Treasury, if he happened to be indignant at the gentlemen—I am not speaking of the Secretary personally; I am speaking of the office—could forfeit.

I will not advert to some things that happened under the administration of the last Secretary of the Interior, because I do not wish to make any invidious distinctions; but Alaska has got to be developed by getting into Alaska the bone and the sinew and the courage of the young American who is seeking to make his afterlife a better condition than the one into which he was born, and to do for his children more than his parents could do for him. Under these influences alone will we ever develop the highest possible character of American citizenship. The ownership, the feeling that "this is mine," is the inspiration of the home.

You have gotten it so that you write so many conditions in a lease that anybody can threaten to go to court with you at any time; and any four of us, with no money, going out to get a coal mine in Alaska to supply a want felt everywhere there, can not mine a pound or a ton of it unless we have the money in our pockets then and there to pay for it, or else do it with our individual hands. They will never do it under this bill, in my judgment.

At the risk of being charged with "standing in" with the monopolists that are trying to take everything, I do not believe they are going to try to take the coal lands of Alaska now, because the public sentiment has been awakened to conditions, and we are looking back 20 years at the most outrageous thefts of public lands and applying the situation then to to-day. The public conscience has been awakened in the meantime, and the public eye is alert to discover any effort to monopolize any of the resources of our country. The statute read by the Senator from Colorado applying to Alaska shows that they are in the very van of modern progress in the suppression of these monopolistic tendencies that have put the country in a condition which we all deplore.

I have lived in a Territory for thirty-odd years, and to-day, in my judgment, as I think every Senator here who has been through the same experience will testify, the governmental interference with our natural State possessions, the great withdrawals of lands—some of them reasonable enough, but administered very poorly—have taken out of the State the only thing on which the State could subsist; so if you find from now on, in any country anywhere, that the Government holds inviolate in its own name 50 per cent of the land within its borders you have a State condemned to stagnation. They can not live on it. You are now writing the epitaph on every hope of the Alaskan by throwing a thousand restrictions around him. The only beneficence in this bill, as far as I can see, is to give the poor devil who is freezing to death a right that has been prohibited heretofore—to go and dig some coal himself if he wants it.

You are giving him a permit to do a thing that everybody has had a right to do ever since the great mass of the population started across the Mississippi River.

So, my friends, your hope of developing Alaska under restricted holdings is a mistake. You will not build up any country in the world on leasehold title. It has been already admitted that the very same provisions could be inserted in a deed. It seems to me that all this leasing business is needless. You can just as well put a proper provision in a deed to coal lands restricting the holding. You can restrict it as just suggested by the last amendment, if you please. You can say that whenever the property shall come within a combination or a trust the title shall be forfeited; yet, as long as it is not forfeited, you give the man with the fee-simple title a chance to raise money to develop his claim.

No poor man can go into Alaska or anywhere else without the aid of somebody with money to open up those great resources. Whether the bill is going to do what is promised for it or not, I do not know. My purpose in getting up was to warn the Senate that instead of developing Alaska and giving the people a chance and letting the balance of the United States receive, if possible, some benefit from their enterprise, you had better be as liberal as you can with those people who are undergoing the hardships in a rugged climate and an unproductive soil, largely, say whatever you please about it. You had better give them some sort of a chance to build an American Commonwealth of individual, free men, who own their own property, for which they will fight and build homes wherein they will die in peace, after living in some sort of prosperity.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, who understands this bill probably better than I do, what particular merit there is in it. What good will come to anyone from it?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, that is problematical.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there is a good feature in the bill, I want to know what it is.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, it lets a man go and get some coal to put in his own fireplace.

Mr. McCUMBER. It lets who get it—the individual?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. The poor man? Can he get it under this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It will give him the right to go and get a little coal.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, it will give him the right to go and get it; but can he get a lease unless he has the money, the backing, and the credit to go in there and open up those mines upon a big scale? Can he go into a little mine in Alaska himself, with a few laborers, and develop it and make anything out of it by mining under this leasing system?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am free to say to the Senator that I do not think it is possible for him to do it. I suggested in the opening of the few remarks I had to make that this is tending to the very monopoly of which they complain, when they throw such restrictions around leases, and make the lease live on such tender roots, if you please, that it may be at once killed, and I suggested that the Secretary himself could do it. It will take a man who does not have to go into a combination with anybody, who can avoid combination with other people, with plenty of money, to develop the mine and put up the money for it. The leaseholders under this bill will necessarily be rich men; and instead of developing the country I am afraid it will retard its development.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, Mr. President, after all, the Senator has not found any good in this bill so far as it affects the particular individuals that he desires to reach—the young men who go to Alaska to develop it?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. It may benefit some one who has the wealth of a mighty corporation in the beginning by enabling him to develop that country.

Now, let me follow this by another question. The Senator has indicated quite clearly that he votes for this bill not because he does not believe it to be more or less vicious, but because he does not wish to be considered as casting his vote in such a way that it will look as though he was in favor of monopoly or some great corporation.

Mr. President, if we are influenced by that, has not the time arrived when we ought to have the courage as Senators to vote our convictions? Is it not far better that this bill should be defeated to-day, until we have reached the amount of courage where we dare vote for the right and present our case to the American people? Is it not bad policy to saddle upon the whole country a system of governmental authority and landlordism that probably, if it is once initiated, will remain over it for a century? Is it not better that we should strike that down now and wait until either we have gained the courage or the American people shall have gained the knowledge under which we can vote as we think is right? Should we not vote it down now, and trust that in a short time we may get a bill that will be satisfactory to the Senator from Arizona and that will be just and fair to the people of the great Territory of Alaska?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I am afraid my interest in what the Senator has said has led me inadvertently to forget the question.

I did not mean to be understood as saying that I was individually dodging or expressing any particular fear of what might be said as to me personally, as to whether or not my vote would be considered as "standing in" with corporations in this day of excitement, because I have had occasion to say as much against them—and say it truthfully—as probably any man in the Senate. I have seen the baleful effects of these trusts and combinations, as all of us have seen them. It is now the common experience of mankind.

I was speaking of the matter in this light: A fear of corporate power, trusts, and combinations getting possession of these lands leads us to take steps that otherwise we might deliberate longer before taking. Probably we are justified in that caution by recent history. My point, though, just as suggested in the first part of the Senator's question, is that the monopoly that we are all talking against, that every one of us honestly desires to see eliminated, not only in Alaska but everywhere else, is not going to be eliminated by this bill. You are putting so many conditions in this miserable leasehold that you will encourage the existence of monopoly itself in the leasehold. Then, when you try to restrict the price that the coal shall bring in the market by edict of the Secretary of the Interior or the President, or any other man on earth, you have made it impossible for any young man, or any man except one with money enough to meet exigencies and charge what he pleases, to go there; and if he has not a contract beforehand as to what shall be charged, then nobody will mine the coal at all. As suggested by the Senator from Montana, you can make conditions here such that nobody but a crazy man would ever attempt to develop Alaska under them.

My reason for voting for the bill is that the spirit is going abroad, and getting broader, and carrying this on into other parts of the country. I voted for the Alaskan railroad bill. I would not have voted for that railroad anywhere but in Alaska. I do not think I would vote for this bill, or one like it, anywhere except in the Territory of Alaska. That is on account of the sparse population and the enormous land, of what value I do not know. If you are going to experiment, and have Alaska tied up so that it can not move at all to-day, this bill will at least give an opportunity to a man to take a lease to provide for the ordinary consumption of himself and his neighbors about him. Under present conditions he can not get anything. I see no hope of mending those conditions as far as Alaska is concerned, whatever this branch of Congress might do. Therefore I have given my unwilling consent to supporting this bill, out of the hope that it may help the present conditions in that country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 12 it is proposed to insert:

> The minimum wage paid any class of labor employed in mining operations on lands so leased or in Government mining operations shall be not less than the average wage paid for that class of labor by other employers under equivalent conditions, to be determined by the President; the hours of labor of all persons employed shall not exceed 48 per week, save in emergencies wherein life or property is in imminent danger; no person under the age of 16 years shall be employed; the President shall make all general rules and regulations to insure the safety of operatives employed; to provide for detailed reports upon all accidents; to provide for just and reasonable compensation in the case of any operative who may be injured or killed in the course of his work; to prevent unnecessary waste of coal in mining; to prevent any adulteration whatsoever of coal sold by any lessee or by the Government; and to provide for suitable and just fines to be imposed upon any lessee as penalties for specific breaches of rules or conditions of lease.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, and I will say just a word in explanation of it. I am not going to delay the Senate. When the 20-year extension bill, with reference to reclamation projects, was passed a short time ago there was inserted in that law as section 16 a provision that hereafter the distribution of the fund, with reference to reclamation projects, should be made by Congress instead of being made by the Secretary of the Interior, as has been done heretofore.

It will be said, of course, that the amendment is not germane to this particular measure, and strictly technically speaking I am willing to concede that; but I realize that I will never get that section repealed unless I do happen to get it on some bill.

The vice of that section is that it simply enlarges the operation and jurisdiction and scope of the pork-barrel system, and it is another feature of that system fastened upon our reclamation projects. It is out of harmony entirely with all the legislation which is now being enacted with reference to conservation matters, taking out of the hands of the executive officers the dealing with these matters, whereas the trend of all legislation, this bill included, is to place administrative matters solely under the jurisdiction of the administrative officers and outside of the operation of the general act of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 16, the last section, section 18 of the bill, after the word "herewith," insert:

Also section 16 of an act passed and approved August 13, 1914, entitled "An act extending the period of payment for reclamation projects, and other purposes," which section reads as follows:

"SEC. 16. That from and after July 1, 1915, expenditures shall not be made for carrying out the purposes of the reclamation law except out of appropriations made annually by Congress therefor, and the Secretary of the Interior shall, for the fiscal year 1916, and annually thereafter, in the regular Book of Estimates, submit to Congress estimates of the amount of money necessary to be expended for carrying out any or all of the purposes authorized by the reclamation law, including the extension and completion of existing projects and units thereof and the construction of new projects. The annual appropriations made hereunder by Congress for such purposes shall be paid out of the reclamation fund provided for by the reclamation law."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I agree with all that was said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and I hope the Senate will vote upon this amendment and adopt it.

I call attention to the fact that the provision of the law as it stands to-day was reported to the Senate in a conference report, and I believe there were at least a dozen Senators, among them myself, who stated that they would not vote for the conference report with that provision in it unless they could have it segregated in some way and have a direct vote upon that section.

I am quite sure that under the present law the spending of money upon reclamation projects in the future will not be so successful, and it will not be so justly distributed as it has been in the past, because from now on it will be expended according to the influence of a Senator or a Representative in Congress who may be living in any State where a reclamation project is located. With this amendment adopted the former system of having the reclamation funds expended by the Secretary of the Interior will be in vogue again, and it is the proper way of expending the money.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. I am not as familiar with the reclamation law as some, perhaps, but the thought occurred to me whether the mere repeal of a provision which requires the fund to be appropriated would in itself restore any law under which the Secretary would distribute the fund without the direction of Congress. Ordinarily I do not think that would be the effect of repealing a law which made a provision for Congress to distribute it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that I may see the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. I just heard it read, and I may not have caught the full import of the amendment. I rose a moment ago to make that very inquiry.

Mr. SMOOT. I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment says, after the word "herewith," in line 16, page 21, to insert the following:

Also section 16 of an act passed and approved August 13, 1904, entitled "An act extending the period of payment for reclamation projects, and for other purposes," which section reads as follows:

"SEC. 16. That from and after July 1, 1915"—

That is 1915.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, I see.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore this would repeal that provision before it goes into operation.

Mr. CLAPP. I had not caught in the reading of it the date when it went into effect, and I supposed it related to a law which had been in effect. There is no question about it.

Mr. SMOOT. The former provision does not immediately go into effect. I sincerely trust that the Senate will vote for this amendment; and I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon it when the vote is taken.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah or the Senator from Idaho to read to the Senate a list of the States receiving moneys heretofore for the construction of irrigation plants. I rather think that the list would indicate to the Senate that possibly these grants have heretofore been made in accordance with senatorial or other influence. I think it would be seen from that statement that the moneys have been expended largely in three or four Northwestern States.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the list, but I think there are about 12 or 13 of them. I will say, as far as my own State is concerned, we have had only one project started by the Government, and that has been under development for some six or seven years. I will assure the Senator from Oklahoma that if his statement is correct, I must have had in the past very little influence with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GORE. I did not mean to include the Senator in the number of those who had exercised influence in reclamation projects.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call this one fact to the attention of the Senate, and it will disprove the Senator's suspicion——

Mr. GORE. There is no use to debate about it. If anyone has the list, that will speak for itself and we can all be governed by it. I think probably the State of the Senator from Idaho is one that has had certainly a disproportionate amount of money expended in it; perhaps justly so. I do not mean to charge it to influence. Now, this money——

Mr. SMOOT. The Territory, now the State, of Arizona has had a large appropriation made for the purpose.

Mr. GORE. That is true. That is one of the exceptions.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I do not disapprove of it.

Mr. GORE. I do not, either.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the conditions in Arizona. I know the arid country there, and the unbounded acres that can only be reclaimed by reclamation projects. As long as Arizona has water, as long as she contains irrigable land, as long as there are great prospects in that State for the reclamation of land under the irrigation system of the Government, I am not objecting to it one bit.

I will say to the Senator that there has not been a Republican Senator from Arizona, and before the admission of the Territory the Delegates from the Territory were Democrats, at least more than half the time. Therefore I take it for granted that there has been no political influence used in the past in relation to the distribution of that fund.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the State of Arizona is an exception to what appears to me to be a concentration of money in the far Northwest. I have made repeated efforts, I know, to secure this trial. There is one project in my own State where we have contributed $6,000,000 to the fund and so far we have been able to get about $60,000 expended by the Government. It is my recollection that the money has been largely expended in three or four Northwestern States. I do not mean to charge it to senatorial influence. The Senator raises a proposition that might occur hereafter, but for some reason my recollection is it has been concentrated, it seems to me, far too much. I do not know what the reason is, but if the Senator from Idaho has the list, which can be easily obtained, I should like to hear it, and I would like to have the Senate hear it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am sorry to say that I have not the list here, neither do I carry in my mind what the figures are. I only want to say that my amendment expresses and accentuates my confidence in the present Secretary of the Interior, because I am perfectly willing to leave it to him. I think I could satisfy the Senator from Oklahoma conclusively that if a large amount has gone to Idaho it was not by reason of the influence of the Senator from Idaho with the previous Secretaries of the Interior.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the reading of the amendment. Let it be again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment again.

The Secretary again read Mr. BORAH's amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I know of no man in either House of Congress from any of the public-land States in which any of these reclamation projects are being carried on, unless it be from the State of Oklahoma—apparently there is some sentiment favorable to it there—but outside of that I know of no man from any of those States who countenances or encourages or gives any support whatever to the amendment which was attached to the extension bill and for the repeal of which the amendment now offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] provides. I am determinedly opposed to the principle of leaving to Congress the assignment of these funds. But, Mr. President, I do not think that the Senator from Idaho ought to tack that amendment on this bill providing for the disposition of coal lands in Alaska. It has by his own confession no relevancy to the subject whatever.

Mr. President, there is scarcely a State in the Union—certainly it is the case in three-fourths of the States—that does not have an explicit provision in its constitution that no act shall embrace more than one subject, and that that shall be expressed in the title. That is done for the purpose of preventing the incorporation in a bill in relation to a certain subject that, perhaps, does not meet with any opposition at all in a legislative body secretly a provision that might provoke very much antagonism and discussion. Now, we know it is the general sentiment of this body to pass this Alaska coal bill. While there may be some opposition from some of the Senators, it looks as if the bill was going to pass, and the opposition is with reference to the details, concerning which a great many do not care. It is not at all unlikely that a great many Senators have already gone away who would be opposed to the amendment now offered by the Senator from Idaho. I do not think it fair at this time to put the amendment on the bill in their absence, without giving them an opportunity to debate it.

Mr. President, I want to suggest also that the adoption of the amendment means the defeat of the bill, because, if I may be permitted to say so, if the House conferees should accede to it at all, it is opposed, the Senator well knows, by the leaders of both the political parties in another branch of Congress, and it would give rise, unquestionably, to interminable debate there, which would render impossible at this session the passage of the bill.

Now, why should the bill be imperiled, particularly because before there is any necessity for making a further assignment in these funds for next year's work there will be another session of Congress convening on the first Monday in December. Congress will then be obliged to pass a bill in relation to these very matters, and before the next 4th of March the matter can be considered in connection with a bill to which it has some relevancy, and the Senate can then express its opinion with respect to the matter without any peril at all.

I appeal to the Senator from Idaho not to press his amendment at this time. Before I take my seat, however, because it might be gathered from some remarks of the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] that the State of Montana had received an undue proportion of the reclamation fund for the construction of projects in that State, as I suppose Montana would be considered one of the Northwestern States. I wish to correct what is a misapprehension in regard to that matter. I desire to state now for the information of the Senate that the State of Montana has contributed a million dollars more to the reclamation fund than has ever been appropriated for projects in that State. So she has not yet received her quota of the fund.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Montana a question? Important as the amendment is and as the Senator knows it to be, would he be willing to have it go to conference, so that it could be dealt with if practicable?

Mr. President, while I am opposed to the bill I do not want, even if I could, to take a technical advantage of the situation and kill it. I do not think this will kill it. I think it would add some virtue to it. If the Senator will permit this amendment to go to conference, the conferees might be able to work it out without jeopardizing the bill, and if they were not able to do so unquestionably the Senate would recede from its position and pass the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, in answer to that, what could be expected of the House conferees? The House conferees are appointed upon this bill; the House has debated this particular question; by a most decisive vote they have declared in favor of the policy which is opposed by the Senator from Idaho as well as by myself. When those conferees meet our conferees, what can they do? They are obliged to say: "We can not agree to this; the House has already declared itself by an overwhelming vote on the subject."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is always hope that a great body, a wise body, like that, which may make a mistake, upon reflection will correct it.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator that while that may be the case with the House, we can not expect the conferees to accede to this.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I do not want to be placed in the position of desiring to kill this bill, although I am going to vote against it unless radically amended; but I think I must insist upon a vote on this proposition. I believe that if it were to go to conference the Senator would find a situation not so difficult as it was a few weeks ago.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. I am satisfied—I do not know that a majority feel that way, but I am satisfied—that there was a condition with reference to this amendment in the House something like there was in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from Idaho is desirous of having it go to conference to see whether or not we can get it, I shall not oppose it.

Mr. BORAH. I should be very glad if the Senator would permit it to go to conference, to see if the situation is such that the conferees can deal with it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Idaho that he is no more strongly opposed to this proposition than am I. I was a member of the conference committee on the bill between the House and the Senate which resulted in the adoption of this provision. The Senate conferees endeavored in every way possible to secure the elimination of the provision and endeavored in every possible way to secure a modification of it, so that it would be reasonably satisfactory. We conferred with different ones, whom I need not mention here, but we found that it was absolutely impossible to get this provision eliminated. The vote in the other House—if I may be permitted to refer to it—was about 4 to 1; I think probably it was about 5 or 6 to 1 in favor of the provision which the Senator seeks to repeal. It was not adopted in the House without consideration either; it was considered and debated on the floor of that body. As the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has said, the leaders on both sides of the House were strongly in favor of the proposition. Therefore, as much as I am in favor of the Senator's amendment, I am satisfied that it is absolutely useless to send the matter to conference; that no result can come from the conference except that our conferees will have to recede or bring the matter back to the Senate, and the Senate will have to recede. Of course, that can be done

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it is ever useless to try to do a good thing. Let us make an effort to do it anyway. We have got to have this matter fought out somewhere, and if it is necessary at some time or other to kill an important bill or get it, we will have to prepare ourselves to do it. So far as I am concerned, I propose that that matter shall go out of that law if it is possible to get it out.

Mr. JONES. The Senator can get it onto some appropriation bill, and I will be with him in such an effort.

Mr. BORAH. We could not get it on an appropriation bill under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator from Washington a question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator whether the provision was sent back to the House by the conferees and voted upon by the House? I mean after the House knew that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment offered.

Mr. JONES. No; it was not, for this reason: After investigating the situation carefully—and I think the Senator from Arizona will bear me out in this statement—we were satisfied that if it got back to the House, we either would not get a bill at all or we would get it under much more unsatisfactory terms than those in which it was then framed; that there would be the insertion of several provisions to which we were very much opposed. Therefore, we thought it much better not to let it go back to the House on disagreement, because if we had done so, the bill would have failed or we would have gotten something that was much more unsatisfactory than what we did get.

That is the situation. I am for the repeal of this proposition, but our conferees will have to recede—there is not any doubt in my mind about that at all—or else this bill will fail.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not see any reason why we should advertise here that we are going to surrender in advance of the surrender. This is a very important matter, and there is no reason to assume, if we can show the House that it was in error, that the House will not recede. We have no right to assume that it will not do so. We ought to permit the matter to go to conference to see whether or not it can be worked out.

Mr. JONES. In response to that remark I will say that I think the Senate is entitled to know the facts of the situation, and that is the situation and those are the facts. If we send this to conference, we send it there knowing that it will fail.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington agrees that under our scheme of government each branch of Congress should be absolutely independent of the other, in order that it might exercise its own free judgment on what ought to be done, then does not the Senator believe that we ought to vote our convictions on this proposition irrespective of what the other House may do or may not do in reference to it?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not appealing to the Senator to vote against the proposition. I shall probably vote for it; but I am telling the Senate just exactly what the situation is and what they may expect.

Mr. McCUMBER. I assume, however, that the appeal was made on the same ground that it was made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]—that we ought not to vote for this provision because the House would undoubtedly cut it out.

Mr. JONES. I do not ask any Senator not to vote for it. I am simply stating the facts and conditions which confront us in reference to this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I offer the following as an amendment:

No lessees of any coal or other lands in Alaska shall employ, hire, or permit on their premises or lands so leased armed bodies of men, commonly known as mine guards, under the penalty of $5,000 and two years' imprisonment in jail.

I will say, in support of that amendment, that I think it has every merit. I can not imagine any Senator voting against the proposition. In the light of the experience I have had with mine guards, I say that to permit them further to be employed is a step backward and against our civilization.

About a year ago I introduced a bill designed to make impossible the recurrence of such conditions as obtained in the section which I visited—I will not mention the State. I felt that it was a horrid abuse. Since that time I have seen the results of the policy adopted by the mine owners, and we all have read of the fearful conditions which prevail in Colorado through the employment of so-called mine guards. They seem to have unlimited rights, notwithstanding the laws of the State, to employ Gatling guns and machine guns; and they fired their shots, scattering death broadcast in the little settlements of the miners in the State which I visited. Out of regard for the feelings of the Senators from that State I will not mention its name; but I say that the conditions prevailing there were a shame and a disgrace to the civilization of this broad land. I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as an amendment to the amendment, after the words "mine guards" I move to insert "or to defend their property in any manner whatsoever."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, Mr. President, I understand the purpose of that; but if the Senator had seen that which your committee saw, if he had seen the women, pale and wan-eyed, and had known that a baby had been killed, he would not stand up in this enlightened presence and offer an amendment of that character for the purpose of ridiculing and defeating the proposition I have offered. I should like to have a vote on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to come in at the close of section 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 2 it is proposed to insert:

And the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the President to exercise the authority conferred upon him in this section, to continue available until used.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just a word with reference to this bill. I expect to vote for this measure. I will do so simply because of the conditions that confront us. As my colleague, Mr. POINDEXTER, said on yesterday, there is a condition in Alaska which we must face. That condition can not be any worse with reference to the disposition of coal than it is now. Largely by reason of the public sentiment throughout the country, this bill is the only possible relief that we can secure for that situation, and in the hope that this measure will be able to accomplish something I shall vote for it.

I shall vote for it for the further reason that, if it does not accomplish anything in Alaska, it will have demonstrated that a leasing system is not a success as applied to that Territory, and then we will have to take up at a later time something else in order to secure relief.

I want to say that I think the bill reported by the committee is just about as good a bill and contains about as good provisions as could have been reported with any hope of accomplishing any desirable results. I want to congratulate them upon the splendid work they have done with reference to the bill. If any good can come from a leasing system with reference to the coal lands of Alaska, I believe it will come under this measure; and if it does not, then we will provide some legislation that will accomplish something.

Now, Mr. President, with reference to the amendment, I will say that it simply makes an appropriation to enable the President to do what we have given him authority to do in section 2. Without some appropriation, of course, he can not do anything, if it should become necessary for him to act. That is all I care to say about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of this bill, and of Senators generally, if we can have a vote, so far as any Senator knows, upon this bill at once? If not, I desire to move an executive session.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to state that we have covered every amendment of which we have heard, except one, which I understand the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] desires to offer. I do not know that it is long. I do not know whether or not he will make a speech on it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I desire to make a speech on it. I have not offered any amendment up to this time, and the amendment which I intended to offer proposes to change very largely the character of the bill. It is really a series of amendments, and for that reason I do not think that I could finish in half an hour.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. Manifestly we shall not get through with the pending bill to-night, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1930) granting to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. a right of way through the Fort Wingate Military Reservation, N. Mex., and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITION.

Mr. CRAWFORD presented a petition of the Sunday School Association of Stanley County, S. Dak., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 6535) to reinstate Wilmot A. Danielson as a first lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 6536) for the creation of cotton loan associations and the development of reliable cotton securities; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SALARIES OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 6520) temporarily reducing salaries of persons in the Federal service, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and ordered to be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m., Friday, September 25, 1914) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, September 26, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 25 (legislative day of September 24), 1914.

POSTMASTERS.

IOWA.

William L. Holtz, Newell.
A. A. Montgomery, Stuart.
James Nowak, Malcom.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, September 25, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Be graciously near to us, Eternal Spirit, our heavenly Father, as we thus pursue the journey of life through another day. Quicken our thoughts; broaden our views; uphold, sustain, and guide us in every good work, that we may be worthy of Thy love and good will. In the spirit of Him who taught us "the way and the truth and the life." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EMERGENCY REVENUE LEGISLATION.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be informed as to the amount of time that has been used on each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama used 1 hour and 15 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] exactly an hour.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, when the President of the United States came before this body on the 4th of this month he stated that he had a very unpleasant duty to perform. Of course it is never a pleasant duty to levy taxes or to ask that taxes be levied upon a people. The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom that message was referred, had also a very unpleasant duty to perform. They attempted to perform it as well as they could. The House, now that the measure has come before it, has a very unpleasant duty to perform. Gentlemen, we all realize the danger, the political danger, of passing a bill like this just before an election. Without doubt it can be used to our injury; it will harm the Democratic Party; but if it is a duty that should be performed, neither the Democratic Party, nor any party, nor any body of citizens, should shrink from its performance simply because it will invite criticism and perhaps do some injury.

Now, the conditions which confront us are generally well known. I desire to call attention to a few figures that are illuminating. We have to-day, reading from the last daily statement of the United States Treasury, of date September 23, a surplus of about $118,000,000, $74,000,000 of which is deposited in the banks of the United States, leaving $44,000,000 in the Treasury. Some $27,000,000 of that is in subsidiary coin, fractional currency and silver bullion—money, of course, but not readily used for governmental purposes. This leaves a balance of $17,000,000. The revenues up to the 23d for this fiscal year are $166,000,000 and something over. For the same time in the last fiscal year they were $165,000,000. So our revenues up to the 23d of this month in this fiscal year exceed by nearly $1,000,000 the revenues in the last fiscal year. So upon paper, in so far as the revenues of the country are concerned, the result of the Democratic revenue measure, we are not in need of additional taxes. Our revenues apparently exceed the revenues of the last fiscal year at this time, but $12,000,000 came from the sale of warships to Greece. Deducting that, and we are about $11,000,000 short. Now, then, one may readily understand how our friends upon the other side of the Chamber may feel that it is unnecessary to levy this tax. They can not, of course, take the position that the tax is unnecessary and at the same time necessary on account of either Democratic legislation or Democratic extravagance. If it were true that we had been extravagant, if it were true that our legislation had failed to produce revenue, and the necessity existed, then, of course, they would join with us in passing necessary tax legislation, because, whatever the cause may be, when the Government needs money it must have money, and it is the duty of all of us to furnish it when the call is made. But the opposition does not take that position, as I understand it. It assumes that the Democratic tariff bill and Democratic legislation have produced the necessary revenues, and that there is to-day no necessity for the legislation which we present.

Now, I wish to read a line or two from President Wilson's message upon this proposition of necessity. He said:

> The Treasury itself could get along for a considerable period, no doubt, without immediate resort to new sources of taxation.

And that is precisely our position.

> But at what cost to the business of the community? Approximately $75,000,000, a large part of the present Treasury balance, is now on deposit with national banks distributed throughout the country.

Seventy-four million dollars, as I have shown you from the last Treasury statement.

> It is deposited, of course, on call. I need not point out to you what the probable consequences of inconvenience and distress and confusion would be if the diminishing income of the Treasury should make it necessary rapidly to withdraw these deposits. And yet without additional revenue that plainly might become necessary.

With $17,000,000 balance outside of these deposits, of course it would become necessary.

> And the time when it became necessary could not be controlled or determined by the convenience of the business of the country. It would have to be determined by the operations and necessities of the Treasury itself. Such risks are not necessary and ought not to be run. We can not too scrupulously or carefully safeguard a financial situation which is at best, while war continues in Europe, difficult and abnormal. Hesitation and delay are the worst forms of bad policy under such conditions.

Now, then, the crux of the situation is that it appears from this statement that there are $74,000,000 in the banks of this country. True, our customs revenues have shrunk. True, there are eight great nations in Europe engaged in deadly conflict to-day. True, six others are hovering upon the very brink of war, and no one can tell what news the next few months may bring us, so far as they are concerned. And from these great nations engaged in a life-and-death struggle we can not have the trade, we can not have the imports, and consequently the customs revenues, to keep pace with our needs. Twenty-five million dollars is our loss so far in customs this fiscal year compared with what they were a year ago.

The President, we believe, is in a better position to determine just what the business conditions of this country demand in time of a crisis than we are, for information may come to him that it would not be desirable to make public, for apprehension of danger sometimes causes the very calamity we seek to avert. Now, gentlemen, we feel on our side that we can place the utmost faith and reliance in the statement of the President as to these business conditions. He has come before this body; he has taken the responsibility for this legislation; he has stated as the Chief Executive of this Nation that the need exists; he has called our attention to the facts within our own knowledge; and he has stated to us as the Chief Magistrate that there is absolute necessity that this money remain in the banks for the present and be not withdrawn for Treasury purposes. And if it is not to be withdrawn, then it devolves upon us to supply funds for the Government. It is easy enough to uphold the hands of the President under smiling skies and in fair weather, but when the stress of storm comes it is just as necessary—yes, the necessity is greater—that those who belong to the party of the President at least should uphold his hands and stand by him, in order that his administration may in the future be as successful as it has been in the past. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCGILLICUDDY). The gentleman yields back two minutes of his time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this emergency revenue measure, made necessary, in the judgment of the President, because of war conditions in Europe that seriously affect the commerce between the United States and European countries, preventing the usual exports of our raw material, principally cotton, produced in this country and so largely used abroad, and the shutting off of the importations from the countries involved in the war, and that in time of peace furnished customs revenues which, together with other revenues, have been ample to meet all the necessary expenses of Government.

A courageous President tells the Congress and the country that the occasion for this emergency legislation is not of our making, that we had no part in making it, but it is here; and he calls upon Congress to respond and meet the responsibility thrust upon us by these war conditions, the like of which, in the destruction of life and property and in their world-wide influence, have not been seen since the dawn of creation.

In our judgment, Congress, regardless of party, should respond to the appeal of the President for this legislation. The Democratic Party, the responsible party in control of the Government, can not and will not dodge this responsibility. The Republican membership, conscious of the dire straits in which their party stands to-day before the country, may seek a partisan advantage in its desire for an issue, and with want of frankness may oppose this measure for the pure sake of politics. They will be disappointed. The country believes in Woodrow Wilson, in his honesty of purpose, and will approve his conscientious and courageous discharge of every public duty, and will indorse the action of the President and of the majority party in seeking to meet every emergency that may arise and that may call for legislation, whether in peace or war conditions, and will rebuke at the polls those who play mere partisan politics in their effort to deceive the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In his recent address to Congress on this subject the President states a fact, known to all Members of Congress and every intelligent citizen of the country, that conditions have arisen that no man foresaw.

The war in Europe came like a flash of lightning out of a clear sky. The horrible and unparalleled conditions affect the whole world of commerce and economic production. Ten millions of men called to arms in Europe and engaged in deadly strife are trying to destroy not only each other, but striving to destroy nations and change the map of Europe. This war to the death, in which millions of men may not only lose their lives, but billions of dollars' worth of property will be destroyed and lost forever, shocks not only the moral sense of all the world but seriously disturbs financial conditions everywhere, and especially in this country, because of large mutual commerce in time of peace. Trade and commerce with Europe has largely ceased and losses of revenues are being sustained. Our surplus can not be sold abroad. The serious conditions have brought a strain here and it became the duty of the President to call the attention of Congress to these abnormal conditions that could not be neglected without probably dangerous results.

In so far as they affect us, the President tells us that these conditions must be faced and dealt with, and that it would be unwise to postpone dealing with them. The Democrats of this House can not do other than respond to the message and address of the President. The country would rebuke the Democratic membership if it failed to make proper response to the appeal of the President for this legislation at this time.

I know how tempting it is for the minority party to embrace this opportunity in its hunger for a campaign cry. They raise the cry of economy—a stranger in the history of their party legislation. They cry out against additional taxes. Taxes are always burdensome and offensive to those compelled to pay them. It is refreshing to hear our Republican friends complain against taxation, when they know that the large burdens now borne by the people are the heritage in a large part of the obnoxious rule of their own party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Underwood tariff law is criticized by many who would not reenact the Payne-Aldrich tariff law if given an opportunity. No general tariff law is perfect. But in my judgment the present tariff law will continue for years on the Federal statute book of the Nation with the approval of the people, who feel that it is immeasurably superior to the law which it displaced. I would like to see it amended in its income-tax provisions—a greater per cent levied on the larger incomes and the exemptions lowered, so that wealth should bear a fairer share of the burdens of Government. I would like to have seen an income-tax increase written in this bill, but it was thought best not to incorporate it in this emergency measure, when the income-tax feature would not be responsive before the end of the fiscal year, in June, 1915, but to leave it for future legislation.

Some desired other features in the bill, but an emergency bill could not well be written that would meet the judgment of every Member in all particulars. The provisions of this bill, levied principally on luxuries, should be reasonably satisfactory to all. It met the judgment of the President. It is indorsed by the Democratic membership of this body. It has been unanimously reported by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, which has responded to the desires of the President and the action of the Democratic caucus.

Should this bill become a law, it is estimated that the revenues derived during the coming 12 months will amount to $105,000,000, distributed as follows:

Fermented liquors	$32,500,000
Wines	6,000,000
Gasoline	20,000,000
Special taxes	16,500,000
Stamp taxes	30,000,000
Total	105,000,000

The stamp taxes to cease on the 31st of December, 1915, and it is hoped that the necessity for the continuation of this entire law may end when normal conditions may be restored in Europe.

Every man hopes for an early termination of that terrible struggle—a war blunder so colossal as to stagger the entire world, a very harvest of death to all that is best in European life. Our burdens are light as compared to their misery. There can be no compensation for such destruction of life and property, unless possibly new conditions may arise and old things shall pass away, bringing a change that only could result from revolution.

Out o the fearful struggle going on the world may receive some benefit, if the building of battleships and other engines of destruction may cease; a blessing may come to all mankind if all of Europe shall disarm by reason of this mighty conflict, and large standing armies may live only in history; if kingcraft shall yield its domination to democratic rule; if strife shall give way to peace; if the doctrine of hate shall give place to love and friendship; if war shall cease and the brotherhood of man be recognized. [Applause.] God forbid that the terrible lesson being enacted shall bring nothing of benefit to the human race. If new conditions shall arise, such as is desired by every peace-loving man, then taxes will be lowered everywhere and the heavy burdens upon labor and industry will be lessened. When Europe disarms, the necessity for large naval and army appropriations in the United States may cease and our burdens be lightened.

If by reason of this war militarism shall pass away and give place to industrialism, there will be some compensation for the great slaughter of to-day. Sorrow, famine, ruin may be the heritage of this generation in the war-stricken countries, but the cause having been removed future generations may live in peace and contentment. Who is there in all this broad land that does not hope for the coming of the establishment of a world-wide peace, so ardently desired in this land of ours and hungered for in the hearts of civilized man everywhere? [Applause.]

Let us meet this present necessary condition and respond to the message of the President; bear this burden to-day and then bend in the future every effort to aid to press upon the Old World that the day has come when the burden of militarism must be lifted from the shoulders of the masses, in order that the generations that are to follow may live and work out the great salvation of life. [Applause.] Strike down prejudice wherever it exists, whether it be between individuals or nations. Teach the great rulers of the world that they must respond to the heart throbs of suffering humanity, destroy war and every instrument of war, in order that men may live in peace and that the world may grow in wealth and in comfort. Governments can then be run with more economy, for when the great navies and large standing armies shall cease the necessity for huge levies will end, and the industries of the nations of the earth will be quickened and happiness and contentment will fill the hearts of mankind. [Applause.]

It may be a dream—a mere hope that may not be realized. The millennium may never come, but the hope will linger in the human heart and the prayer will be world-wide for every effort from every peace-loving nation to put an end to destructive war that brings sorrow and suffering to almost every home in every land. The burden of debt is the curse of the world. There is no hope for relief, there is no future prosperity for nations, unless their burdens be lightened and lifted from the shoulders of the nations and individuals. If history shall continue to repeat itself till the end of time, then what shall we say of our lauded civilization and the influence of the church upon the children of men? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] allow me to yield a couple of minutes to a Member on this side?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield three minutes, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration is an emergency measure, made necessary by the war in Europe. This Government depends on the duties collected on imports for a considerable portion of the revenues necessary for its support. The President, by virtue of his office as Chief Executive, is responsible for the proper administration of the affairs of government. Under Article II, section 3, of the Constitution of the United States, he is expressly directed as follows:

> He shall, from time to time, give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

In compliance with this requirement, President Wilson, on Friday, September 4, in keeping with the wise and salutary custom of the early Chief Magistrates of the Nation, appeared before the Congress and read his mesage on the needs of the country and its finances. In his opening he said:

> Gentlemen of the Congress, I come to you to-day to discharge a duty which I wish with all my heart I might have been spared; but it is a duty which is very clear, and, therefore, I perform it without hesitation or apology. I come to ask very earnestly that additional revenue be provided for the Government.
> During the month of August there was, as compared with the corresponding month of last year, a falling off of $10,629,538 in the revenues collected from customs. A continuation of this decrease in the same proportion throughout the current fiscal year would probably mean a loss of customs revenues of from sixty to one hundred millions. I need not tell you to what this falling off is due. It is due in chief part, not to the reductions recently made in the customs duties, but to the great decrease in importations, and that is due to the extraordinary extent of the industrial area affected by the present war in Europe. Conditions have arisen which no man foresaw; they affect the whole world of commerce and economic production, and they must be faced and dealt with.

It would be very unwise to postpone dealing with them. Delay in such a matter and in the particular circumstances in which we now find ourselves as a nation might involve consequences of the most embarrassing and deplorable sort, for which I, for one, would not care to be responsible. It would be very dangerous in the present circumstances to create a moment's doubt as to the strength and sufficiency of the Treasury of the United States, its ability to assist, to steady, and sustain the financial operations of the country's business. If the Treasury is known, or even thought, to be weak, where will be our peace of mind? The whole industrial activity of the country would be chilled and demoralized. Just now the peculiarly difficult financial problems of the moment are being successfully dealt with, with great self-possession and good sense and very sound judgment, but they are only in process of being worked out. If the process of solution is to be completed, no one must be given reason to doubt the solidity and adequacy of the Treasury of the Government, which stands behind the whole method by which our difficulties are being met and handled.

In the same message he added the following, which I commend to the American people:

The occasion is not of our own making. We had no part in making it. But it is here. It affects us as directly and palpably almost as if we were participants in the circumstances which gave rise to it. We must accept the inevitable with calm judgment and unruffled spirits, like men accustomed to deal with the unexpected, habituated to take care of themselves, masters of their own affairs and their own fortunes. We shall pay the bill, though we did not deliberately incur it.

In order to meet every demand upon the Treasury without delay or peradventure, and in order to keep the Treasury strong, unquestionably strong, and strong throughout the present anxieties, I respectfully urge that an additional revenue of $100,000,000 be raised through internal taxes devised in your wisdom to meet the emergency. The only suggestion I take the liberty of making is that such sources of revenue be chosen as will begin to yield at once and yield with a certain and constant flow.

Our Republican friends on the other side of this Chamber decry this proposition as unnecessary at this time and, secondly, claim that it is due to extravagance on the part of the majority of this House. There is no question in the minds of all patriotic citizens not biased by partisan feeling of the necessity of maintaining the standard and solvency of the United States Treasury. The President clearly proves this fact in his admirable address.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GOULDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I recognize the fact that the gentleman has only a few minutes, but I desire to ask him as a man of large business experience and so successful in New York whether the deposit of moneys in the national banks, so much criticized by the other side yesterday, was not necessary to be made in order to preserve not only the solvency of the financial institutions throughout the country and their absolute stability, but also in order to avert the possibility of apprehension on the part of the people, however unjustified, which might give rise to financial unrest or distrust?

Mr. GOULDEN. My distinguished colleague is absolutely correct. Sixty millions of that money was deposited by the Republican administration and fifteen millions by the Democratic administration. It would undoubtedly disturb the business relations of our country and probably tend to bring about depression, if not a panic, had not every financial safeguard been taken to strengthen our financial institutions. [Applause.] The whole fabric of commercial and industrial life of the country depends on public confidence in the stability of our finances, or panic will inevitably follow. This is the time that prudence demands that the actual and growing deficiency in the Nation's revenue be made good. It will not do to put it off until some more convenient season. The time for action is here and must be promptly met by the Congress if serious financial and business troubles in the near future are to be avoided. Even if the war in Europe ended shortly, something of this kind would be imperatively necessary, as it would require a year, at least, for the belligerent nations to be able to manufacture goods for importation. The entire product of their factories and mills would be required for their own people; hence this measure might even then be required. President Wilson, having full information on this subject and being of discerning mind and patriotic heart, would not have made this urgent recommendation without cause. I would much prefer following him and his advice than that of our political foes on the other side of the Chamber. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The second contention of our Republican brethren, that of extravagance, is as unfounded as the first objection. No one regrets more deeply than I that so important and necessary a proposition should be made a party question. The fact that the election is just 40 days distant is no reason whatever for trying to make political capital on a matter of such great import, one so fraught for good of the country.

In the matter of extravagant appropriations, the Republicans have been a party to them, both in the committees and in the House itself, having voted for the measures carrying appropriations. I do not admit, however, that these various appropriation bills passed by this Congress were extravagant. This is a billion-dollar Nation, growing from year to year, and the sums appropriated were absolutely necessary. The greatly increased activity along all lines of public endeavor, especially that of reclamation and irrigation of arid lands, the conservation of the public resources, and in general doing everything to make the country more prosperous and the people happier, demands larger sums from the National Government each year.

As to the measure under consideration, the loss of revenue from import from countries engaged in and affected by the war, comprising Austria-Hungary, Belgium, France, Germany, Japan, Russia, Servia and Montenegro, and the United Kingdom of Great Britain, the usual customs revenue coming from these countries annually has amounted to more than $100,000,000.

The Committee on Ways and Means, in their able report regarding this matter, say:

We have therefore reached the conclusion that it is conservative to state that the loss of customs revenue that will be caused by war conditions abroad for one year will be $100,000,000. This amount, unless replaced by taxes from some other source, will cause a serious deficit in our Treasury balance. It is true that at this time we have a general fund balance in the Treasury amounting to about $119,000,000. About $75,000,000 of this money is now deposited in the national banks of the country to assist in the movement of crops and to meet the Treasury daily needs when required. Of the remaining Treasury balance there is a large amount in subsidiary coin and bullion, which is not available for use in meeting current obligations.

President Wilson, with a keen appreciation of the actual needs of the country and with a sublime courage, meets this unfortunate condition, as he has met all others confronting the administration, successfully and patriotically. He asks us to do our duty by providing the necessary funds to maintain the honor and integrity of the Government. There is no doubt of the result. Many of us may differ in the manner as to how this sum should be raised, but having registered our protests and made our objections to the Committee on Ways and Means, it now becomes our duty as representatives of the people to pass the proposed bill. I feel that at best it is only a temporary burden, which the American people will cheerfully bear, as they always have done when occasion demanded.

Schedule A, the stamp taxes, will expire by limitation on December 31, 1915, unless sooner repealed. It must be noted that no tax was placed upon bank checks, and I had hoped that policies of life insurance, which is a burden upon the frugal savings of millions of our people, who in this case wisely seek to protect their dependent ones, might also have been omitted.

With the return of peace, which God grant may speedily come, the extra taxes imposed by this bill, similar in every respect to those of the Spanish-American War period, will be repealed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GILL].

Mr. PAYNE. How much?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GILL] is recognized.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in the short time allotted me in the final discussion of the war-tax bill now pending, I wish to confine my remarks specifically to the machine, and more particularly to the automatic machine now in general use in industry.

Human labor, Mr. Speaker, is the universal element which enters into all conceptions of value. That which the world recognizes as concrete wealth has embedded in its heart the applied stored-up labor of a past time. Wring from your myriad indices of wealth this universal factor and you transform them back again to a state of nature. Our own continent in all that makes for outward, tangible wealth is the richest in the world's history. At no time in the chronology of past centuries has any nation approximated its billions upon billions of visible symbols of wealth. And yet on that October day in 1492 when Christopher Columbus found a new continent, it was absolutely void of a dollar's worth of value. It is almost inconceivable that in the short space of 422 years the human beings who have since made this continent their home could, by the application of their brain, bone, and brawn to the plastic material of a virgin continent, have transformed it from a trackless wilderness into the thriving, prosperous communities which now so resplendently adorn each and every country of this Western Hemisphere. Speech is powerless to adequately measure the boundless wealth which still sleeps within the bosom of its future, and a wise statesmanship will always have in mind the proper conservation of those factors inherent in its life and growth.

All political economists are agreed that labor is the one universal element which enters into and becomes the necessary factor of each and every object of value known to civilized man. That function of labor, its universality—and because of it, the responsibility of parenthood toward the creatures of sense compels it to take on what to me is the function of labor, its universality—makes it the principal element in the life of objective value. Rob any object of its inner life-giving labor element and it immediately becomes dead, useless, and valueless.

Now, sir, I am prepared at this stage of my inquiry to approach the analysis of the bill before this House with as large an element of candor, fairness, and justice as human insight into its problems can give to man. The great European war has brought on an absolutely unlooked-for condition. No superior foresight of statesmanship could have given ample warning of its coming. It is here and we must face it. Our able President has so brilliantly outlined what our duties are, and I, as a humble Democrat, am here to offer my loyal and unqualified support to him and his administration in this crisis. Let us have a war tax such as he suggests, and let us get busy and furnish it without too much delay. But in doing this I wish to utter a solemn warning, do not shackle labor with too onerous a burden. Remember, gentlemen, labor, the universal element in all forms of value, must not be taxed to death. Each separate entity of creation has its finite limit, beyond which endurance can not and dare not go. Wise conservation of society's labor element would call for the energizing instead of the enervating deed. Tax labor with too many burdens and you enervate the one substance which gives health, virility, and stability to the body whole. A wise, social husbandman would seek to keep alive and vigorous its ever-necessary labor factor.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of this House, I am ever ready to give the eye and ear of patient inquiry into the social need and shall hold myself ready to cooperate with all reasonable haste toward that consummation. But I am too much of a Democrat—aye, too much of a lover of my kind—to blindly stand aloof and permit an unreason do that for me and mine which spells misery, squalor, and actual want to millions of humble toilers in our land.

Gentlemen, our age is clamoring for quantity. Its great cry is more, and ever yet more. It recks not sympathy and knows no kin; nor youth, nor age, nor man, nor woman are subjects in the category of its reason. They know what they want, and call for what they know. It has transpired that in the domain of experience they have found a neuter thing called a machine, which does more with less trouble than the human which it has supplanted. It has no conscience, likewise no heart. It does not think and can not complain. It has no sense of time nor of place, and with a slight modicum of care and attention it whirrs away in ceaseless activity by day, by night, winter or summer, year in, year out, week day or Sunday, without let or hindrance. This creation of man's brain has taken his job away from him. The owners of it are waxing fat and great in the golden streams that flow from its loins. All admit that the profits or advantages of machine ownership are real, are ever-increasing. In the domain of political economy we designate this an advantage enjoyed. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think it both right and logical that for the advantage which the State ever gives in the security of life, liberty, and happiness to the least of its component parts the machine be asked to contribute back to the State an equitable pro rata share of the burdens of the State's maintenance. I insist that the war tax contemplated by this bill, under the extraordinary conditions now prevailing, in their proper proportion be also shared by the machine owners of industry, who receive the lion's share of its profits. I am not asking more than has ever been the vogue from time immemorial in regard to the person of the citizen in a State. He is ever expected by tradition, by custom, and by law to render his personal service back to his State in times of war as in the walks of peace, and why not demand the same obligation of the machine which has usurped his sphere?

Is it wrong in any sense to expect such a return from a machine-owned industry in order that our common country may still enjoy the blessings of government and peace among men? Is it asking more in its fair proportion than you as individuals already have and expect from the men and women of this Republic in the days of its imminent peril? And would not every loyal man and woman in our great country leap with bounding joy at the prospect of succoring our common country's need when danger stalks abroad? I ask nothing unreasonable. I ask only that which I deem is right. Let us get from the machine of modern industry its fair proportion of taxation, in conjunction with that of all of its citizens, that our great country may live and thrive and continue ever the land of the world's oppressed and a haven of peace. To that end let us conserve all of our processes of life and apportion its proper pro rata share of taxation to each and all alike—the personal as well as the impersonal elements of our economic structure.

In the evolution of human society it has happened that the newer and more complex needs of the social whole have gradually substituted the machine-made goods for those which were distinctively the immediate product of man's labor expended thereon. We are compelled to admit by all the unanswerable proofs of the senses that we are in the age of the machine. The products of labor are now mediated through the machine before they get into the market for the consumer's need. The day of handmade commodities is past. We do not want nor is there a desire on the part of the least of us to turn back the dial of time and stay the hand of progress. We welcome the machine as a blessing to mankind. We have learned the blessing of the cooperant-labor products, and are only asking that these blessings be extended downward as well as upward through all the grades of human society. The proper dispensation of the blessings of cooperant labor calls for consideration certain necessary factors of production and distribution which are inherent in the constitution of society. They may be properly grouped into those which make for development and those which conserve society's processes.

In the category of development of society's processes a proper regard must be had, first, to the physical make-up of the man, and, second, to the tools he has found necessary to invent to supplement his bodily labor effort in winning from nature a proper support for himself in health and happiness. Man must apply himself at first hand to the things within the compass of his horizon which will sustain his body in health against the opposing elements always at hand to wear out his bone and tissue. Labor properly directed in an environment favorable for its employment will accomplish this result. This favorable environment must be there. If in any degree it is curtailed, labor's applied effort is lessened, and, if not removed, in time will be valueless, as far as the human being using it is concerned. Favorable opportunity and health of body and mind must always be present to accomplish more than the minimum of aggregate results.

As man emerges out of a distinctively simple form of society, where the labor effort is closely connected and associated with what it produces and takes its stand alongside of and in company with other labor of a kind, then the problem of subsistence becomes intensified in the ratio of increased labor power exerted on a common environment, which calls for an ever-widening circle of labor opportunity. Should this opportunity fail to appear or become irregular or intermittent, then the precariousness of labor in the field of its employment is again complicated by the struggle among the labor units to find a proper field for its functioning. This struggle, as society advances and becomes more complex, becomes ever and anon a mad race for the coveted goal—which is, after all, nothing more than the original status of man in the primal society—of an opportunity to so place his labor power in a favorable environment as to win for his body its support in health and happiness. At heart our modern complex society is no different from its simpler primal social status. Man in any event in the domain of sociology must so place his nature-given labor power as to win his own proper sustenance from mother earth. Rob him of his God-given right to apply his labor in the smallest degree possible and you place a burden on his back which again lessens the dynamics of his personally applied labor effort. In the domain of experience he has only too early learned that this has been his heritage.

From savage culture up the long and toilsome pathway of the ages he has only too early found out that his fellow man, either from greed or an overweening egoism or avariciousness, has inflicted untold tortures on his weak and unprotected brother; and we find the annals of man's work strewn with countless and refined methods of cruelties inflicted for selfish personal gain. On closer analysis nearly all wars in history have been nothing more than an inner expression on the part of the combatants of some economic advantage about which they could not come in agreement. This persistent strife for advantage has been the prolific mother of discord in all time, and it is but uttering a trite commonplace in discussing the component parts of this measure of taxation when it is pointed out that some part of the aggregate whole is to be benefited or harmed in the specific case. I simply dwell on this fact at this time so as to bring home what is very clear to all observers—that our present economic structure of society presents the phenomenon of a very few millionaires, and all the rest beside paying tribute to their arbitrary but, I hope, temporary assumption of power. The ownership by our few millionaires of large industries, employing millions of human beings who are working in many instances on what are almost perfect automatic machines, makes our problem of special taxation one of great importance to the country at large. A very vital question which here obtrudes itself is the one which asks, Who will you tax? Will it be the human being slaving long hours under the prospect of a constantly decreasing purchasing power of his wage, or will this Congress have the courage to see its duty to the great masses of mankind, whose opportunity is gradually slipping away from them and becoming embalmed in the ever-increasing sphere of the automatic machine in industry? Or can we see and locate the ever-increasing responsibility that inures to the ownership of automatic machines in industry of a kind? Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of this House, are you aware of the magnitude of the statement I have just made? Are you not cognizant of the fact that in nearly if not all the great staple industries of our economic structure the bulk of the work is now being done by the almost human machine of perfectibility? That being true, are you not also aware of the other terrible fact that the army of workers chained to the toil of these machines, in the great average, man for man, aye, woman for woman, are but minor and secondary factors in industry's economic life? The one and unmistakable sign of supremacy is that the machine as now constituted is the main factor of industry's existence. Our machines are nearly perfect in their mechanism, and the products that flow from them ought in all justice and equity be called on to carry the social burden of a tax.

Mr. Speaker, my point of contention is—and I can not make it too strong—that the product of the almost automatic machine ought to bear the brunt of this taxation. Some one will cry out, Why designate a thing so specifically? Do not you think that would be special or "class" legislation? I answer back as quickly as I can, most assuredly so; and because they, as a part—a very small part or class—of the whole of society, are enjoying—I might add monopolizing—the total profits of a socialized industry, to the exclusion of the great mass of our country who are not of the elect of that favored few. I am not craven coward enough to withhold my honest convictions when I see, and know from experience, what is transpiring in our very midst. Mr. Speaker, the trusts of our land—the interlocking group of industry owners—own the Frankensteins of production, aye, the marvelously complex machines which in evolution's gradual progression have come into our midst, and by reason of this ownership can, do, and ever increasingly will command the great markets of supply and demand and arbitrarily fix the price which the ultimate consumer will have to pay—who in our day and time is no one else than the millions of dependent toilers of our great country leading a hand-to-mouth existence by reason of the curtailed opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, the progressive, up-to-date workingman of our country looks not with hate at the machine which has taken his job from him. In the days of his harvest and plenty he had gone to school in the many senses in which that term can be used. In this school he has learned the great lessons of the social need for the very instrumentality which has taken his means of livelihood from him.

As a law-abiding citizen and a man of family, he has bravely taken his bitter medicine in calmness and stoic humility. His is that ever-present human element which the oceanic upheavals of society have cast upon the shores of time; and before going out forever the only sound heard above the din and roar of the breakers is the plaintive wail of sad-eyed mothers and children as they sit and hope and wait for the father's return. Ah, what frail tragedies are enacted in the homes of labor, where the nemesis of the machine has overtaken the skill and dignity and self-respect of the craftsman of a now vanishing past. The inexorable need of an ever-expanding social progress has called for and received its victims, and the votaries of a newer time can never know the many gaping wounds and desolate homes it has cost to buy this meed of progress for the future. Ah, this human element, Mr. Speaker. What waves of sadness well up in me when memory brings back the sterling figures of fellow workmen who have succumbed to the inevitable. Why the retrospect? The light of that time is becoming dim and hazy, and as the shadowy figures disappear below the horizon I am aware that night has come, and fagged brain and tired limbs call for rest—the night of labor whose enveloping folds draw unto itself the feverish quest and lagging footsteps of a father out of work, an only too true type of a workman displaced by the machine. Why ask less from a machine into whose ever insatiable maw pour the swollen streams of social profit and gain? If the greatest proportion of social profit and gain inures to machine ownership, then as social stewards of control this Congress must lay the hand of governmental authority on the shoulder of machine ownership and say, "Gentlemen, our country's common need in this period of extraordinary conditions looks to you, asks you—aye, commands you by law—to render back to its parent source a proper pro rata tax or share of the parent's present support." Is not this practical? Is not this fair? Is not this just? Is not this right?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in his address which he read to the House on September 4, the President said:

> The Treasury itself could get along for a considerable period, no doubt, without immediate resort to new sources of taxation. But at what cost to the business of the community? Approximately $75,000,000, a large part of the present Treasury balance, is now on deposit with national banks distributed throughout the country. It is deposited, of course, on call. I need not point out to you what the probable consequences of inconvenience and distress and confusion would be if the diminishing income of the Treasury should make it necessary rapidly to withdraw these deposits.

The President practically admits that there is no necessity of increasing the revenues of the Government at this time if the Government could make use of the $75,000,000 which it now has on deposit with the national banks. It seems to me a novel theory that the Government should collect money by taxation, deposit it in the national banks of the country as a matter of convenience or otherwise, and then when money is needed, instead of drawing the deposits out of the banks, increase the taxes in order to raise more money, a portion of which will likely be again deposited in the banks. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It seems to me also a novel theory that it would be an injury to the country for the Government to withdraw its deposits from the banks, but is no injury to draw additional taxation from the pockets of the people or their bank accounts.

If the Government draws its deposits out of the banks with which to pay its bills, that does not take the money out of circulation. It will go right back into trade and commerce and probably back into the banks. It certainly will be no more distressing for the banks to pay out the deposits which have been made with them, and which they clearly have taken with the idea of paying out, than it will be to take from the pockets of the people permanently increased taxation which they can never recover and which will be taken from them only that we may deal more kindly with the banks which owe the Government the deposits. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The President also said:

> And we ought not to borrow. * * * To sell bonds would be to make a most untimely and unjustifiable demand on the money market; untimely, because this is manifestly not the time to withdraw working capital from other uses to pay the Government's bills; unjustifiable, because unnecessary. * * * These are not the circumstances, this is at this particular moment and in this particular exigency not the market, to borrow large sums of money.

At the time of the Spanish War we properly passed a bill for increasing the revenue. The people had determined upon partaking in the luxury of a war. It was proper that the people should pay the extra expenses for this war which they had insisted upon. But the situation now is entirely different. If there be any occasion for raising additional revenue now, which I deny, then we ought to obtain the additional money by borrowing. [Applause on the Republican side.] The President says that it would make unjustifiable demands on the money market for us to sell bonds now, and that it would withdraw working capital from other uses to pay the Government's bills.

The President seems to think that it will not withdraw working capital from other uses if the people pay the money as taxes, and that it will not make any demand on the money market for the people to pay the money in the form of taxes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Here is another novel theory. Why does it not make just as much of a demand on the money market and just as much withdraw working capital from other uses for people to pay money to the Treasury in the form of taxes as it would for them to pay money to the Treasury in the purchase of bonds? The bonds would only have to be issued as needed, and no more would need to be issued than were necessary. On the other hand, the additional taxes may and probably will raise much more money than is needed, and is much more likely to withdraw the money from the market and from working uses than would be the issuance of bonds or temporary certificates of indebtedness.

I deny that there is any need for additional internal-revenue taxation at this time. I assert that the Government can run along without embarrassment if it will exercise proper economy. [Applause on the Republican side.] The present Democratic administration has been more grossly extravagant than any administration which preceded it. [Applause on the Republican side.] The requests of the present administration for appropriations have been for larger sums than ever before asked by any administration of the Government. The appropriations which have been made are larger than ever made before. These larger appropriations have been made in response to demands of the administration officials, but it is not too late for the President to order the officials under him to practice economy, and many of the appropriations already made do not need to be expended, at least for the present.

If the President will stop the extravagance of the Government and practice as well as preach economy, there is no need for increased taxation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Our imports for August, 1913, were $137,651,553 in value of goods, while for August, 1914, they were $129,767,890, a falling off of less than $8,000,000 during the first month of the war, when shipping conditions were at their worst, and these conditions have greatly improved since.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] has furnished me with figures obtained this morning from the Department of Commerce, showing the imports of merchandise at New York City for the weeks of August and September of this year, which are as follows:

Week ending Aug. 1	$18,966,086
Week ending Aug. 8	15,817,093
Week ending Aug. 15	16,211,393
Week ending Aug. 22	12,162,307
Week ending Aug. 29	11,716,317
Week ending Sept. 5	12,212,002
Week ending Sept. 12	16,930,567

These figures show that while there was some falling off in August, owing to the deranged shipping conditions on the sea, that these conditions have become almost normal again and the importations are now almost back to normal.

As appears by the daily Treasury statement issued at the close of business Wednesday of this week, September 23, 1914, the ordinary revenues of the Government for the first 23 days of September of this year were $42,319,728.53, and for the same period in 1913 were $44,050,174.72, a decrease in this year from last year for the 23 days of $1,730,446.19.

From July 1 to September 23, inclusive, the revenues this year were $166,616,800.38, and for the corresponding period last year were $165,881,896, or an increase over last year of $734,904.13. [Applause on the Republican side.]

For the same period, from July 1 to September 23, this year the ordinary disbursements of the Government were $184,708,150.11, and for last year for the same period the ordinary disbursements were $176,856,929.77, or an increase in disbursements for that period this year over last year of $7,851,220.34.

While the ordinary revenues so far this year have been about the same that they were for the same period last year, the ordinary disbursements this year have amounted to nearly $8,000,000 more than they were last year.

All we need to do is to economize in Government expenditures, and there is not the slightest necessity at this time for levying new taxes to increase the revenues. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And if there be any necessity in the future for increasing the taxes, the increase ought to be put on the manufactured goods coming here from abroad in competition with our home production. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The following statement shows the imports and exports of merchandise for the month of July, 1914, and for the seven months of this year ending July 31 compared with the corresponding periods last year:

The usual monthly statement of the foreign trade of the United States was to-day completed by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce. The imports and exports by great groups during the month of July and the seven months ending with July are presented in the following statement:

Analysis of the foreign commerce of the United States for the month of July.

Foreign merchandise exported	2,817,125	3,179,288	22,782,406	22,305,877
Total exports	160,990,778	154,138,947	1,327,273,137	1,200,982,162

These figures show for the periods mentioned in 1914, as compared with similar periods in 1913, as follows:

For July, 1914:
Imports increased	$20,615,521
Exports fell off	6,851,831
Change against us	27,467,352
For seven months ending July 31, 1914:
Imports increased	121,944,698
Exports fell off	126,290,975
Change against us	248,235,673
Balance of trade in our favor first seven months, 1913	308,624,462
Same, 1914	60,388,789
Loss to United States by falling off of balance of trade	248,235,673
In July, 1914, the balance of trade against us was	$5,538,344
In July, 1913, the balance of trade in our favor was	21,929,008
Increase in imports of manufactures ready for consumption	39,261,672
Decrease in imports of manufactures for further use in manufacturing	26,950,647
Decrease in exports of manufactures ready for consumption	74,151,381
Increase in exports of crude materials for use in manufacturing	19,818,421

These figures show that during the period named while our imports of manufactures for further use in manufacturing, which means practically crude materials imported to be manufactured here into the finished products, were reduced by nearly $27,000,000 for the seven months, we increased our imports of manufactures ready for consumption by over $39,000,000.

That is the result of the Underwood tariff law, which decreased the tariff duties on the finished products, and in many cases increased the duties on the crude materials, and that means that the labor to turn the crude materials into the finished products was furnished in foreign lands instead of giving employment to labor in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The figures also show that while we were increasing our exports of crude materials for use in manufacturing abroad by nearly $20,000,000 during the seven months we were decreasing our exports of manufactures ready for consumption, or the finished products, by over $74,000,000. Instead of finishing the products here with American labor we were sending abroad the crude materials that they might be manufactured by foreign labor.

The balance of trade in merchandise in our favor in 1914 for the seven months was $60,000,000, while for the same period in 1913 this balance of trade in our favor was $308,000,000. In other words, under the Underwood tariff our balance of trade on merchandise for the seven months fell off $248,000,000, and that balance of trade we are called upon to make up by shipments of gold abroad or the equivalent of that. [Applause on the Republican side.]

That is one of the main reasons of the present difficulties about foreign exchange.

This loss in balance of trade is directly due to our legislation.

The figures all relate to the period prior to the commencement of the European war and represent no effect of the war, but of the normal conditions caused by the Democratic tariff law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The following statement shows the customs receipts by months for the first seven months of 1914, ending July 31, as compared with a similar period in 1913,

In 1913 the Payne tariff law was in effect and in 1914 the Underwood tariff law was in effect.

Customs receipts, by months (first 7 months calendar years 1913 and 1914), Payne law and Underwood law.

February	17,609,603.70	27,605,115.83	9,995,512.13
March	25,927,212.90	27,457,489.20	1,530,276.30

Total	156,640,148.87	180,000,698.26	23,360,549.39

[1] Increase.

These figures show that while for the seven months in 1914 we had increased our importations over the corresponding period of last year by nearly $122,000,000, the customs duties arising on the importations fell off by over $23,000,000. The Government was losing the revenue and at the same time the foreigner was manufacturing the goods with foreign labor.

And, meanwhile, there has been no decrease in prices generally to the consumer in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Our labor and our manufacturers were losing the business and our Government was losing the revenues, and it was all for the benefit of the foreign producer.

All we need to do is to keep cool and avoid hysteria. The pending demand for increased taxes is an hysterical demand. The administration is not keeping cool. It is excited.

While our people are burdened with industrial depression and financial fears, largely resultant from a wrong economic tariff policy and dangerous provisions threatening to business and business men and doubts and uncertainty growing out of the new banking and currency law, it is not the time to add unnecessary burdens in the form of increased taxes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If the people will restore the Republican Party to majority in this House, we promise the country that we will keep the expenditures of the Government down, avoid extravagant appropriations, and do away with the necessity for increased internal-revenue taxes. [Applause on the Republican side.] We will let the people use the money which they have to carry on business instead of paying new taxes. We will decrease the importations of articles which might better be made in this country and increase the exportation of manufactured articles made here. We will give the country renewed confidence, as we did in 1897. [Applause on the Republican side.] We will start up the mills, give labor employment, give capital proper rewards, give people confidence to go into business, give banks confidence to loan money, restore financial credit, and add to prosperity, and all without levying the unnecessary and exasperating stamp taxes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, the country is tired of the Democratic assaults on our prosperity.

We are again reminded by existing conditions of the injury caused by the Democratic administration from 1893 to 1897.

The Democrats have now again enacted tariff legislation against the interests of our own industries and favoring those of foreign countries. They have reduced the output and opportunities of our domestic mills and increased the importation of the products of foreign mills. Labor is idle, capital is distressed.

For the 12 months ending April 30 last we increased our importations from Canada by $32,000,000, while during the same period we decreased our exports to Canada by $39,000,000. That was the result of a Democratic tariff and administration.

In July last, before the war abroad began, we imported $5,538,344 more than we exported—that was under the Democratic tariff—while in July a year ago we exported $21,929,008 more than we imported—that was under the Republican tariff.

The inevitable result of such a policy has been business depression and idle men looking for work.

Nearly a year ago the Democratic Congress enacted a new currency and banking law, in which the good things were taken from the Aldrich plan, but which included so many bad and doubtful provisions that the President, who insisted a year ago upon its speedy passage, has been afraid for months to put it into active and actual operation.

A war abroad is given as the excuse for the present dangerous financial condition in the country, but we would have had no really serious condition if we had had Republican policies and Republican confidence. Fear of the Democrats and their continued assaults on business and the results of their inefficient and almost imbecile legislation and management has well-nigh paralyzed the active forces of our land.

We are told now that instead of practicing governmental economy we must increase the taxes to be paid by the people. The present Democratic administration and Democratic Congress have been grossly extravagant. The appropriations and expenditures are greater than ever before, but the President, instead of enforcing economy, asks for more taxes.

Let us stop the extravagant expenditure of the public money and we can get along very well, for a time at least, without increased taxation, and if we properly tax the goods coming from abroad and competing with our home production we will not need to add to our home taxation.

To the idle mills and idle workmen crying for relief the President, instead of bread, offers increased taxation.

The Democratic administration is now proposing to grant financial relief by wild inflation of the currency. Gold is now practically at a premium. Inflation may give temporary exhilaration, but its logical effect is disaster and a demand for more inflation.

The value of the money in circulation and with which wages are paid must be maintained if our efforts will do so. We must, without yielding our honor, keep out of the European war. There is no partisanship in that, but we are in constant danger through the blundering legislation demanded by President Wilson and Secretary Bryan.

But the war has proved a "white hope" for the Democrats. They are almost glad it happened. They think it will divert attention from their misdoings. But the people should remember that the troubles were upon us before the war began. We were suffering from Democratic times prior to the end of July.

Not only had our business suffered at home, but this administration had ceased to give any protection to our business abroad. Americans, with their enterprises and capital, had been driven out of Mexico by the bandits there without the slightest protest of our Government.

This country has a great opportunity at present.

The other great commercial nations are at war with each other.

We have the chance of an age.

We should encourage, by proper protection, new factories here to produce dyestuffs, drugs, chemicals, silks, cottons, woolens, and so forth, and make ourselves independent of the foreign producer. We should reserve our home markets for our own producers.

Then, we should take the threatening hands of the Government off legitimate capital, business, and enterprise and tell our citizens to go out and get the commerce of the world. They can and will do it if the Government will quit hampering them with threats, with prosecutions, with Clayton antitrust bills, and with the constant efforts to repress enterprise.

But our people will only capture the world's markets in the effort to get rich. We should encourage men to try to get rich, to go after the business, to seek trade in other countries, to make money out of these foreign possibilities. Fighting in battle is not a pink-tea affair, neither is fighting for business. Both try men's souls. But let us quit kicking the heroes who win, and who win because they overcome obstacles. Let us take the restraining hand of government off proper business enterprise and tell our people to go out and get the trade and that we will bless them for it instead of awarding threats of penitentiary sentences.

The Democratic Party has shown that it does not know how to reduce the cost of living, though it has reduced the means of earning a living.

Mr. Speaker, you Democrats are good people, but you do not know how to run the country. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

I append just a few of the numerous communications received, protesting against this unnecessary measure.

CHICAGO, ILL., September 23, 1914.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Chicago Real Estate Board, the largest and oldest in the world, representing thousands of realty owners, protests most strenuously against the proposed taxes in the so-called war-tax measure on real-estate conveyances, mortgages, contracts, leases, etc. Our commodity bears the heaviest burden of local taxation, never is concealed, and in this State is taxed twice when mortgaged; and we likewise protest against the proposed real-estate brokers' license of $50.

THE CHICAGO REAL ESTATE BOARD.

CHICAGO, ILL., September 23, 1914.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

During this period of business adjustment we appeal to you to oppose the special tax on banking capital, etc., which will be an added annual burden on business of over $600,000 in Illinois alone. It is a gross discrimination against the capital largely supporting the commercial activity, and is most unwise, particularly at this time, to alone penalize this class of capital, which is already overburdened with Federal income and other taxes. Imports only declined 6 per cent during August, compared with the corresponding month last year, and the total for the last eight months is actually greater than during the same period last year. Hence, this is not a war measure, appealing to the patriotism of business interests as during the Spanish War, when the banks made no protest against the discrimination at that time. If the tax must be levied, it should be spread where it will not delay the restoration of freer credits, lower interest rates, and the early resumption of normal business conditions.

BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF CHICAGO,
Chicago, September 18, 1914.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANN: In the press reports of the proposed special tax to secure increased revenue for the Government, it has been reported that a considerable portion of the Spanish-American War tax bill would be reenacted.

Our position in regard to this matter is as follows:

During the Spanish War period the brokers of the United States were subject to a special percentage tax on all their contracts, which at that time amounted to a very considerable sum. The situation now, however, is entirely different. The stock exchanges of the country are all closed, the cotton exchanges are closed, and practically the only business which the commercial exchanges handling grain are transacting is the necessary buying and selling in connection with the millers, exporters, shippers, receivers, and others; in other words, the commercial handling of the property. Speculation is extremely limited in volume and amounts to very little when considered in a broad way. We should esteem it a great favor if you would see Mr. UNDERWOOD, or adopt any other method that may be best, and explain to him or to others that at the present time with the conditions outlined above the amount which the Government would secure from this percentage tax on brokers' contracts would be comparatively small, but the burden, in view of the dullness of business, would be very much felt.

Anything which you may be able to do along these lines will be very much appreciated by all your friends here. I remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

V. H. CANBY, President.

NEW YORK, September 19, 1914.

Congressman MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Although a Democrat of 25 years past, I write to ask you why is it at all necessary that there should be new taxation here on account of the continental war?

August imports show only a small falling off, nor is there anything alarming about September figures to date.

Please consider these official figures of imports for 1913:

Austria-Hungary	$19,192,414
Belgium	41,941,014
France	136,877,990
Germany	188,963,071
Great Britain	295,564,940
Russia	29,315,217
Japan	91,633,240
Total	803,487,886

Now, please eliminate the great bulk of the figures of France and Great Britain and Japan, as commerce with those countries hence is surely not seriously affected—in fact, tonnage moving is large, owing to use for all heretofore idle bottoms of neutral nations, such as Scandinavia, which has a very large mercantile marine.

Admit, therefore, that shipments hence from Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Germany, and Russia are nothing. These total in round figures $279,700,000. On an average 54.47 per cent of the imports in 1913 came in free of duty. (Statistical Abstract of U. S., 1913, p. 635.) The average duty was 40.05 per cent under the old tariff and less under the new. Thus, if we infer that one-half of the above $279,700,000 is missing for revenue, this item at 40 per cent ad valorem on such value suggests a revenue loss of only fifty-six millions, or probably less, were the figures analyzed. (See pages 328 and thereafter of above publication.)

Now, you can save almost this amount in your appropriations—river and harbor bill, for instance—and economies elsewhere.

It seems to me that Mr. Wilson and Mr. UNDERWOOD have rushed into this thing without giving the matter proper consideration or waiting for actual developments.

I consider it an outrage that the country should be burdened still further with this new taxation.

But if you can force a proper economy on the Democratic Party you will avoid any new taxation. I hold it is not yet proven to be necessary, anyway.

Faithfully, yours, HERBERT V. FALK.

CHICAGO, ILL., September 19, 1914.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANN: If a so-called "war tax" must be imposed upon our country at this time, I trust that the contemplated levy of 8 cents on each $100 of life insurance issued be not included. It may be well enough at times to tax luxury and extravagance, but it is out of all justice to exercise a tax on thrift. Life insurance to-day is taxed and taxed and taxed, and I reassert that this is merely penalizing the thoughtful individual who is attempting to make ample provision for those dependent upon him. It makes no difference if the companies pay it, as ultimately it comes from the pocket of the policyholder.

That you may wield your influence against this particular provision in an act that is as obnoxious as it is useless in a time of peace, is the earnest request of your constituent and friend.

C. F. AXELSON.

NEW YORK, September 22, 1914.

The Hon. Mr. MANN,
Minority Leader House of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice in the list of taxes which are covered by the war-revenue bill an item of 25 cents on warehouse receipts. Warehouses, as perhaps you know, give receipts for cases placed on storage, for which they get anywhere from 10 to 25 cents per month storage, and many of these cases only stay in one month. For every case put in they have to give a receipt.

You will easily see how ridiculous it would be to tax a warehouse 25 cents on every receipt it gives out, when all it may collect on the case for which it gives the receipt would be possibly 10 or 15 cents or, at the outside, 25 cents.

Yours, very truly,

THE SCHENCK WAREHOUSE CO.,
H. B. SHAEN, President.

I yield back any balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time was all used.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield to me at this time, to have a letter read that I am in receipt of from the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to the estimates?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes. Take your own time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a letter that I am in receipt of from the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to the Treasury balance, and ask to have it read at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 23, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: With reference to the increase in receipts from ordinary internal-revenue collections for this fiscal year to date as compared with the same period of last fiscal year, reported by the daily Treasury statement as being in excess of $6,000,000, I have the honor to advise you that the actual increase in such collections to and including August 31, as shown by the collectors' reports received by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, amounted to $2,139,643.02. The decrease in July amounted to $588,165.56, of which $429,335.61 was on distilled spirits. The increase in August amounted to $2,727,808.58, but the increase from distilled spirits in August amounted to $3,326,602.36, thus showing a decrease in August from sources other than distilled spirits.

The figures above given show the actual collections and differ from the Treasury daily statements, as those statements are made up from the certificates of deposit as received.

The collection districts reporting the principal increases in collections on distilled spirits, with the increase stated in each case, in August last over August, 1913, are as follows:

First California	$247,649.16
Fifth Illinois	222,376.66
Eighth Illinois	121,587.51
Sixth Indiana	178,838.93
Seventh Indiana	301,652.01
Second Kentucky	160,413.72
Fifth Kentucky	499,151.73
Sixth Kentucky	179,174.16
Seventh Kentucky	109,859.45
Eighth Kentucky	80,077.11
Louisiana	78,019.17
Maryland	105,572.72
First New York	146,797.42
Fourteenth New York	105,784.36
First Ohio	328,286.09
First Pennsylvania	172,734.43
Twenty-third Pennsylvania	151,857.34
First Wisconsin	60,426.52

The reason for the increased tax collections in August on distilled spirits immediately following decreases from the same source in preceding months is unquestionably due to the expectation or fear of distillers that the rate of tax on distilled spirits would be increased, and the same reason applies to increases indicated by the Treasury daily statements so far in September.

It is not practicable to report what part of the reported increase in September to date is on distilled spirits, as collectors of internal revenue compile such data but once a month, and that is done after the close of each month.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO,
Secretary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the August Treasury statement be printed following this letter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the Clerk to read the letter from Secretary McAdoo which I send to the Clerk's desk, and that the Treasury statement for September 23 be printed following the reading of the letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, September 24, 1914.

Hon. O. W. UNDERWOOD,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. UNDERWOOD: I think it is important that I should call your attention to the fact that although the total receipts for the fiscal year 1915 up to September 23, 1914, are in excess of the receipts for the same period 1914 by the sum of $734,904.38, as you will see by reference to page 3 of the Treasury statement inclosed, this is accounted for in two ways: First, $12,000,000 of the receipts for 1915 came from the sale of the two battleships to Greece; second, a large part of the corporation and income taxes for the previous fiscal year, which properly should have been paid in the last fiscal year, was paid in the first 10 days of July, 1914. This amounts to $5,732,255.30, as you will see by reference to page 3 of the statement inclosed. As these items might be discussed in the debate that may arise over the war-revenue measure, I thought you might like to be informed of the fact.

Faithfully, yours,

W. G. MCADOO.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, March 4, 1913, is usually taken as the date when the Democratic Party came into power, but that date merely marked a change in administration. The same laws which had directed our commercial policies during 16 years of Republican rule were still in force. No important change was made until the Underwood tariff bill was enacted. October 3, 1913, the date when it became a law, in fact fixed the advent of Democratic control. Since that date practically a year has elapsed during which Democratic policies have been maintained. It is this period to which I especially invite your attention.

The record which will be stated is compiled for the greater part from figures given out by appointees of the present administration. Otherwise it is taken from trade journals that know neither politics nor parties. There is no occasion for me to color the record thus obtained by rhetoric or distort it for party purposes, were I so disposed. The plain, hard facts are more than sufficient.

While I shall particularly consider only the year in which Democratic policies have prevailed, it will be found convenient to divide the history of the Democratic Party under the present administration into three short periods.

The first period extends from the inauguration of President Wilson to October 13, 1913, when the Underwood tariff bill became a law.

The second period is from the enactment of the new tariff law to the time when the great war broke out in Europe—about August 1 of this year.

The third and shortest period is from the date last mentioned up to the present time.

While the history of the Democratic Party prior to the last presidential election had not been such as to give the American people any confidence in its ability to conduct our national affairs, the long years which had intervened since its last administration had tended to destroy the memory of that distressing epoch. The new generation had had no experience under Democratic rule, and the division in the ranks of the Republican Party over the question of who should lead and manage its forces caused the Republican Party to go down in defeat at the national election.

The distrusting public had been assured in the campaign that led up to the presidential election that the previous failure of Democratic policies had been caused by circumstances for which that party was not responsible. The voters were told that the Democratic Party had heretofore come into power at a time when a commercial crisis was imminent, that a cloud of financial depression was already looming when their party then took control, and that the sufferings which the country underwent under a former Democratic administration were only the inevitable result of a financial situation for which the Republican Party rather than the Democratic was responsible. It is not necessary that I should discuss or even contradict this statement, for it is not material to the subject under consideration. No party ever came into power under such favorable auspices, so far as our commerce and trade is concerned, as did the Democratic Party when it took charge on March 4, 1913. Wherever the eye could look it viewed prosperity on every hand. Never were our manufacturers so prosperous; never were our artisans so highly paid; never was our domestic commerce so large; never did our foreign trade show such a favorable balance. The whole land was a hive of industry. The farmer and the laborer, the merchant and the mechanic, the financier and the manufacturer alike were blessed. Many fondly imagined that our resources were so great and our commerce and finance on such solid foundations as not to be affected by a change in the administration, but in this reckoning they had not made sufficient allowance for the capacity of the Democratic Party to enact destructive legislation.

During the first period to which I have referred that kind Providence which sends its rays upon the just and unjust favored the Democratic Party, and, blessed by the continuance of Republican laws as yet unrepealed, our commercial advances were unchecked. Manufacturers found an abundant outlet for their products and wage earners a constant demand for their work. Our trade, both domestic and foreign, showed no signs of a decrease or unfavorable turn. The country waited half in expectancy, half in dread for the first act of a Democratic Congress.

The second period began with the enactment of the Underwood bill, which, however, did not go into force as to one important schedule, that of wool, until the first of the year, and as to another, that of sugar, until the 1st of March. With its enactment into law, the predictions of its opponents and the expectations of a majority of the American people were quickly realized.

The first to feel the effect of the new law was the farmer. He had been assured that he needed no protection, but he found himself compelled to compete with the cheap land and labor of Argentina, Australia, and Canada, as there was an increase in the importations of agricultural products for the first four months in which it was in operation amounting to about $30,000,000, which rose to nearly $80,000,000 by the end of June.

Corn prices in Chicago fell from 78 cents in September, 1913, to 64 cents in February, 1914, and the western farmer lost the eastern market for that staple to Argentina. Crop prices in July, 1914, on the farm, according to a bulletin of the United States Department of Agriculture, were 14 per cent below those of two years ago and 1.3 per cent below those of the average of the six years preceding.

The manufacturer felt the effect of the new law later, but with more continuous and more serious effect. In the four months ending with June of this year, which is the last month for which we have detailed figures, the importations of manufactures ready for consumption increased over $40,000,000, and the exports of such goods fell off $45,000,000, making a total loss in trade of $85,000,000. The greater part of this immense sum was taken directly from our workingmen, who lost the wages which they would have received had these products been made in our home factories.

Our total importations since the new law went into effect increased, up to June 1, over $162,000,000, the greater part of this increase having accrued since January 1.

The iron and steel trade is generally regarded as the barometer of business. When this trade is active, it indicates general prosperity. When it is depressed, business everywhere shows the same condition. At the end of June of this year the record for the seven months preceding shows that we had made 4,000,000 tons less of pig iron than for the year before, and the Iron Age, a trade journal published in Cleveland, estimated that over 1,000,000 men were out of employment in the trades alone.

In April the balance on our trade with foreign nations, which had heretofore been largely for our favor and which for the year ending June 30 was over $600,000,000, now turned against us. Our importations for the first time in many years exceeded the amount of goods we exported. The seven months ending with August 1 shows that we had lost $240,000,000 in the balance on our foreign trade when compared with the same period of the preceding year. Our gold began to go abroad in large sums to pay indebtedness thus created and other debts heretofore settled by a balance in our favor. Before the end of July nearly $90,000,000 in gold had been sent broad, and thus not only withdrawn from circulation but actually lost to us.

By June 1 the gross revenue of our railways had fallen off $30,000,000 and the railroads were beseeching the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant them an increase in freight rates.

I will not undertake to state the number of men out of employment, as there are no accurate statistics on the subject, but the number of the unemployed has been estimated at from three to five million, with the probability in favor of the larger estimate.

The loss of employment necessarily cost the loss of millions of dollars to our workingmen in wages, and this in turn affected all kinds of business institutions. The failures for December, 1913, amounted to the unprecedented sum of $31,000,000, and the number of firms that failed were over 2,500. At the end of June we found for the first six months of the year that over 5,300 more firms had failed, with the staggering total of $185,000,000 in liabilities, exceeding by $50,000,000 those of any other year.

To compensate for these enormous losses no offset can be found. No new outlet was found for our goods or new work for our laborers. The avowed purpose of the tariff bill was to reduce the cost of living. In this respect it not only failed completely, but the record shows its insufficiency. The New York Times Annalist, which ought to be good Democratic authority, has published a chart from which it appears that at the end of June the wholesale prices of 25 leading food commodities were higher than ever before.

The third period began with the month of August of this year, when the great war broke out in Europe.

As the summer passed each day brought added mercantile failures, each week another increase in our importations and decrease in exports; each month swelled the hordes of idle men who waited in vain for mills and factories to reopen. A campaign was coming on which was certain to place the real situation before the people, and it needed no prophet to foretell in the elections the fate of the party which was responsible for these conditions. At this time, most unfortunately for the world but providentially for the Democratic Party, the conflict abroad burst forth with the swiftness and fury of a cyclone. It has somewhat obscured our domestic issues, and it seems to be thought that this foreign war not only can be made responsible for the ills that had befallen us but that the country can be made to believe that it created an emergency with reference to our national finances. I shall undertake to show that the effect of the war upon the National Treasury so far has been slight, that any immediate necessity for additional taxation is wanting, and that if such necessity should arise in the future it will be not by reason of the war but from causes for which Democratic control is wholly responsible.

The first effect of the war was upon prices. It caused a great increase in the demand for food products and their prices to rapidly rise. On the Chicago market wheat shot up from 80 cents to $1.20, and prices rose from 60 cents on the farm to $1. Corn rose about 15 cents a bushel; oats, 10 cents or more; and meats and provisions swiftly followed. All this afforded opportunity to the defender of the administration to point out to the farmer what prosperity he was enjoying amidst these high prices, while at the same time he could express to the consumer his profound regret that the war had prevented the Democratic Party from lowering prices upon the necessities of life. [Applause on the Republican side.]

To determine what relation the war had to the condition of the Treasury it will become necessary to briefly review its situation since it has been under Democratic management.

Never in the history of our country has the Government been more fortunately situated with reference to financial resources than the present administration during the year in which Democratic policies have been applied. The Republican Party had left an abundant working balance in the Treasury. The receipts from internal revenue were $3,000,000 larger than they had been the year before, and it inherited from Republican management a surplus of $3,000,000 in the Post Office Department. It sold two battleships for $12,000,000 and turned the proceeds into miscellaneous receipts. The ranks of the veterans of the Civil War were so thinned by death that $11,000,000 less was required to carry on the Pension Department. The expense of construction on the Panama Canal had been rapidly decreasing and soon would cease. The operation of the canal was beginning to return some revenue. Here was a splendid opportunity to make a showing of a surplus in the Treasury, but with all these favoring circumstances the Democratic Congress and administration proved unable to keep expenses within receipts.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] told you yesterday that in the last fiscal year from ordinary receipts the administration had taken in $10,000,000 more than in the preceding year. This is correct, but it only shows that it had received about $10,000,000 more than the Republican administration, while needing $50,000,000 a year less, and yet was unable to make receipts equal expenditures. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What a record for a party that had in its platform denounced the Republicans for extravagance and obtained power on promises of economy! [Applause on the Republican side.] And how can it escape responsibility for this condition? It had put through the House appropriations which exceeded by $100,000,000 the amount ever before incurred in time of peace. The working balance in the Treasury was for the larger part loaned to or deposited in banks, and by the end of July the administration found that a deficit was approaching. With a depleted Treasury and a rising mountain of appropriation more money was wanted, and the European war has been made an excuse for the bill now before the House.

When this excuse is analyzed it will be found so much thinner than air that it becomes a vacuum. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is said that the customs receipts fell off largely after the war began, and figures are given for the loss in the month of August. There was a large difference between the receipts for August, 1914, under the Underwood bill, and those of 1913, under the Payne bill, but there had existed a large falling off before the war began. The Underwood bill was intended to reduce customs receipts. It did reduce them by lowering the rates and admitting free articles which heretofore had paid duty, and the difference was to be made up by the income tax. As a matter of fact, the importations for August were only $8,252,057 less than for the same month last year, of which, if the same average was maintained for previous months, about 60 per cent came in free of duty.

The average rate on free and dutiable merchandise for the year ending June 30 last was 15.4 per cent, but this was estimated on the year, which included three months under the new tariff. The average rate under the present tariff might be estimated at 14 per cent, and the loss of revenue caused by the decrease of imports in the month of August could not have exceeded $2,000,000, unless the imports exceeded those of the previous year, or there was an unusual proportion admitted free. It was the rates of the Underwood bill that caused the great decrease in custom receipts and not the war. Any decrease caused by the war is not likely to be maintained after the expiration of a few months. We may produce at home some articles which we have heretofore imported. Our imports, instead of increasing, as compared with the previous year, may be slightly less in amount while the war continues, but our wants must be supplied from some source, and our importations will be greater than at the present time.

In what condition must our finances be when such a temporary decrease frightens our financial guardians and makes them demand that more taxes be levied! Why can we not gradually withdraw some of the $74,000,000 now on deposit in the great banking institutions of the country at 2 per cent interest, and which they are loaning out at from 6 to 8 per cent? [Applause on the Republican side.] Why can we not dispense with the river and harbor bill for this session at least? [Applause on the Republican side.] Why not enter upon a program of retrenchment in accordance with whatever the necessity may be?

If we must have taxes, why not reimpose some of the duties which are now lost to the Government without in any way benefiting the consumer? Why not compel Argentina, Australia, and Canada to pay something for the privilege of entering our markets? [Applause on the Republican side.] Why not at one and the same time revive drooping industries and replenish the revenues? [Applause on the Republican side.]

If we must have more internal revenue, why not put an additional tax on whisky or patent medicines instead of gasoline? [Applause on the Republican side.] How many of our Democratic brethren are ready to rise in their seats and say that they approve of this tax upon gasoline?

Oh, I know the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said yesterday that no one wanted to amend this bill. The real fact is that he does not dare give any opportunity to amend it. [Applause on the Republican side.] The fact is that it will be necessary for some of the gentlemen upon the other side, when they go back to their districts, to say in faltering tones that this was an emergency measure. It was put through under a rule which permitted no amendments, and therefore they could not change it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Are whisky and patent medicines to be taken under the special protection of the Democratic Party? Is whisky to be sheltered from emergency taxes, and the burden thereof to be placed upon articles of necessity? [Applause on the Republican side.] So it seems, under Democratic rule, but they will have trouble in explaining to the people why. It is quite evident why this new product of caucus legislation is to be driven through under a rule that gives little opportunity to discuss its provisions, and absolutely forbids amendment. Those who present it know full well that if amendments were permitted the bill, in its present form, could not obtain a majority of the votes of this House. Let them remember that it has yet to be approved by a majority of the voters. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But why impose taxes at all? Have Democratic policies brought our Treasury and credit into such a condition that nothing but taxes will place the country in a condition to meet a slight and temporary loss in revenues? If this is true, it is a confession of incompetency and inefficiency on the part of an administration that deems it necessary every few weeks to issue a new pamphlet reciting its extraordinary achievements. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is said that we should not withdraw any of the money which is deposited with the banks. Is it possible that taxes are to be levied for the purpose of enabling the Government to loan money to great banking institutions? Are these institutions now under Government control so conducted that they can not properly discharge their functions without a tax being levied upon the people for their benefit? If so, we certainly need still another banking and currency bill.

The river and harbor bill, through the determined efforts of Republican Senators, in which, I am glad to observe, those from my own State joined, is likely to be reduced by more than one-half. It would be better to omit it entirely than to pass this bill. With the retrenchment that ought to be made in other directions, we could avoid laying additional burdens upon the people at a time when, owing to the business depression which prevails in so large a part of the country, they are least able to pay; but the Democratic majority and the administration are unwilling to retrench, and hence we must have taxes.

The plain, hard fact is that the Democratic Party can not carry on the Government without expenditures largely in excess of those which had been denounced as extravagant in its party platform. Its failure in this respect is not new. The Democratic policies have failed alike, whether applied to domestic industries or national finance. They have failed to reduce the cost of living or national expense, failed to protect legitimate business or our National Treasury, failed everywhere, and yet the administration is continually boasting of its achievements. [Applause on the Republican side.]

These achievements consist of a tariff which the country at large regards as a destructive and not a constructive measure, of a currency bill enacted more than nine months ago which is not yet put in force and which the administration has always been afraid to put in force. When the financial storm clouds gathered it was forced to take shelter under a Republican law as the only security in time of emergency. It has, it is true, rushed much new and half-baked legislation through the House of Representatives on other subjects. Some of this has been unopposed, some fought by the Republican minority, but all of it is experimental in so far as it has laid down any new principle or entered upon any new policies, and none of it has yet been tried and tested. The only result it has so far produced is to unsettle business and to add uncertainty to the rules by which commercial transactions must be governed. To speak of these measures as "achievements" is to become as "sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." [Applause on the Republican side.]

This Congress has, through its Democratic majority, in fact, "achieved" two distinctions by which it will always be remembered: It is the first Congress that was ever flooded with petitions for its adjournment, and it is the first Congress to levy a war tax in time of peace. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Some say we have at least kept out of war with Mexico; but who wanted war with Mexico? No Member on this floor has advocated it, and I have never met a man that favored it. There were no doubt some that thought we ought to object to the destruction of the property of our citizens and protest against their murder, and others who insisted that we ought to leave Mexico problems for Mexicans to settle, and not meddle with matters which did not concern us; but how could we get into a war with Mexico, divided as it was into warring camps, none of which represented that nation and none of which proposed to make war upon us? Only by taking the part of one guerrilla chief against another. This we did, and got into war with one clan as much as we could, that particular faction being at that time powerless to resent our acts. We shed the blood of our soldiers, and took the lives of Mexicans who resisted them in invading their country, because one of their chiefs declined to burn a little powder. Perhaps, after all, the administration is right in considering that it is fortunate that we did not get into a war after this performance, but it would have been easy to keep out of Mexico entirely; and, considering that we have spent about $5,000,000 in the occupation of Mexican territory, it certainly would have been much cheaper. Our position at Vera Cruz had not only become embarrassing but was becoming ridiculous, when the President ordered the troops removed, with conditions just what they would have been if the troops had never been sent, except that we had excited enmity against us by our policy, which can best be described as that of meddle and muddle. This day we hear that our ally, Villa, has started a new revolution, and that no one knows when wretched Mexico will have peace. The order for the recall of our troops is said to be countermanded, and this will, I suppose, constitute another "achievement."

A year of Democratic control has been a record of broken promises, of unkept pledges, and of unfulfilled prophecies. Promising to decrease expenditures, that party has increased by millions the annual budget; pledging that no legitimate industry should be injured, it has left scarcely any business unscathed; prophesying that it would reduce the cost of living, its pretense of fulfillment only raises a smile.

In Biblical times a proud and boastful monarch in his dreams saw written upon his palace walls the mysterious words, "Mene, mene, tekel, upharsen." Troubled by the dream, he called before him the Hebrew prophet, Daniel, to interpret it, and received the unwelcome answer that the judgment of a higher power had been pronounced upon him, and that his kingdom was doomed. It needs no dream for those who have directed our national policies for the last year to see written large upon the political sky the words of Daniel to the King of Babylon, "Thou art weighed and found wanting." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this time is yield to me on behalf of the Progressives, and I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] is recognized.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, the "wise man" once said, "All men are liars," and after listening to the utterly contradictory statements made about the same facts by the honorable gentlemen on both sides of the House upon this bill I am convinced that the "wise man" was up to snuff.

After listening attentively and studying the question independently of the partisan spirit so greatly in evidence here it is my deliberate judgment that the war in Europe has not created an emergency that requires us to impose a war tax upon the people of the United States.

It is true that there is a deficit of revenue, but that has been going on ever since the administration tariff bill went into operation.

It was known long before the war in Europe began that the revenue measures were a failure. Since the tariff bill took effect in October last there has been a large increase of foreign importations, taking the place of American goods and throwing many American workmen out of employment; but even though importations increased greatly the tariff was fixed so low that it did not produce enough revenue to run the Government.

Imports of foreign goods have increased in the last fiscal year one hundred and two millions, although your tariff has been operating but 10 months; yet this increase produced thirty-two millions less revenue than the preceding year.

At the port of Philadelphia, in the month of August, 1913, the imports were less than seven millions, producing $2,167,000 revenue, while last month the imports were over seven millions, producing $1,208,000 of revenue, or a loss at that port of $959,000 revenue in one month. At Boston the imports in 1913 for August were $7,200,000, while in August, 1914, the imports were $11,000,000—that is, $3,800,000 more foreign goods came in, but produced $682,000 less revenue.

You reduced the tariff on sugar, threw away about $16,000,000 of revenue, killed the native sugar raisers, and the Sugar Trust has been "soaking" the people ever since.

Oh, I know the war shut off the supply of German sugar to England, and her demand upon other sugar-producing countries compelled us to pay more for our raw sugar; but long before the German ports were closed the Sugar Trust was "soaking" us, simply because your low tariff wiped out our domestic sugar producers.

There is no secret about all this. Everybody except Democrats knew what would happen, and a short experience with your free-trade tariff opened your eyes, and even you realized months ago that you were facing a deficit of revenues. Your managers have been discussing it behind the door for months. Now, in seeking to cover up your mistakes by laying all the cause of it to the war in Europe you are neither candid nor honest.

The disturbance of American business caused by the war in Europe was due in large degree to the disappearance of foreign carriers and we had no shipping of our own. This you hoped to cure by the registry bill and the shipping bill, though it should be noted that the traditional policy of the Democratic Party against subsidies is the only reason why we do not have a merchant marine to do our own carrying, relieving us from dependence upon foreign shipping.

To cure this, now that they see what a "hole" it has put us into, it is suggested that the Government should engage in the ocean shipping business which private capital has not engaged in because it did not pay.

The scheme is nothing but a ship subsidy in disguise. Government aid to cotton producers, which southern Democrats favor, is nothing but a subsidy in subtle form. The 5 per cent reduction of duties on goods carried in American ships, which the Democrats put in the tariff law, is a subsidy pure and simple. Government-built levees and embankments in southern rivers are nothing but subsidies, but be careful that you do not call them "subsidies." How these walls have reechoed to Democratic roars against "subsidies." And how these roars subside into the gentle cooing of doves when the "subsidies" come their way. Free tolls to American coastwise traffic in the Panama Canal was called a "subsidy," and so on this plea the Democrats handed the canal over for the especial benefit of Great Britain. But this lack of shipping is only temporary. English and French ships are resuming their service. The ocean is free. The risks of capture are practically gone. Our over-seas traffic has been carried heretofore by foreign vessels. These neutral foreign vessels are just as available now as ever they were.

An editorial in yesterday's Washington Post declares there is no scarcity of ships, and that—> shipping men insist there are plenty of bottoms for all freight offered, and show conclusively that the check to American export trade is not caused by lack of shipping.

This will speedily cure itself, and furnishes no reason for taxing the people.

Other contributing causes producing disturbance were the return of American securities and the drain of gold.

But none of these justify a "big scare."

Germany, that holds a great volume of American securities, did send some of them home and withdrew gold, but the moment war was declared she could not send any more of them—the British fleet stopped that.

Great Britain and France hold other great volumes of American securities, and before the war did send some here and took gold, but as soon as they engaged in war and their people stopped producing and went to destroying it was plain that it is not our gold but food and clothing and munitions of all kinds which they will need and are bound to get in the United States if it takes all their warships to convoy the freighters they will be obliged to send here after the goods.

England owes four times as much as the United States. She is financing a great war, and she is not in a panic about her gold. France owes seven times as much as the United States, and she is invaded by a powerful enemy and is not scared about her gold supply. Now, we have four times as much gold as England, nearly twice as much as France. Our country is infinitely richer than any country in Europe. We have no war, and I refuse to be hurried into a panic because of a "scare" about gold.

The plea that the war has closed our foreign markets is another "big scare."

Undoubtedly there is a temporary embarrassment on this account, but the imperative need of breadstuffs will shortly compel England, France, and Italy to send here for them, and record shipments of wheat and flour are now being made, and Japan will largely increase her purchases of our cotton.

The Evening Star of yesterday announced there is enough shipping plying the seas to carry the normal imports of the United States.

> Imports from Japan are increasing.
> England's imports continue extensive.
> Some German goods are coming into American ports.
> These are the observations of customhouse officials recently attending the conferences of collectors at New York.

But if our exports of manufactured goods were wiped out, it ought not to raise more than a ripple of disturbance, for as a matter of fact our exports of manufactures never amounted to 5 per cent of what we manufactured; and if Europe continues to fight, our exports to South America and nonbelligerent countries, if we seize our opportunities, will restore tenfold all we lose of the European markets.

Now, of course, the war will shut out much of our imports, but what will be the effect?

We will get no Belgian glass, but American glassworkers will again go to work.

Germany will send little here and our people will go to work to produce the hosiery, cotton goods, ferromanganese, dyes, cutlery, toys, and other products which she has been sending and we undoubtedly will go to work and make all this stuff ourselves.

Importations from England and France will fall off, but we can and we will go to work and make for ourselves the things usually supplied us by those countries.

This reduction of importations will, of course, reduce revenues, and the deficit added to the deficit caused by your tariff law before there was any war demands level-headed attention.

But what is the "scare" about? Why must we rush this measure through the House in the clangor of the fire alarm? The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] talks impressively of the "great emergency." We have passed bill after bill here since I entered this body under the spur of "great emergency." But what is it this time?

The Treasury is in no instant need. The new banking law, whatever may be said of it giving Wall Street the control of business credits, will certainly strengthen the banks. The one thousand millions of emergency currency provided for will certainly fortify the banks against any unusual demands upon them, and in case necessity required the banks could easily return to the Treasury the $73,000,000 of Government money now loaned to them. If the new banking law and the emergency currency law strengthen the banks, why should they not repay the money the Government loaned them at 2 per cent, when the Government needs the money? Why tax the people when the Government's money, collected from the people, is in the banks now? Why not use it?

I recognize the importance of the banker. I voted for the new banking law. I voted for the emergency currency law, to strengthen the banks and give stability and elasticity to currency issues, for the purpose of enabling them to accommodate the business interests.

Yet the banks, with reserves piled up, are charging the business men of the country 7 to 10 per cent interest. Banks that received Government deposits last year at 2 per cent to move the crops have been lending it to the farmers at 10 per cent. Eight per cent is a common figure the country over to-day in spite of emergency measures to strengthen the banks, while the English business man, though his country is at war, gets banking accommodation at 4½ to 5 per cent.

This is a condition that Congress had better concern itself about than to load more taxes upon the people.

Why not, like prudent business men, retrench in expenditures? Why not wipe from your calendar about nine-tenths of the public-building schemes that will come up at the next session; most of them should never be passed. Why not stop the irrigation of southern trout streams, and cut the "pork barrel" down to the last stave? Ligate superfluous public teats; fire the bench warmers and the supernumeraries. They are falling over each other in every department of the Government drawing unearned salaries.

Why not postpone the Alaska railroad for a year; postpone the unnecessary public buildings; postpone the doubtful experiment of the Government investing $40,000,000 in the shipping business; and cut out $30,000,000 of the rivers and harbors appropriations, and thus save more than $100,000,000?

Why not call in the loans to the national banks?

Everybody knows the bill to improve rivers and harbors, covering $53,000,000 appropriations, goes largely to improve "political prospects." Two-thirds of this sum can be saved by merely cutting useless and unnecessary items. Every department of the Government leaks money like a sieve leaks water. If the people could know how their money is wasted, a storm of anger would sweep the country from one end to the other. No up-to-date business house would permit the waste and extravagance that every Member knows exists here. Put the administration of the Government on an economical basis—not a niggardly, parsimonious, cowardly, nor panicky basis, but on a plain, sensible, business basis—and you can save every year double what you expect to raise by this tax. The Democrats promised to stop the waste and extravagance. Why have they not done it? Things have gone on worse, if anything, than ever before.

It is useless for anyone on this side of the House to make any suggestions. Nothing is considered unless it comes from the Democratic side. During all these weary 17 months the farce of debate has gone on, when everybody knew that all the important measures were cooked up in Democratic conclave just in the shape they were to be passed without alteration or amendment.

If the Lord himself were to offer a bill here, it would not have a chance in the world unless it advocated free trade, state rights, and was indorsed by a Democratic caucus, and He would not support either of those doctrines.

But it does not lie in the mouth of the Republican Party to charge Democrats with extravagance. For a generation they have had full control, and they did nothing to stop it. For a generation the Democrats have howled about Republican extravagance. Now that the Democrats are in control the rôles are exchanged—Republicans are doing the howling and Democrats are padding the expenses in the same old way. But these recriminations get us nowhere. It is merely the "pot" calling the "kettle" blackface.

We should face the situation like sensible, level-headed business men.

If you will cut out waste and extravagance and stop useless and unnecessary expenditures and postpone expenditures not immediately pressing, in a determined, businesslike way, the Treasury will take care of itself.

But even if it is considered that we must raise immediate funds, the Government provided for an issue of bonds to meet the cost of the Panama Canal; but instead the Treasury paid $207,246,398 of the cost out of current funds, leaving $240,569,000 bonds unsold; and if the emergency requires, why not sell some of these bonds?

The people, whether it is on account of the tariff or the war or for whatever reason, are in no shape to stand additional taxes.

The railroads are complaining, business men are complaining, the people are groaning under the high cost of living, which, by the way, you Democrats loudly promised to reduce, and nothing short of absolute necessity will reconcile them to additional taxation.

The President says we must not sell bonds, for that will disturb business; we must tax, but the only difference between the two is a mere matter of time.

Now, let us see. In either case the money must be drawn from the people. But will it disturb business more to draw it from the money-lending class as a loan than to draw it from people who are already overburdened? Will it disturb business more to draw it from the banks, who owe the money, than to take it from the pantries of the people?

If you raise it by an immediate tax you compel the masses to pay at a very inopportune time.

To raise it by selling bonds you borrow it from those able to lend and repay by a tax when the people are abler to pay; and besides, if these Panama Canal bonds are sold the traffic in the canal will pay the interest and at maturity retire the bonds.

But it is suggested that you can not sell bonds, for nobody with money would buy. I do not believe it. The people must furnish the money or your tax collector can not get it. If they have the money they will buy the bonds if you offer them to public subscription. The only difference will be that poor people will not be oppressed by higher cost of living when they are out of work.

I caution you to be careful of levying additional burdens upon the masses at this time.

I congratulate you that you have abandoned your freight-bill tax. It was the very worst scheme you could have devised. Some of your selected subjects of taxation are not much wiser, but I question the necessity of taxation at all at this time.

You insist on taxing "gasoline." It is well known that the Standard Oil Co. or its subsidiaries fix the price of crude oil and the price of the manufactured products. Although three-fourths of the production are consumed at home and only one-fourth goes abroad, under the shabby pretense that the foreigners were not buying oil the Standard stopped buying the crude, meanwhile cutting down the price of crude, and the trade is in a deplorable condition. Recently the Standard has resumed, at the marked-down price, the buying of probably as much of the production as the markets demand.

Unfortunately, the chief difficulty is that created by the producers, in producing and expecting the Standard to provide tankage for over 150,000 barrels every day more than the world uses.

Now, in this situation your bill puts a tax upon gasoline—by the way, a trifle of about 16 per cent—which under present circumstances is bound to be paid by the producer, and after he pays it will be made the occasion of raising the price by the wholesaler, the jobber, and the retailer; and the consumer—with the profits of each added—will pay probably 3 cents more for his gasoline.

And you failed to do an obvious thing that would have been of great benefit to the oil producers and would have added large sums to the revenues.

Mexico is sending into this country 66,000 barrels daily of cheap oil. It is brought here and used as a club to beat down the price of our oil, bringing distress to our own people. Instead of taxing gasoline you should tax Mexican imported oil.

Retrenchment and economy and a brave policy will surely postpone any need of taxation. If you must tax, make an addition to the income tax. This is a tax that will fall due next June and only fall on those able to pay.

Besides this, there is another tax which ought to be levied in the interest of the public morals, and I refer to a proposition which I introduced more than a year ago. It is now known as House bill 18591 and has laid in the Ways and Means Committee since without action. It would produce several millions of revenue and would prohibit gambling and bucket-shop transactions and would protect legitimate speculation, and I commend it to those Members of the House who wish to relieve honest business from burdens as much as possible, though it is useless to discuss it now, as amendments are not allowed.

The great disturbance and losses due to the war in Europe impress thoughtful men as never before with the importance of a policy of building up American industries and producing for ourselves whatever can be made here, and of building up a merchant marine, not by any precarious experiments, such as your shipping bill, but by a careful adaptation of the protective system that has so signally developed our manufacturing industries, and thus render this country largely independent of all other countries.

It is also easy to perceive that the present offers great opportunities for this country, and that great markets heretofore supplied by the belligerent nations now invite American goods.

It must not be imagined, however, that the trade of South American and the nations formerly supplied by Europe will be dropped into our laps like ripe plums.

England and Germany have built up a great trade with those countries through persistent efforts and wise catering to their wants, and before we can get much of that trade we must supply the banking facilities that are now nonexistent and prepare to give the merchants of those countries the long credits and facilities that England and Germany heretofore have given them. Even the trade we now have with them will be disrupted or be done with great difficulty, because the banking facilities furnished by Europe are not now available, and before we can enjoy that trade we must establish facilities of our own.

Certain other significant facts are also apparent. When Belgium ceases to ship her glass here American glassmakers go to work; when German hosiery ceases to come in American spindles begin to hum. These facts prove the beneficence of the protective tariff.

Our southern brethren are imploring the Government for aid to hold their cotton until Europe can manufacture it. We have pursued the senseless policy of shipping our cotton to England and Germany and France, having it manufactured there and returned to us before we could get it on our backs, while every pound of it ought to be and could be manufactured here, where the world would be obliged to come and get it.

If the war continues long, this is what we will be obliged to do, and already the statements are made that our mills will increase their manufactures of cotton from 10 to 15 per cent this year.

The war will shut out certain goods, and we may have to raise our revenues from other sources than customs, but if immediately we will go to work to produce for ourselves a new era of prosperity will ensue. This, after all, is the very purpose of a protective tariff.

And, Mr. Speaker, when the people of this country are industriously employed the expenses of government become a mere bagatelle.

There could nothing better happen to this country than if we were obliged to make for ourselves everything that could be made in America. This war is proving to Democrats that this is our true policy. Protectionists have known this all along.

Mr. Speaker, there is one feature in the present situation overlooked that is more important than the cry for gold. Normal economic conditions have been upset. The rising cost of food is in the nature of a tragedy. Workingmen everywhere are feeling the pinch of poverty. Taking advantage of war prices abroad, prices are raised as though we had a war here.

There is no justification for it. It is inspired by criminal greed and speculation. Congress is doing nothing about it or, if doing anything, is proceeding in the leisurely investigations of conditions that a blind man can see without glasses. Congress ought to take hold of these gamblers with a strong hand. It ought not sit quiescent with conditions heavy with misfortune staring us in the face. It has the power. If it were possible, it ought to levy an embargo upon the export of foodstuffs until prices fall to reasonable figures.

I can think of no speedier way to raise revenues or no more effective way of reaching the speculators and gamblers who are marking up prices and raising the cost of breadstuffs and the cost of living than by the levying of an export duty on breadstuffs, but I suppose our lawyers will tell you that would be unconstitutional.

England sets the example. Hardly had the war started when Parliament supported the Government in assuming control of the maximum prices of food to check attempts to corner or speculate with or arbitrarily raise the prices of food, and we should do something of the sort rather than to levy more taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I would be ashamed to raise factious opposition to this bill for partisan reasons. If it is really necessary to tax the people at this time, let us have facts and sound reason and not vague rumors and war scares; but until I see some bill of particulars, something more substantial than panicky rumors of some direful calamity, I shall not vote for a tax at this time. But if more money is necessary, why not spread it over a number of years by a sale of bonds? Or, better still, let us economize and retrench and postpone some of our expenditures or, as a last resort, impose an additional income tax upon those able to pay; but in any event let us keep our fingers out of the dinner bucket of the working classes.

I have faith that President Wilson will keep us out of all foreign entanglements, and if he does so there is no occasion for a "big scare." There is a golden opportunity. If we are wise and brave, we will not be misled by the so-called conservatism of those who make gold a "fetish" that always skulks and hides in time of need. The power of the Government to pay its debts depends never upon its possession of sufficient gold, but upon its unlimited power to tax.

Gold serves probably as well as any commodity could as a measure of values, but it never did exist in any great commercial country as a currency, because it never exists in sufficient quantity and is always supplemented by a greatly preponderant volume of forms of credit. Thus we have our greenbacks, our national-bank currency, and our emergency currency. All are forms of credit measured in gold, but at the first lack of faith in the Government the gold would fly into hiding.

The war by shutting out competition affords us a great opportunity to set the brains and skill and brawn of all our people again at work, and if to do this it would be necessary to send every ounce of gold in the Treasury out of the country it would be a profitable operation, for every six months we could buy it all back with the profits of our industries.

Set our people to work and they will make small matter of raising your revenues. If we are alive to our opportunities, the war that is scourging Europe will in the providence of God reestablish the industry of our people which was crippled by your free-trade tariff.

This is no time to give new jobs to an army of tax collectors. Call out the dinner-bucket brigade and set it to work. That is the only way to create real wealth. Build up our merchant marine; we have the chance of a lifetime. This is no time for timidity. The coward dies a thousand deaths. This is a time for red-blooded, courageous statesmanship.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS]. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, I can not vote for this war-tax bill. It is unwonted and unusual, uneven and untimely, unfair and unjust, unwise and unnecessary.

I might vote for a war-tax measure as careful and considerate of the man that has little as this is of the man that has much, of the individual who labors as of the corporation that lives off his labor; as considerate of the small independent oil-refining company as it is of the great Standard Oil Co., provided, of course, I could believe a war tax at all necessary at this time.

I might have voted for a war-tax measure equitably and justly drawn had Treasury conditions continued as they were in August last; but, Mr. Speaker, conditions are not now as then, perhaps, they promised to be, and this legislation is clearly unnecessary at this time.

The last daily statement of the United States Treasury, made at the close of business September 23, 1914, is in part as follows:

Receipts affecting the general fund balance, September 23, 1914.

	This day.	This month to date, fiscal year 1915.	Corresponding month and date, fiscal year 1914.	Fiscal year 1915 to this date.	Fiscal year 1914 to corresponding date.
Revenue receipts	$1,640,650.81	$42,319,728.53	$44,050,174.72	$166,616,800.38	$165,881,896.00

Mr. Speaker, the great State of California is unjustly affected by this bill. Every citizen of that State with any love of country in his heart is willing to bear his due proportion of the public expense; but every man does, as every man should, object to being levied on to a greater extent than his fellows elsewhere. Whenever a war tax is necessary, levy it alike upon all and I will be for it.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, whose districts are so seriously affected by the excessive tax proposed on wines, have facts and figures to advance that show the unfairness of this bill. Because amendment of this measure has been made impossible, and therefore argument unavailable, I shall close by submitting the following telegrams recently received:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 22, 1914.

Congressman WILLIAM D. STEPHENS,
Washington, D. C.:

We understand that a bill is to be introduced in the Senate and House proposing a tax of 2 cents per gallon on gasoline. This tax would be discriminating against a particular class of people already bearing more than their share of the taxes of this State, and the Motor Car Dealers' Association of Los Angeles, representing the largest body of motorists in California, do emphatically protest against this class legislation. Such tax will seriously injure an industry which forms an important element in the commercial welfare of the West, throttling a business already developed, and preventing an expansion decidedly promising at this time. It would involve injury to over a quarter of a million families depending upon this business alone in the State of California. We would earnestly ask your consideration of this bill and request you, as representative of this State, to use every effort in your power to prevent the passing of this bill.

MOTOR CAR DEALERS' ASSOCIATION,
C. F. SMITH, President.

PASADENA, CAL., September 23, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS,
Washington, D. C.:

The Pasadena Clearing House Association at a meeting to-day unanimously protests against the provision of the Underwood bill taxing banks $2 per thousand upon capital, surplus, and profits, because it puts the burden upon one class of corporations instead of all corporations alike. The banks are willing to assume their fair share of the burden, and urge that the provision be readjusted so that a proportionate assessment be levied upon all corporations alike.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 24, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We believe proposed tax from 12 to 20 cents gallon on wines excessive, as much wine is sold at 15 to 20 cents a gallon. California is willing to pay its share of taxes, but would suggest smaller levy. Why not tax maker and consumer of chewing gum 1 cent a package? Would be felt less.

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
LOUIS M. COLE, President.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 16, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS,
Washington, D. C.:

The proposed so-called war tax on gasoline would be very disastrous to the oil industry of this State. It would very likely put the independent refiner out of business. As independent oil refiners, we urge you to use your best endeavors to defeat this measure.

DENSMORE STABLER REFINING CO.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 16, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Proposed tax of 2 cents per gallon on gasoline will put every independent manufacturer of gasoline in California out of business and destroy all revenue instead of increasing it for the Government. Certain large producers of gasoline can, by holding price as at present, compel small producers of gasoline to quit if tax is insisted on. Tax crude if must tax oil, and scatter amount on all products of petroleum and not on gasoline alone. By taxing crude the consumers, who are many, will bear the burden. By taxing gasoline the manufacturers will bear it, who are few.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 18, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Members of Los Angeles Stock Exchange report themselves worried over war tax of $50 per capita, which they think is unjust, as Los Angeles broker can not be compared with eastern broker. Respectfully suggest graduated scale, with minimum amount of burden on western broker.

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
LOUIS M. COLE, President.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH].

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, socially this is a unique period. Never before in the world's history did the political and social follies of men appear so clearly. The way is now open for some important corrections, because their folly in several matters has become so apparent.

CONGRESS HAS THE POWER TO ACT.

We need not dwell upon past errors, except when it is necessary in order to show the need for wise action. This is no time for criticism further than such criticism as points out the way to reform. Men and women are not to blame for what a false system forces upon them. But we are to blame if in the very light of recognized errors we fail to exercise that degree of judgment which we would naturally use if we were but to open our eyes and unlock our brains.

The President, in a message, asks us to vote a war tax; but why? We have no war and expect none. The only way we could get into a war would be to go around with a chip on our shoulder challenging other nations to knock it off. They do not want war with us. The President, of course, is in good faith, but what he really proposes is to patch an unnatural system, which is already worn in every part to shreds. The President proposes burden upon burden. The last straw breaks the camel's back. It is true that Europe is ablaze and the destruction of life and property is tremendous; but nothing should be destroyed here as a result of the war, so why should we allow the European war to destroy our reason? We could easily economize and save more than the $100,000,000 tax, and our economy, if properly exercised, would deprive no one. It is not my purpose, however, to point out transient economies. Now that we have an object lesson and the incentive to profit by experience, let us consider permanent things required to place men and women who earn their living in control, so that we may vitalize a system that will save us the suffering that results from our own follies as well as from the follies of other nations.

The European war destroys no legitimate agency in the United States. Men and women are as healthy and as able to work and produce as they ever were. Everything we require can be produced in the United States. We have had a good harvest and there is nothing legitimate to interfere with the prosperity of our people. The difficulties that we have are not due to natural conditions. They are the result of the failure of our political and social practices to conform to natural conditions. I purpose to strike directly at these failures in order to show wherein we may rescue ourselves from them.

First of all let us get the facts straight in our minds; then we can act intelligently.

A HUNDRED YEARS OF MECHANICAL IMPROVEMENTS.

A hundred years is but a short period in the life of nations, but the mechanical improvements have been tremendous in that period, and the last of the century has been more wonderful than any earlier part of it.

Since steam and electricity have furnished the basis for power men and women are able to accomplish more, by several hundred times in some respects, than they could accomplish before. But it is not alone in the use of steam and electricity that mechanics have advanced. The farmer of to-day is supplied with many mechanical devices that wonderfully economize his time and enable him and his family to furnish to the world more by several times in the way of farm products than he could when the spade, the hand sickle, the dash churn, the pitchfork, the simple needle and thread, and other simple tools and devices were his only implements. The wageworker, too, has placed in his hands various appliances that immensely increase the products from his toil. Without entering into special details in all of these respects, since all intelligent persons understand them, it is a fact that in every human pursuit the means of application have improved so greatly that men and women can accomplish immensely more than they could at any earlier period. It averages many times greater. We also understand nature better than ever and make a better application of our intelligence in deciding to what use the lands shall be put, what crops shall be grown, in applying water powers, and many other things. The sunshine, the rains, and the seasons are as good as ever. Therefore we possess the knowledge as well as the mechanical devices, and nature favors us. With these as the fundamental basis we should become immensely prosperous.

WHAT HAVE WE TO SHOW FOR IT?

Suppose we take a tour over an average farm; we would find a family, healthy, industrious, and intelligent. The production of that farm is sufficient to furnish all the food required by the family and as many as 10 or more other families of equal size. A few things, like salt, sugar, coffee, and so forth, they would have to buy, but these are, as a rule, raised in quantities on other farms. In addition, the same average farm would produce wool, hides, and so forth, to supply material for shoes and clothes. Of course, factories are required in which to make the finished product. But here again we have the wageworkers employed, who, each with the necessary mechanical appliances, make enough of the articles to supply hundreds of other persons. It is unnecessary to say more about this, for the intelligent person generally understands that each person engaged in work produces a sufficient quantity to supply numerous other persons, in some cases thousands of them. But if we return to the farmer we shall find that he toils early and late, and his wife likewise, and even then he is forced to pay all the surplus production of his farm for the few things he buys, and at the same time must go without many of the things that the family needs. The wageworker likewise works long days, and gives up all his surplus production for what he is forced to buy to furnish a bare subsistence for himself and his family. A few middlemen are required to make the exchanges, but each of them serves several hundred persons. All this that I have stated shows that if it were not for some other causes than those I have thus far mentioned the farmer, the wageworker, and all others performing useful service should each be several times more successful than he is. Now, then, since we understand that to be a fact, let us find the reason for our not being more successful.

THE REASON WHY.

It is because we are politically and economically proceeding upon a wrong basis. I purpose to point out that fact in connection with this proposed war tax. We are not at war. Therefore why vote a war tax? It is proposed because our finances are run by speculators. We are burdened in a way that we can not much longer bear. We have been fools for bearing it thus long. The President does not seem to know it. Several other Presidents do not seem to have known it. McKinley was the first since Lincoln to have made any public note of the wrong. Members of Congress seem to fear to analyze it. The war is a mere excuse for the emergency. The condition is here, irrespective of the war. This Nation is doomed to destruction by dry rot unless we remedy the false system that I am describing. It is worse than war, for servitude to a false system is the lowest state that man can enter upon.

Our potential wealth lies in our ability to work, and it should be our privilege as well as our right to obtain the value of what we produce without being forced to pay a rake-off to those who pay no equal value in return.

As business operates now, those of us occupied in productive enterprises are paid only a part of the value of what we produce or what our labor is worth. The other part is taken by monopoly and becomes capital. The capital becomes the basis on which we are forced to pay tribute in the form of rents, dividends, and interest. The more we produce the more capital gets to make us pay profits on. Besides, there are the patent privileges, inventions, so-called "good will," and other devices that are capitalized, and afterwards dividends and interest charged upon the capitalization, and the people made to pay it.

PROFITS AGAINST LABOR.

The terrible cost of paying the tribute that I have referred to can not be understood unless we examine into it, nor can we realize the wonderful prosperity that would result from the establishment of an honest system. Property is so controlled now that it is given the power through its owners to frightfully depress men and women who work for a living. I shall use two tables to prove in part its fearful effect.

Dividends, interest, rents, and so forth, are effectively the same whether figured on loans or on property. One dollar invested for 100 years at compound interest computed by the method practiced by the bankers amounts to the following sums:

6 per cent amounts to	$340
8 per cent amounts to	2,203
10 per cent amounts to	13,808
12 per cent amounts to	84,075
18 per cent amounts to	15,145,007
24 per cent amounts to	2,551,798,404

The above table shows the manner in which the capitalist is usurping the privileges that men and women should possess as a return for their labor.

Congress and the legislatures, as well as the courts, undertake to enforce interest and dividend payments on "vested capital" even beyond the possibility to pay in full and wholly regardless of common justice. The above table shows, and the practice in business proves, that no one can successfully compete with those who own property and control money and credit, nor can the smaller property owners successfully compete with the larger ones. Nothing can now compete with the $1 except $2, and nothing with $2 except $3, and so on up. The larger the sum the greater the cinch.

This compounding of profits, great as its ultimate results are, does not operate to the advantage of those of us who happen to have a few shares of dividend-paying stock or small deposits or sums of money due us on which we get interest, because we do not live long enough to secure the full advantage. But we need not live 100 years to have it operate against us, for the system has been in operation for more than 100 years, and during that period has accumulated the capital now controlled by a few and upon which we are required to pay the terrible toll that comes from compounding fortunes in the manner described in my Table No. 1 and that produced the effect described in my Table No. 2, which is as follows:

Number of the class.	Persons engaged.	Average income.	Aggregate income.	Number in each class, including their families.
1	37,815,000	$601	$22,725,590,000	94,537,500
2	126,000	4,500	567,000,000	315,000
3	178,000	7,500	1,385,000,000	445,000
4	53,000	12,500	632,500,000	132,500
5	24,500	17,500	428,750,000	61,250
6	10,500	22,500	236,250,000	26,250
7	21,000	37,500	787,500,000	52,500
8	8,500	75,000	637,500,000	21,250
9	2,500	175,000	437,500,000	6,250
10	550	375,000	206,250,000	1,375
11	350	750,000	262,500,000	875
12	100	1,500,000	150,000,000	250
	38,240,000	.....	28,426,440,000	95,600,000

Table No. 2 is approximately correct. There are a few persons whose annual incomes run from $5,000,000 to probably near $50,000,000.

Those in class 1 of the table have been reduced to about the lowest extremity. Occasionally persons in class 1 make a lucky strike or by some unusual circumstance get into a class with a larger income. To do so they must oppress the class from which they emerge or else reduce one or more in the other classes to a class with a smaller income. A few such cases occur, but the total of the underpaid and overworked will increase instead of diminsh as long as property—dead material—is socially and legally given a better status than human life; that is, it now enables the owner, the capitalist, to sit back idly and compel men and women, even children, to work and slave to pay tribute to mere material substance. That is not all. A system of credit is pyramided over and over and is supported by the products of our daily toil, and upon this credit we are also forced to pay tribute.

In consequence of this vicious system the farmer is forced to sell his farm products below their value, the wageworker and others are forced to accept less than they earn. Besides, there are millions unemployed.

I do not state these facts, the substantial truth of which can not be denied, for the mere purpose of showing that I know about them. It is of no value to me to know about them unless there are enough others who know so that by uniting we may force the adoption of a remedy.

The truth of what I have stated is evidenced in part by the desperate fight the railways are making to raise their freight and passenger rates. Only last week the presidents of seven railway systems appealed to the President of the United States in person for aid, and the President has promised to use persuasion for them. They wished to sell securities for the huge sum of $578,000,000, and wish to make the people pay higher freight and passenger rates in order to collect interest and dividends upon that sum from them. For several months proceedings were pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission to raise freight and passenger rates on the railways in the eastern division, and they were given a raise in order to meet the terrible drain upon them caused by the system. Other proceedings will follow for the middle and western divisions. They are forced to apply for relief in order to save themselves from bankruptcy. They will come again for more, because the interest will soon eat up any increased rates that may be given. Ultimately they will all be bankrupt, if we retain the present system, because the limit will be reached beyond which they can not go. My Table No. 1 shows the reason.

The railways are not alone in seeking to raise prices of what they have to furnish. The same thing is being done everywhere by everybody.

WHO PAYS FOR IT ALL?

It is paid for by the farmer, the wageworker, and some others who serve the welfare of men and women. That is why the farmer, who produces more than ten times as much as he consumes; the wageworker, and some others, who earn many times more than they are paid, give all their surplus production and earnings to support a system that creates parasites. They are paying these extraordinary dividends and interest charges for the support of the parasites.

If you wish to see the "nigger in the woodpile", who is making all this trouble, search the Wall Streeters who control the New York banks. The Wall Street banks also hold the reserves of the country banks.

Let me again remind the House that the new currency law gives still greater power than before existed to the Wall Streeters to concentrate their hold upon the money and credit system, and will enable them to extort more from the people than heretofore. It will keep things going for a short time, but in a few years look out for the snake that will creep out from it, devouring everything in its path. I stated in a minority report on that bill that the Government's money should not be turned over to the banks, because in any emergency it would bring distress to withdraw it for Government use. I did not then believe that my statement would so soon be proven by practical experience to be true. But now, only a few months later, the President, in a message, asks for a $100,000,000 war tax, and admits that it would not really be needed if we withdrew from the banks the $75,000,000 Uncle Sam has on deposit in them. The President does not wish to withdraw that, because he believes that to do so might be dangerous. There, then, is the proof of the prediction that I made in my minority report to the new currency bill. Still, under the provisions of that bill all the moneys of the United States will be placed in the banks when the new law is put in full operation. It will be working in time for them to grab the $100,000,000 tax which it is proposed to vote against the people.

The banks pay at the rate of about $1,500,000 per annum for the use of Uncle Sam's $75,000,000, and they charge the people on that sum directly at the rate of from $4,500,000 to $6,000,000. But that is not all. The $75,000,000 forms a basis for a credit system of over $500,000,000, allowing the same average for that as on other moneys. The banks charge for that credit also, and upon that the people pay at the rate of approximately $30,000,000 per annum, a charge which is based upon the money which they have paid in as taxes. I do not blame the banks for making all this easy money. Any of us would do the same if we were in the business, but we are fools for letting them get away with it. The people have not been given time to realize its meaning. If they do so, as I believe they soon will, there will be mighty few of those who are responsible for the maintenance of such a system in office after the election that follows. Those of the 95,000,000 of us who receive any cash go to the receiving windows of 30,000 banks and trust companies and hand them our hard-earned cash. This cash is flowing from the 30,000 banks into Wall Street and other speculating centers like a flood stream, and they make us pay interest and dividends on our own money.

The seven railway presidents who asked the President for aid to their roads presented the idea that should be a warning to us all. The railways—great institutions, performing a necessary service—they, too, are being ground between the stones by the same process that the rest of us are. But they have a chance to make an appeal for help. They have done so. The people have no such opportunity. The President has promised to help the railways. He has given them moral support already, which has enabled them to get some advantages that they could not have secured otherwise. But the advantages that they have obtained are taxed to the people, who themselves are already overburdened. Therefore I ask you to look into this matter a little deeper. The railway presidents, as a rule, are large stockholders in their railways, but in addition to their railway stock they and their associates control the Wall Street banks, and when I say Wall Street I mean all the affiliated banks in the larger cities. They use the railways to pay interest to their banks. The banks charge them high interest, and that makes the expenses of the railways large and forms an excuse for their presidents to ask for increase in freight and passenger charges. It is a deep game you well understand when you know those who work at it, and it all finally lands right square on the people's earnings and gobbles them up. The railways are now principally used for feeders to the big banks that are controlled by the large stockholders. I mention this that you may be reminded of the system. The railways need help, and we should give it to them by curbing the Wall Street banks.

WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO?

Not only are the Wall Street bankers strangling the railways, but they are strangling all legitimate enterprise. Shall we now simply vote $100,000,000 tax to be levied on the farmers, wage earners, and others who earn their living by work? Even if they do not pay it in the first instance, they do in the end, and the end is not far off. Shall we do that in order that the $75,000,000 that has already been collected in taxes may be retained by the Wall Street banks? We will not if we serve the people. Those who have the brains to think, and use them, know that money and credit pay nothing. These are mere conveniences for measuring the pay; but the men and the women who really pay are the men and the women who work. It matters not whether the work they do is on the farm, in the shop, in the schoolroom, or elsewhere. The workers pay for all that are idle as well as for those who are occupied in other than useful pursuits and who contribute nothing, but are parasites, supported by the workers in the legitimate fields of industry. Money and credit as it is now obtained, the greater part of it, is falsely created and does not measure back to the workers a fair pay for the work they do, but, instead, is used as a means to gouge them out of the products resulting from their toil.

THE REMEDY.

There might be a temporary inconvenience if in one sweep we shifted from the present dishonest to an honest system that would give to the toilers an honest deal, but that inconvenience would be caused by the grasp that the greedy now have and would then exercise in order to make as much trouble as they could. But are we always to remain industrial slaves in order to avoid the inconvenience that these greedy ones might be able to make at first? Are we never to be free from their grasp? I have already noted that the railways are demanding an advance. The people have paid in full several times over for the railways, still they are capitalized larger than ever in order to make the people pay even more than heretofore. The same thing occurs in other business. Most of the so-called "big business" has been paid and repaid over and over, and still the capitalization grows larger and larger and the levies for dividends and interest increase yearly, and this is what we term "wealth," whereas in truth it is poverty, for it produces that effect upon the working men and women who sustain it.

LET US WAIT NO LONGER.

Now is an opportune time to wedge in with a remedy. I propose a remedy on a small scale, one that anyone can follow without being frightened, but nevertheless forming the wedge to ultimately pry greed out of the way.

AN AMENDMENT.

I am opposed to a $100,000,000 war tax or any other tax imposed in order to leave the $75,000,000, heretofore collected from the people, in the banks for speculation. We should first use what has been collected. But since the slates are made up to levy a $100,000,000 tax against the people, I wish to do the best I can to have that wrong do as little harm as possible. Therefore I have introduced an amendment to issue $100,000,000 in legal-tender notes, money to anticipate the tax and pay it for the Government operating expenses. Since it is proposed to tax the people $100,000,000, let us issue to them $100,000,000, to be returned and canceled as they pay it back in the taxes proposed to be levied. That is the honest way to pay the Government's operating expenses. It makes the amount available as rapidly as it would be required, and there would be no rake-off for the Wall Streeters if it remained in the Treasury until paid out for Government expenses. It would create no inflation, because it would be paid out naturally and return in payment of taxes. But doing that alone would not bring back the $75,000,000 that the Wall Streeters now have of Uncle Sam's money. We do not want to give that to them. It is true that the President stated in his message that it might be dangerous to make them pay it now. We should favor any reasonable way to get these matters adjusted in order to separate the Government from Wall Street. For that reason I have offered my amendment, providing that as rapidly as the notes are paid into circulation by the Treasury an equal amount of the Government's deposits with the banks shall be withdrawn until all is paid, thus collecting the money due the Government, in lieu of which it is intended to vote this war tax. Of course, you understand that as fast as the notes are paid out, like other money, it will be deposited in the banks and enable them to pay the Government deposits. I propose it in this way, because I know that Members of Congress—that is, a majority of them—as well as the President, fear to act independently of the banks. They have tied the Government's finances to the banks and are therefore afraid of the banks But my proposition will not in the least endanger the strength of the banks to meet their obligations.

The stand-pat press will say as little about my amendment as possible, unless it is to ridicule it. It will get no favorable mention except from the independent press. Still, I have advanced a plan that is absolutely practical, as well as scientific. To issue money indiscriminately, without providing a tax for its retirement, would be unscientific. But even that would be better than our present system, because the Government would get the rake-off instead of the private speculators, as is done under our present system.

WALL STREET'S PRINCIPAL DREAD IS THAT THE PUBLIC WILL LEARN HOW TO DO ITS OWN FINANCING.

Upon a certain fact the Wall Street bankers are silent; the "special interests" are silent; the stand-pat press is silent. Not one of them dares to whisper the facts about that certain truth. They wish to have a certain law repealed, but they dare not attempt it, because they know that if they did the public would learn about that law, and instead of it being repealed its scope would be widened and result to the enormous advantage of the people. Therefore a law which the Wall Streeters dread more than all other things is silently serving the public—silently, because it is kept a secret, because Wall Street fears that if the truth about this law were generally known the United States would issue and control its own money instead of giving the Wall Streeters the control as now.

How many people know about the law to which I have referred? This law was passed on the advice of Lincoln. By its authority there is in circulation $349,093,016 of the kind of money which my amendment proposes. It is the only honest money now in circulation, because it is the only money that did not start on its mission of exchange without raking off a part of the people's earnings when it was first put into circulation. That is why Wall Street and its agents are so profoundly secret about that law. Even Government officials dare not whisper it, for fear the Wall Streeters will undermine them if they do. Even the Secretary of the Treasury's daily reports dwarf the truth about the law by having it printed in minute type, so small that old people can scarcely read it and the younger pass it by unobserved, because the type in the rest of the report is so large as to obscure this. The purpose is to keep the people ignorant of the law, because it is believed that if they generally knew that the Government could, in the first instance, issue and pay into circulation currency it would be done in that way and the graft of the Wall Streeters would end. I have talked with Congressmen who did not know about this law. How can it be expected that the general public will know about it if Congressmen, whose duty it is to know, do not?

MORE EMPHASIS.

To further emphasize the fact, I repeat that by authority of the Lincoln law there is $349,093,016 of legal-tender notes—money—in circulation, supported by the credit of Uncle Sam, on which the Wall Streeters got no rake-off at the time of its issue. It is the only honest money in circulation, because it did not get its start by grafting the people. All the rest of the money and credit has been given over to the control of the "special interests," and I reemphasize that the new currency law is the worst ever. The system is already gnawing at the very vitals of our Nation, and when the new law gets into full swing its teeth will sink deeper.

THE KEY.

The amendment that I propose is the key with which to open the door to a new system. Whenever the Government appropriates for Government expenses, it means that the amount appropriated must be collected from the people. There is no escape of the tax that results. Therefore, simultaneously with the tax levy, there should be an issue of legal-tender notes equal to liquidate the tax to be collected, and paid into circulation for Government expenses covered by the appropriations. How natural for these notes to return in payment of the tax and be canceled unless needed for a like purpose. No stringency would occur, and there would be no rake-off for the Wall Streeters—no interest to be paid. The only reason for opposition to my amendment is because of the fear of Wall Street. If my amendment is passed, it will not be long until we will have a scientific money and credit system—one that will measure the values in commercial exchanges without the terrible rake-off from the earnings of the people that my Table No. 1 shows, and the effects disclosed by my Table No. 2. If the amendment is adopted, never again will a tax of $100,000,000 be imposed on the people in order to let the Wall Streeters keep the Government's deposits to speculate on.

THE BLAME.

This is not a currency bill; therefore I shall not discuss at length the intricate complications arising out of our present false financial system. I regret the various ways in which it is attempted to blame this, that, and the other thing for the trouble that is experienced by most of the people in securing the things that are necessary to their comfortable and proper living. We have an Industrial Commission, given three years' life, to find out why the cost of living is so high. We have passed a trade-commission law. Various proceedings are pending to prosecute individuals as well as the trusts, and legislation has been enacted which is alleged to be for the same purpose. All that work will go to waste and is a dead-weight and burden upon the people, and the acts to which I refer are mere temporary makeshifts, on which the "special interests" wish the people to hang their hopes for the future in the belief that they will be satisfied that something worth while will come out of all these things in the end. That is a game carefully played by the political parties.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

The trouble with public officials is not dishonesty. But too many of them are cowards. Shakespeare said: "Conscience doth make cowards of us all." If he had lived in our time and place, he might rightly have said: "Politics makes cowards of politicians." I have learned enough about public officials, both high and low in rank, to have formed a belief that most of them wish to accomplish the best for the public, but, as a rule, are too cowardly to do as well as they could for the public. They know that if they act independently in the interests of the public they would be opposed by the "special interests," and at the same time they believe that it would not be appreciated by the general public, because the latter is too busy with other matters to be informed thoroughly on the social and political problems. Therefore inactivity in the support of the public rights always gets the favor of the "special interests" and their support in elections. That is why so few dare to take on a fight in the public interest. That may be a practical view for the politicians to take; and whether it is or not, many of them act upon it; and as long as that continues to the extent that it does now there will be many "make-believe reforms" before actual reforms will be provided. The public will be forced to learn by actual experience of the kind of grind that we are now subjected to industrially; the same kind of which the railways are complaining, though it is less severe on them than on the plain working people. This grind will never cease as long as property—dead material—is given first place, a preference, a privilege, to so-called reasonable profits, while men and women are given only sufficient to permit of their subsistence, and that in order that they shall be able to do the drudgery—the work necessary to maintain the system.

If we would get at the underlying causes of the present European struggle, we would find them in a greedy commercialism, in many respects similar, but older, than the system that exists in our own country. Our system was shaped largely by European influence in order that Europeans should have no example of a truly progressive people here. There the royalty, the aristocracy, the wealthy live off the working people. Here the speculators and aristocrats roll in luxury by extracting from the laboring people the accumulations of their labor. Of course there is dissatisfaction among those who perform the work and receive only a bare subsistence when they see the extravagance of the others—those who do nothing of value for mankind, but do all the spending. Anything is likely to be staged by those in power, enjoying all the advantages, to postpone the day when an honest system may be adopted which will result in universal prosperity instead of prosperity alone for the idle and useless, as it is now.

This war bill comes to us drafted by a committee and a secret caucus. We are forbidden the privilege of amendment, a proceeding quite common here in Congress. Such action enables the politicians to indirectly defeat the people's wishes without shouldering the blame themselves. Because the House has seen fit to permit the committee and the secret caucus to shut off all discussion and prohibit amendment, I am inserting my amendment in the RECORD. It is as follows:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue on the credit of the United States, in such sums as this act provides, in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized, United States noninterest-bearing notes, payable to the bearer at the Treasury of the United States, and of such denominations as he may deem expedient; and such notes shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, internal duties, excises, debts, and demands of every kind due to the United States, except duties on imports and interest, and of all claims and demands against the United States, except where otherwise stipulated, and shall also be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States, except duties on imports and interest, as aforesaid. That said notes shall be issued as nearly as practical in the form of the notes issued under the act to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, to wit, the act of March 3, 1863, and shall be paid into circulation for the general running expenses of the Government in manner as follows: Ten millions of dollars shall be issued and paid into circulation for said purposes as soon as practical, and thereafter, conditioned that the said $10,000,000 does not equal the average monthly collections made under the provisions of this act, such additional sums of said notes shall be issued and paid into circulation as may be required to make the total issue equal to the average monthly collections of taxes, internal duties, and excises made under the provisions of this act; and that when the said notes are returned to the Treasury they shall be repaid into circulation as soon as practical in anticipation of collection to be made under the provisions of this act, but to such extent only as will keep the outstanding issue authorized by this section equal to the average monthly collections made as aforesaid.

The amendment above proposed scared the Wall Streeters for fear their caucus system might fail them, so they published falsehoods about it. For instance, the New York Herald stated:

A brilliant contribution to the current debate on national revenue and taxation is made by CHARLES A. LINDBERGH, the new Representative from Minnesota.

"If there is liable to be a Treasury deficit of a hundred millions," says Mr. LINDBERGH, "why, print a hundred millions of greenbacks now and pay them out for running expenses of government; and if more should be needed, why, print them."

Several other newspapers in New York City and in other large cities also misstated the facts. Some of them published a whole column to make things appear falsely. That is the common practice of the "subsidized press." Fortunately there is an independent press also in this country.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, on the 23d day of April, 1913, when the Underwood bill was presented, in the argument by the proponent of the bill, he read this statement and urged the House to note its meaning:

In presenting this bill the committee is met with a threatened deficit in revenue of about $100,000,000, which it is compelled to meet by extraordinary methods of taxation used heretofore only in time of war. As a revenue measure the committee at the very outset confess this bill to be a failure. It would seem as if a party pledged to a revenue tariff would strive to make the revenue feature conspicuous.

That is a statement in the report of the Republican minority in opposition to this bill and quoted on the floor by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] when he presented his bill. Then he says in the same address on the same day:

We will raise by the income tax, according to the estimates, $70,000,000.

Yesterday the same gentleman in presenting this measure now under consideration, which he proposes to force to adoption, announced that the income-tax receipts were $31,000,000. The estimate a year ago was $70,000,000, upon which the bill was based, and the actual receipts were $31,000,000, a loss of $39,000,000.

I can understand, I think, the embarrassment of the Treasury Department. I admit the serious situation of the Treasury Department, that it is heading directly to embarrassment. With that much I can agree with the gentleman from Alabama, but I do not agree with the methods of relief. I do not believe that this law is a success as a revenue producer. All that anyone needs to do is to look at the reports of the movement of commerce, which show increased importations and decreased exportations, and at the same time to the decreased income, both from customs revenue and from the income tax. They fall short of the requirements of the Government, even if economically administered on the basis heretofore, to say nothing about the extravagance of this year.

In discussing relief measures yesterday the gentleman raised the question, Who would go back to placing a tax on raw wool? I am one of the men who will go back and put a tax on raw wool. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Since the Democratic Party has come into power there has been a decrease of one-ninth of the flocks in this country. There has been a decrease of one-tenth of the fleece in this country. There have been imported into this country in seven months 207,807,000 pounds of raw wool upon which, when free, we raised not a dollar of revenue, and which, under the Payne law, would have raised over $19,000,000. How are you going to make that up? By your law you have decreased the product of wool in this country, and thereby you have discouraged to that extent the woolgrowers in this country, and while you are thus reducing the supply by discouraging the producer, the price to the grower will decrease for a time, but will not be gained by the consumer. When you decrease the price of wool you will not give the poor man the cheaper clothing that you promised. [Applause on the Republican side.] I will also say to the author of this bill, in answer to his challenge, that I would restore the duty on sugar.

We have dismantled 12 sugar mills, one-sixth of the sugar factories of the country, built up under the Republican protective policy. The production a year ago was 600,000 tons, and one-sixth of 600,000 is 100,000; we will produce about 500,000 tons probably this year. With this decrease of the supply of sugar without decreasing the demand you increase the price of it. This can be verified by simply consulting the price schedule before the war in Europe broke out. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And yet you offered free sugar for the benefit of the consumer. Mr. UNDERWOOD said, April 23, 1913, "duties reduced would reduce cost of living."

I here insert his words, taken from the RECORD:

Now, I would like the gentlemen on that side of the House, who have maintained this indefeasible system of taxing the poor for five decades, to listen to the other side of the story. On common soap you placed a tax of 20 per cent. We have lowered the tax to 5 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You taxed the furniture of the poor man's house 35 per cent. We have lowered it to 15 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You taxed bread and biscuits 20 per cent. We place them on the free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

On cotton clothing you taxed the people of this country 50 per cent. We have reduced it to 30 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

On the flannels that protect them against the cold winter storms you taxed the people of the United States over 93 per cent, and we have reduced the tax to 25 and 35 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The tax on women's and children's dress goods under your system of levying a tax for the benefit of the manufacturer was about 100 per cent, and we have lowered that to 35 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You taxed the shoes of the people of the United States, after giving the shoemaker free raw material and stating at the time you gave it that he did not need the protection; you gave him 10 per cent and we give free shoes to the people of America. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Note that statement. You said the Republicans put a tariff on shoes and we will give free shoes to the people. What do you mean by free shoes? Are the people getting them without price or even any cheaper than they ever did under the old tariff? Shoes have gone up. The price of clothing will go up, and for the same season. The price of sugar has gone up, and every other article of merchandise will go up when you make yourselves subject to a monopoly of the importer. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, who asks for this additional tax? The country does not want it. The Congress does not want it. No Republican or Democrat upon this floor wants it. No one need be in doubt about the accuracy of this statement. Then, who asks for it? The leader of your party, the President of the Nation. Why does he want it? To the general industrial depression so universal throughout the country, which has covered the land as with a pall, the President sees symptoms of a financial panic, the inevitable result of Democratic policy of "tariff for revenue only." He has determined not to employ the usual Democratic remedy of the issuance of bonds to care for the deficit due to Democratic legislation. He seems to think by changing the remedy the people may not discern the cause. By mere phraseology a people can be induced to accept without investigation. Business condition is merely psychological. Because of falling revenues when our country is at peace and the lanes of trade generally open, an emergency tax is tagged a war tax in the hope that the people will not detect the sophistry.

Mr. Speaker, the openly avowed purpose of a revenue tariff is to collect sufficient duties to defray the running expenses of the Government. This was the expressed purpose of the Wilson bill of 1894, and the widely heralded purpose of the Underwood bill of last year, under which we are now suffering.

As a revenue producer the near-free-trade scheme called "tariff for revenue only" has been a failure each time it has been tried. The scheme, if logically worked out, would place the tariff on the articles which we do not produce, such as coffee, tea, and so forth. This is England's method of revenue tariffs. But the Democrats have adopted the Republican plan in reference to these articles and left them on the free list. The authors of the revenue idea declare it wisdom to lay the duty on such articles as we import, the like of which we can produce, so low as to invite increased importation. The low rate will thus insure a vast bulk of importation, and in the aggregate yield a greater revenue than the higher rate on less importation.

As Mr. UNDERWOOD boldly argued, we want to open our American markets to the foreign producer, which means to place the American toiler in competition with the foreign laborer, and, in the language of the President, allow the American manufacturer to sharpen his wits in competition with his European competitor. It will be noted that the avowed purpose of this sort of legislation is to greatly increase importation and at the same time our revenues. Importations have increased under the Underwood bill, but revenues have decreased. The first seven months of the law the imports increased $123,000,000, while the customs duties decreased about $26,000,000 when compared with the same period of 1913 under the Payne law.

One of the trite arguments of the proponents of a "revenue-only tariff" is that if we open our markets to the foreign producer he in turn will open his to the American producer. In other words, if we increase our importations we will not only increase our revenue, but we will also increase our export. If we buy more, we in turn will sell more, is the dictum of this philosopher, the "revenue-only" advocate.

Here is the second item of disappointment in this legislation. During the first seven months of this law our exports, instead of increasing, decreased $126,000,000. The direct results of this law—buy more, sell less, and collect less revenue.

In April, 1914, we imported about $26,000,000 more and exported $37,000,000 less than one year before, during the same period—a change against us of $63,000,000. In May we imported about $30,000,000 more and exported $33,000,000 less, or we placed $63,000,000 again on the wrong side of the ledger.

In June we imported about $27,000,000 more and exported $6,000,000 less than June, 1913.

In July we imported $21,000,000 more and exported over $6,000,000 less than July, 1913.

From April to July, inclusive, we imported $104,000,000 more and exported $82,000,000 less than in the same period of 1913, under the Payne law, making a loss to American labor of $186,000,000 worth of goods, all of which should have been produced in the country, as it was one year before.

The reward for such a sacrifice to our own enterprise was a loss of about $26,000,000 of revenue, which without any war would amount to over $40,000,000 before the year is completed. And this amount will be further decreased when free sugar goes into operation, which will eliminate the one item upon which we have been collecting our largest amount of revenue, which last year amounted to $50,000,000.

These figures point to but one result, namely, as a revenue producer the Underwood law is a failure. In this it is like its predecessor, the Wilson bill of 20 years ago, when Cleveland had to resort to the issuance of bonds.

Before the McKinley law was placed upon the statute books the Democrats charged that we were collecting too much revenue. They had conducted one campaign with that charge as the chief issue. No one had ever heard that a protective tariff was a failure as a revenue producer.

On the other hand, Cleveland was elected in 1884 on the pledge that he would reduce the surplus produced by a protective law. In Cleveland's second term the Wilson bill was the fulfillment of that pledge by law, as it had been fulfilled in the first Cleveland administration by extravagant and unwise administration.

The first year of the Wilson law saw the revenues fall from $203,000,000 to $131,000,000, or $72,000,000, a loss of 36 per cent. The inevitable result of such legislation was either bankruptcy, a direct tax, or an issue of bonds. At that time there was no war in Europe, and it could not be called a war tax. A bond issue was seized upon, and Cleveland borrowed $162,000,000 to pay the running expenses of the Government. For this money the Government had to pay 4 per cent instead of 3 per cent, the rate of the Spanish War bonds, or 2 per cent, Panama bonds—a suggestion of a measure of national credit between Democratic and Republican times.

Note how history is repeating itself. The Underwood law is a lower rate than that of the Wilson law of 20 years ago by nearly one-third. As I have pointed out, the decrease of customs dues prior to August, before war broke out in Europe, pointed to but one inevitable result—a deficit. The authors of the law explain the falling off on the basis that the income tax did not produce as much as estimated. If the falling off is due to the failure of the income tax to raise the estimate when the country was under a protective system, with every business running, what will be the disappointment from this source when the incomes of the producers in the country are entirely wiped out by a law that transfers these profits from American producers to European producers? Let the Democratic leaders responsible for such legislation seek comfort in the condition of the railroads, and dozens of other businesses, which, as the distinguished New York Democrat, Mr. METZ, declared on the floor of the House, were running at a dead loss to keep their organization together. This statement was made by a man heroic enough to tell the truth, and, of course, he is not now a candidate for reelection. It is not a question of explanation; it is a simple fact that a deficit was inevitable, without any war to blame it on.

In July the gain of imports was 15 per cent, while the loss of customs dues was 17 per cent. In August the loss of imports was 6 per cent, while the loss of customs dues was 37 per cent. No man can be blind to the significance of these figures.

In 1895 Mr. Cleveland met the deficit by an issuance of bonds. In 1914 Mr. Wilson declines to issue bonds to make up the deficit, because that would take it out of the channels of trade. He chooses to lay a tax upon the people. The administration seeks comfort in the phraseology by linking the deficit with a European war, with which we have nothing to do, and at a time when the channels of trade are open, and he chooses to name the deficiency tax a war tax, as if names could change the real situation.

From estimates submitted it is claimed this deficit will reach $100,000,000. If it does, it will not be due to the continuance of the war. The channels of trade are still open between all the neutral countries. The allies at present control the seas, and will likely continue to do so, because of the vast preponderance of armament which permits much of the world's commerce freedom in transit. In view of this situation, I admit that one of two things should be done—either find a method to raise the deficit or retrench upon expenditures, or both. If we resort to the former alternative, then it must not be a temporary method. The remedy must be suited to the disease. The disease is a bad revenue law. The remedy, to be both speedy and effective, is not a war tax, but a rewriting of the revenue law, a repeal of the Underwood "revenue-only" law, and an enactment of a Republican protective law.

I will join the Members of this Congress in an effort to retrench upon wasteful expenditures or to rewrite the Underwood bill.

Whatever we may do about the production of revenue, we ought to set ourselves to cure the wasteful expenditures of this Congress.

When the present administration is judged by the standards of economy, there is but one verdict—gross extravagance. The supply bills of this Congress already passed, not including the rivers and harbors bill, carry $1,089,000,000, which is over $60,000,000 more than the appropriations of the last Republican Congress. Had the $53,000,000 rivers and harbors bill passed, it would reach an excess of $100,000,000 beyond any Republican Congress, either in peace or war, say nothing of the proposed $25,000,000 to Colombia and $3,010,000 to Nicaragua. The saving to the Treasury of $33,000,00 on the indefensible harbors bill was due entirely to Republicans in the Senate, led by Senator BURTON. In that body the freedom of debate is still respected.

This excess is equal to the amount of tax the administration proposes to levy upon the people.

It would be statesmanship to direct our energies to ways of saving the $100,000,000 rather than means of direct taxation for increasing the people's burdens to that amount.

In the face of the platform declaration charging Republicans with profligate extravagance, it is the duty of the party in power to apply its own remedy and find a way to retrench, and thus back up its words by its deeds.

In the recent past we heard much abuse of the billion-dollar Congress.

The following statement of the appropriations since 1911 indicates how much retrenchment is attempted by the authors of the abuse:

1911	$978,521,087
1912	995,799,462
1913	988,353,340
1914	1,057,605,694
1915	1,089,408,777

I want here to subjoin the items of this Democratic bill, prepared and enacted by the party of long and loud profession for economy.

These items were put through a House of 145 Democratic majority at a time when every department of the Government is in the hands and under complete control of the Democracy. The items tell their own story, and when compared with former Congresses the showing might well be called, in the language of the Washington Post, a Democratic sheet, "the record of waste."

The subjoined table, giving the amounts appropriated by Congress for the support of the Government for the years 1913–14 and 1914–15 is compiled from the chronological history of appropriation bills, second session of the Sixty-third Congress, prepared by the clerks to the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate, cents being disregarded:

Title.	Law 1914–15.	Law 1913–14.
Agriculture	$19,865,832	$17,986,945
Army	101,019,212	94,266,145
Diplomatic	4,309,856	3,730,642
District of Columbia	12,172,539	11,383,739
Fortification	5,627,700	5,218,250
Indian	9,771,902	9,486,819
Legislative	37,630,229	35,172,434
Military Academy	997,899	1,099,302
Navy	144,808,716	140,800,643
Pension	169,150,000	180,300,000
Post office	313,364,667	285,376,271
River and Harbor		41,073,094
Sundry civil	110,070,227	116,795,327
Total	928,848,783	901,616,320
Deficiencies	23,363,587	28,074,912
Total	952,212,370	929,691,433
Miscellaneous	6,000,000	388,597
Annual total	958,212,370	930,080,030
Permanent	131,196,407	127,525,664
Grand total	1,089,408,777	1,057,605,694

This does not include the rivers and harbors bill, which, as it passed the House, carried $53,000,000, or $12,000,000 more than by the last bill.

If the proposed shipping bill, which carries $30,000,000 more, should pass, the grand total of this Congress will exceed any Republican Congress by almost $150,000,000, which increase alone would exceed the entire customs receipts by $15,000,000 of the first year of the famous Wilson bill of 1894. If the proposed treaties are ratified, the excess would reach $178,000,000.

The above statement shows one reduction, namely, $11,000,000 less for pensions for Union soldiers. This is the only large item of reduction. This extravagance either shows the insincerity of the Democratic Party or its incompetency. It may be both. The party has prided itself in its professions of economy. It has quadrennially proclaimed it in its platform and as frequently charged its opponents with profligacy. It has pledged itself, if intrusted with power, to reduce the expenditures. This pledge has been kept before the eyes of the leaders by Republican as well as some Democratic leaders. Mr. FITZGERALD, the Democratic chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, declared from the floor of the House that they had made a horrible mess of the whole thing, and when he thought of his duty to make a report to the country of the committee's work he felt like quitting his place.

The Democratic press of the country has likewise been vocal with utterances against it. But the hunger for place, stimulated by unexpected control of every department of the Government from cellar to garret, is too strong to be successfully resisted. The walls of efficient and economic administration must be battered down, the merit system must yield to the pernicious spoilsmen, to admit the hordes of hungry Democrats standing just without the breastworks. New offices must be created; new places must be opened to be filled by the faithful. This year $29,000,000 more than last year must be appropriated for the Post Office Department to allow southern Congressmen to erect Federal buildings in unknown villages of less than 3,000 people, with postal receipts of less than $200 per month.

There is scarcely a department that has not made its inroads upon the Treasury. There is no better illustration than the Treasury Department.

When the Democrats came into power there were 3,183 persons there; instead of the Democrats reducing the number of these employees as promised Secretary McAdoo asked for an increase of 358 of Treasury employees in Washington alone. When the Democrats came into power they found a field force in the Treasury Department of 1,407 persons, and under this economy program of the Democrats Secretary McAdoo asked for an increase in the field force of 678 persons. Think of it, an increase in the Treasury Department alone of 938 persons.

In these two instances "Democratic economy" will cost the Government over $1,750,000 in increased salaries alone. Watch their extravagance increase in other directions.

Congressman GILLETTE, of the Appropriations Committee, most succinctly pointed out some items of expense that tell their own story, which I will read. The Congressman says:

Leaving these larger details of comparison, involving as they do such enormous sums of excess over the work of other sessions of Congress, and turning to smaller but no less extravagant accomplishments in the way of new offices created and salaries increased by this Congress, the record discloses, even by cursory examination, instances like the following:

The new banking law creates five new offices with salaries of $12,000 each and increases the salary of the Comptroller of the Currency from $5,000, at which sum it had remained for 50 years, to $12,000 per annum.

The new trade commission act creates five commissioners at $10,000 each and a secretary at $5,000.

A new board of appeals, consisting of three members at $4,000 each, is created in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

For commercial attachés, to be appointed by and compensated at such salaries as the Secretary of Commerce may fix, and a clerk each, at $1,500; and for traveling expenses, the sum of $100,000 is appropriated for a year.

The salary of the private secretary to the Secretary of the Treasury is increased from $2,500 to $3,000, which means that the private secretaries to the other nine Cabinet officers must also be increased from $2,500 to $3,000.

A chief of division, created less than a year ago under the income-tax law, is increased from $2,500 to $3,500.

Six Assistant Attorneys General in the Department of Justice have their salaries increased from $5,000 to $7,500.

The salary of the assistant to the Attorney General was increased during the extra session on an urgent deficiency bill from $7,000 to $9,000.

The salaries of our diplomatic representatives to Argentina, Chile, and Spain are raised from $12,000 to $17,500 each per annum, and the three secretaries of the legations to these countries are increased from $2,625 to $3,000 each.

The mission to Paraguay and Uruguay is divided and a new minister authorized, with a new salary of $10,000.

The Democratic House of the last Congress insisted upon and did abolish three internal-revenue collectors of the Republican administration, at $4,500 each. At this session one of them is re-created, the place to be filled by a Democratic administration. If the office was not necessary to collect revenues then, how can it be needed now, except to meet some political exigency? [Applause on the Republican side.]

In the Pension Office 40 special examiners, at $1,300 each, heretofore employed to facilitate settlement of claims for pensions of old soldiers, and whose appointments were controlled by civil-service law, are abolished. In their places 5 special examiners, at $1,300 each, who are not under the civil service but are political appointments, are provided for.

DEMOCRATIC ECONOMY AS PRACTICED BY AUTHOR OF DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

The Secretary of State, when he appeared before the committee in January last to explain the needs of his department, said, with reference to his estimates:

"I was determined that there would be one department that would be run on less than it was before, if I could bring it about, * * * and the cost is $120 less than it was last year." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

One hundred and twenty dollars did not seem a very striking economy. It did not substantiate the unceasing charge of Republican extravagance; and yet even that lonely and only economy was lost. Notwithstanding that brave statement, the appropriation bill came back from the Senate with two $1,800 clerkships added, together with an assistant to the Secretary, at $4,500. In view of his statement, it must be assumed that an extravagant Democratic Senate sought to thrust these needless places on Mr. Bryan.

The Secretary of the Treasury, too, asked and the Senate proposed to provide him with an assistant, at $4,500, notwithstanding the law already provided for three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $5,000 each, and other assistants to the head of that great department in the nature of bureau chiefs, division heads, and others, numbering thousands.

In view of this gross extravagance, self-admitted and self-charged, what should be the attitude of this side of the House toward your proposal to saddle upon the people an additional tax, a deficiency tax, which for the sake of political expediency you call a war tax? For one I shall refuse to be a party to that additional burden while this most extraordinarily extravagant expenditure continues and while this business-distracting legislation called the Underwood law is on the statute books. I repeat that I will join with you to lower expenses, as any prudent man would do in his private affairs, when depression sets in, or I will gladly join to rewrite the Underwood bill by placing a statute on the books which, while it raises revenue sufficient to defray the running expenses of the Government, will also protect American labor from the open competition with the cheap labor in Europe, which varies from 25 to 50 per cent of our standard of wages.

I must withhold my support from this deficiency measure unless it is reached by such legislation as will permanently cure the error.

The Underwood bill under normal conditions tells its own story of continued business distress. Its discrimination against the American producer, at the loss of purchasing power of the American consumer and at the loss of employment to American labor, is seen in every movement of trade.

When the increased imports are analyzed it will be noted to consist of finished goods made in a foreign country by foreign labor. The importation of goods to be used for further manufactures here has greatly decreased; that labor once employed here is now employed in a foreign country. The $250,000,000 which marks the loss to American enterprise of the first seven months of the Underwood bill, and which is this country's tribute to foreign capital and labor, would have supplied work for 500,000 wage earners for the seven months at $2.50 per day.

Had this merchandise been made in American shops and transported on American roads, the railroad situation would not be so serious. The statement of the roads, through their representative, Mr. Trumbull, to President Wilson, indicates the critical condition of American business. Note the significant utterance:

The net operating income of the railroads of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1914, was $120,000,000 less than for the previous year, or about 15 per cent. The gross earnings for the year were $44,000,000 less than for 1913. Expenses and taxes were $76,000,000 more.

The maintenance of the credit of the railroads—and the credit of the railroads establishes the standard for all industrial enterprises—depends upon their ability to increase their net earnings. The railroads may have the most perfectly appointed plants in the world, but if the net earnings are not adequate new capital can not be attracted.

In the important Eastern Rate case the Interstate Commerce Commission unanimously found that the railroads in the richest section of the country needed more revenue. That finding was based upon the situation prior to the 1st of July this year—indeed, upon conditions of a year previous.

No emphasis need at this time be put upon the new railroad capital which has heretofore been required to provide for normal development, but this has been from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000 per annum, and railroads should not only be able to keep abreast of the times but should, even in this emergency, be in a position to anticipate the demands of an expanding commerce.

While President Wilson expresses sympathy with the distressed, he is persistent in his dogmas, and joins with his campaign managers and the Secretary of Commerce, his chief publicity agent, in declaring that business is looking up. One might well ask him how else it could look, when it is flat on its back?

The railroad situation is but one item in the general distraction of business not caused by the war, as some of our Democratic Members would make believe, but due to an unwise attack upon the producing capacity of this country by an ill-advised piece of legislation.

Instead of the war hurting American industries it will greatly stimulate them. Prices will be augmented because of the demand upon us to supply Europe with articles displaced by a disturbance of her own production.

That will materially help the seller, but not much the buyer.

Another serious item in this legislation that is turning the foreign trade against us is the loss of gold to settle the balances.

If in seven months under the Underwood law we sell to Europe $250,000,000 worth of goods less than we sold under the Payne law during the same period, it does not take a Congressman, even, to see that the foreign producer who supplied this merchandise secured the $250,000,000 which this country secured last year. Especially does it become serious when the balance of trade is turned against us, as will be the case under this law.

When we sell more than we buy the settlement turns the gold current from Europe to America to pay for the balance. That is the Republican policy. When we buy more than we sell the gold current is toward Europe for the same purpose. That is the Democratic policy now in vogue.

Our vast circulation of currency, amounting to about three and one-half billion dollars, rests upon gold, of which we have about two billions. Under the law our Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to issue unlimited emergency notes, of which he has already issued something like $300,000,000. The money of the country is safe, providing we avoid laws that drain us of our business energies and turn our gold to foreign producers instead of keeping it at home. Such laws will repeat the fright of 1893. The trouble is not with the money, but with bad revenue laws.

In 1896, when the Democrats were at sea for an issue, Mr. Bryan, the present Secretary of State, found the issue in a demand for free coinage of silver at 16 to 1. Most of us recall how Senator John Sherman pointed out the defect in our unwise tariff legislation placed upon the statute books two years before, a law that turned the balance of trade against us and drained our country of its gold. He demanded a repeal of the law as the remedy. The Dingley law the next year was the final answer to the craze of 1896. Have the people forgotten the greenback days of 1878?

Have they forgotten the 16 to 1 episode? Will the people be again fooled by the political nostrum vender? Will they see a repetition of the days of 1878 and 1896? Will they credit the Democratic explanation of an inevitable failure of revenue as due to the war, with which we have nothing to do, especialy when the falling off began four months before any cloud had appeared in the horizon of Europe? "Money does not make business, business makes money."

Any legislation that looks to the displacement of American-made goods by foreign-made goods is in the interest of the foreign as against our own country. It is based upon the fallacy of the doctrine that the cheapest market is the most desirable market. The advantage is not in the cheapest market, but rather that market in which you can pay the easiest.

The cheap-market dogma is the planter's theory. The cotton States, now in control of the entire machinery of the Government, desire to buy in Europe rather than at home—industrial Europe, rather than industrial America, since Europe is their chief customer.

"Cotton is king" never was so significant as to-day. The Southland persistently confines itself to the raising of this one staple article to the almost entire exclusion of various other articles of consumption. It prefers to raise cotton, sell it, and buy the other necessaries of life. In a word, it prefers to be a seller of cotton and a buyer of all other necessaries. A glance at the census will indicate the dominance of this one article. Most of the cotton is therefore raised for export, but a small portion for home consumption. The time was when none was made into fabrics where it was grown. Even to-day most of it is shipped to a distant point for manufacture. Two-thirds of the vast crop goes out of the country to be made into the finished garment. Since these States sell chiefly to Europe it is but natural they would prefer to buy in Europe. Especially is this true when the article can be purchased at a lower price. The cheaper labor in Europe enables the manufacturer to sell his article cheaper, and if we remove the tariff and place New England in open competition with Europe the southern planter as well as the whole country for a time will get his article cheaper. This will continue up to the time when our own mills are closed and our market is under the control of the foreigner. Then we will pay the price he demands.

The error on the part of this country is in not manufacturing all this cotton in American mills, and thereby invest American capital, employ American labor, and maintain an American enterprise of stupendous importance to the Nation. There is absolutely no reason why raw cotton should be shipped to Europe, manufactured into cloth, and then shipped back to America. The South makes its first mistake in confining its energies to the cotton culture, rather than to a varied industry. Its second mistake is in seeking a market in Europe for the raw material, rather than working the raw material into the finished product here at home.

The cotton States pretend not to want protection of their cotton. It perhaps does not need it when one State alone in the cotton belt can and does produce three times the cotton that the next largest cotton-producing country produces. If the time should ever come when the South does not have a monopoly on cotton production, it will be insistent for protection as it is now on Angora goat hair and other articles it produces in small quantities.

If it would wisely inaugurate a plan to manufacture its own raw material, it would join New England in a demand for protection of the labor employed. As matters now stand the cotton section depends upon a foreign market where they not only persist in selling but also in buying. With the foreign market in temporary abeyance the States face a dilemma. Dependence upon any foreign buyer is as dangerous as dependence upon any foreign seller. Reliance upon a foreign consumer is as unwise as reliance upon a foreign producer. A wise policy would look to America for both.

To emerge from this embarrassment crudest proposals are being heard in legislative circles. One class of men propose that the Government issue Federal notes upon the security of warehouse receipts of cotton. This proposition has many adherents in this administration, chief of whom is Secretary McAdoo, whose soft-money ideas are disclosed whenever he refers to finance, as instanced by his contention that the 2 per cent bonds were worth par whether they commanded that price in the open market or not.

Another proposes that Congress permit the States to issue State currency as was done prior to the war; that is, remove the 10 per cent tax and return to wild-cat methods.

There is now a bill pending before the House to ask the Government to purchase the cotton at 10 cents per pound, to be held until it can command that price in the market. These crude suggestions remind one of the half-baked theories of prehistoric times, when it was thought that the government was capable of making all rich. Frequently we have been told that Uncle Sam could and should give us all a farm.

Already we hear it proposed that the Government should make large purchases of copper to help out the miners' situation, to keep the mines at work.

The Government is already issuing emergency currency, and no one can tell where it will stop. It is financing crop movements and playing it up in the press as a Government function. It has deposited $75,000 000 in banks in certain parts of the country and refuses to call it in, but now proposes to replace it by an additional tax which they call a war tax. You say Republicans loaned to the banks. We did deposit funds when called, but we never resorted to direct taxation for the sake of keeping funds in banks when they were there subject to call. The Federal Board is sitting with the Morgan banking committee to form a pool to take care of our gold, and this is the board appointed by this administration which won much of its momentum by its turbulent assaults upon Wall Street. In 1907 Wall Street was the evil spirit of the money power. In 1914 Wall Street is a very present help in time of trouble.

These crass suggestions very much remind us of a recent proposal of a very much disgusted observer and citizen. He said:

Inflation is proceeding rapidly.
Let us help it along.
To hades with the future when payment falls due; that is for posterity. It was on that principle that the railroads have been wrecked, so why not the Government?
Let us ask the Government to buy wool from the poor sheep raiser.
Let us start a movement to get the Government to purchase shoes from the shoemaker; malt from the maisters, who need help more than anyone I know; tin from the Steel Corporation, because the tin mills need aid; H. B. Claflin & Co.'s old stock, so that the creditors will get more than 20 per cent on the dollar; and so on through the list.
Why not?
All the Government has is what we pay in in taxes, and it is running behind in its revenue; but what is the difference? It can put a war tax on us to make up this difference and then another kind of tax, and then another, and use this money in buying silver, copper, cotton, wool, shoes, etc
Let us go the limit and forget that some day we will have to pay—"for to-morrow we die."

Members of the House may think these suggestions fantastic, but they are not more so than some of the harebrained theories proposed here. Already we are in the midst of financing the cotton and tobacco crops. In the name of common sense, why favor these southern products to the exclusion of all others?

Had we retained the protective system we would not now be in a spasm, emitting all sorts of crazy suggestions as remedies.

The experience of this Nation under protection justifies the statement. I challenge any man to point to a single period when in time of peace this country, under the protective system, had to resort to either the issue of bonds or a direct tax to provide funds for the Government. Where could a better example be cited than the period preceding the Underwood bill? We undertook the building of the Panama Canal, the world's greatest engineering feat. We estimated $400,000,000 as the outlay for that purpose. Authority was given to either issue bonds to provide for the necessary funds or to apply current revenues if available. Look at the record. I challenge any man to present a better showing. Over half of the construction was cared for from current revenues. Only a portion of the funds were provided by an issue of bonds. These were issued at 2 per cent, the lowest rate in our history. They always stood at par, until this Democratic administration began to disturb the credit, when they dropped to 96 per cent, which is the quoted price to-day. Think of it; the Government's own credit at a discount, and that at a time when, prior to the present Democratic control, the Nation was able to fund its debt at the lowest rate of interest known in the history of the credit of this or any other Nation.

This high credit is the result of that form of legislation that seeks to encourage American enterprise. Until recently we applauded men and women who achieved success in any and every constructive activity. The governmental expression of that applause was encouragement to capital and labor in the form of a protective tariff, which invariably raised the necessary revenue while it stimulated the employment of labor. True it is that after a successful protective law is in operation for some years it must be revised to secure sufficient revenue. When a protective duty is first laid it raises some revenue. This revenue decreases as we increase our home production. When we reach the point where we produce all we need, we cease to import, and thereby secure no revenue. This was true of many forms of steel. It was true of tin plate. It was true of many kinds of carpets and other forms of merchandise. It would be true of wool, and most certainly of sugar if we would but favor the production of each. This European war will operate as a protection tariff, and we will soon produce other articles of necessity.

Revenues decrease in two ways—by placing goods on the free list and by making them ourselves. The very basis of a protective tariff is to gradually decrease the revenue by a decrease of imports, displaced by our own manufactures. I repeat, the protective system is a success as a revenue producer. It is also a success by building up gradually the home market. It diversifies the country's industries. It gradually decreases the price of the article to the consumer. It makes the Nation independent at all times, and especially in times of stress.

Free trade, on the other hand, is a loss of the revenue that must be raised in some way; if not by tariff, then by direct tax as is now purposed in this bill. The price of the article increases to the consumer. As you discourage home production of any article, as, for example, sugar, the supply decreases. The demand does not decrease. The price goes up either with the decrease of supply or increase of demand, and especially so where both take place at the same time.

Take sugar for an illustration. Twelve of the 73 sugar mills will have dismantled. That means one-sixth of the capacity for sugar manufacturing. We produced last year 600,000 tons of sugar; one-sixth is 100,000 tons. This year we will probably produce but 500,000 tons, due to the dismantling of the mills. Another year we will produce less, because sugar goes on the free list in 1916. In this deal our production decreases, when it would easily increase by wise legislation. The demand will increase with the growth of population; hence the increased price to the consumer. This is especially true when the importer controls a monopoly, and he can fix his own price.

While the consumer pays a higher price, the industry representing a half billion dollars is crippled; the farmer has lost one of his most valuable crops and the Government has lost about $60,000,000 of revenue that must be made up.

This sort of legislation depresses the producer without an advantage to the consumer. For example, the manufacturer of the cloth required for a shirt waist receives about 20 cents. The shirt waist is sold over the counter in a New York store for $2.50. If we remove the tariff of 4 or 5 cents per yard from the cloth, the shirt waist will not be sold for less. The difference is so negligible that it will be taken by the middle man.

Likewise taking the tariff off of wheat will not reduce to me the price of my loaf of bread. What the wheat grower loses the bread eater does not gain. The reason is he eats bread instead of wheat. In this way it is clear why removal of protection does hurt the producer and does not help the consumer.

There is no one fact clearer than the fallacy of the Democrats on their claim to reduce the cost of living by removal of protection. On the other hand, they increase the cost of living without helping anyone. They can not longer resort to the cheap campaign cry so graphically expressed by the New England versifier:

"I ain t no statesman who can talk purtection ar free trade;
"My han's too stiff to hol' a pen, that's made to hol' a spade;
"Them 10-foot eddicated words my tongue can't wallop roun';
"But I'll make the things you sell go up, an' things you buy come down.
"I can't talk on the currency, nor on the revenue,
"And on the laws and statoots I'm as ignorant as you.
"An' I jest simply promise you, sure's I am Silas Brown,
"I'll make the things you sell go up, an' the things you buy come down."

The fairground echoed wide with cheers and loud huzzas thereat,
For who can ask a better scheme of statesmanship than that?
And next week at the polls he beat his rival high and dry.
But things we sell continue low, and things we buy are high.

So long as the productive ability of warring Europe is disturbed our country will have a call for the foodstuffs, which will keep up for a time the price of the farmer's products. This will not be due to the Democratic tariff, but rather in spite of it.

In view of all the facts stated, I can not be led or frightened into a support of this measure. I will willingly join in placing a law on the books that will be a permanent cure, namely, restore the protective system. I will also join in a plan of retrenchment. I refuse to vote $25,000,000 to Colombia as an apology for building the canal. I refuse to vote $3,000,000 to Nicaragua for a doubtful protectorate. I urge that the rivers and harbors bill be pared of its pernicious pork-barrel features and confine it to meritorious projects already begun until the emergency passes, when we can take up new projects. I recommend to scale down the building program so as not to provide public buildings in towns of 1,500 people with negligible postal receipts. I will join any effort to shut off the project of creating useless offices for hungry politicians. But so long as this present defective revenue law stands on the books and this reckless waste continues I will refuse to be a party to increasing the burdens upon the American people, by whatever name. Let us set ourselves to the task of increasing our capacity to do rather than lessening our ability to achieve, and so find ways to save money rather than new methods to spend it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, how much time has been consumed on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McGILLICUDDY). The gentleman from Alabama has used 1 hour and 59 minutes and the gentleman from New York 2 hours and 15 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to yield to two gentlemen 5 and 10 minutes, respectively.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Kentucky says that is agreeable to him.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, first, I wish to extend my sympathy to my Democratic friends who, in a few short days, have been converted from shouting optimists to most doleful calamity howlers.

Now everything is wrong. Now the poverty, idleness, and want that the Republicans have been saying exists is freely admitted by our Democratic friends. What a change has "come over the spirit of their dreams." They wanted to tax the people, and in order to justify their action they now admit the truth.

I have been somewhat surprised that some of my Republican colleagues have seen fit to deny that the revenue proposed to be raised by the Democratic Party at this time is not a "war" tax. There can be no doubt that it is a tax made necessary by war. It is a tax made necessary by the war the Democratic Party has been waging upon American industry. [Applause.] Of course, no one believes that our Democratic brethren desired the war that is now raging in Europe or that they rejoice at it, but they have accepted the political advantage that it has brought to them with a cheerfulness and a fortitude that command profound admiration. The echoes of the first shot of the great conflict had scarce died away when the Democratic Party was demanding additional tax to meet the expense of government. They were anxious to take advantage of the situation promptly for fear that something might occur that would take from them this excuse. It is true the war did lessen our revenues, but it only hurried the inevitable. With decreased income and the most extravagant Congress in the history of the Nation an additional tax upon the people or a bond issue was near at hand and would have come whether war had occurred in Europe or not. With decreased revenues on the one hand and enormously increased expenditures on the other, only a Democratic statesman could fail to clearly see what the end would be. History repeats itself. A Democratic administration and an empty Treasury are synonymous. [Applause.]

Our Democratic friends assure us that the falling off in revenue and therefore the necessity for taxing the people is caused by the war in Europe. They tell us the war reduced the revenue for the month of August more than $10,000,000 as compared with the corresponding month of last year. I wonder if it was the war in Europe that caused a decrease of $4,818,189 in the revenue last July as compared with the same month a year ago. But if it is claimed the shadow of war reached back over July, when no one in all the world anticipated it, I wonder if it was the war that caused the decrease in the customs revenues of $5,806,044 last January as compared with the same month a year ago. I wonder if it was the war that caused a loss in revenue of $9,995,512 last February as compared with the same month in 1913. Here is a loss almost as great as we sustained in August, and it came six months before the war. I wonder if it was the war that caused a decrease in the customs revenue for the year 1914, up to August 1, of $23,360,549 as compared with the corresponding period of 1913. I wonder if it was the war in Europe, in the face of this failing income, that caused a Democratic Congress to forget its economy pledges, to forget its denunciation of Republican extravagance, and appropriate already at this session of Congress the staggering sum of $1,089,409,777, the largest amount ever appropriated in a single session in the life of the Nation. I wonder if this unexampled extravagance was due to the war. And there is more to follow, as this mighty sum does not include either the rivers and harbors bill or the pending ship subsidy bill that will call for probably $60,000,000 more after they are passed.

What is the matter with this Nation to-day? Is it the war in Europe that has closed mills and factories, brought idleness and poverty, universal business depression, that has turned the balance of trade against us, sent our gold abroad, and left us with an empty Treasury?

I wonder if it was the war that caused us in July last to buy $20,605,521 more from the foreigner than we did in the month of July last year. I wonder if it was the war that in the same month caused us to sell the foreigner $6,851,831 less than we did in the month of July a year ago. I wonder if it was the war that caused us in this single month, the last month before the war began, a loss in foreign trade of $27,457,352, almost a million dollars a day. Was this enormous loss due to the war in Europe? I wonder if it is due to the war that since the Underwood tariff law went upon the statute books we have sold Canada 15 per cent less than we did under the Payne law for a corresponding period. I wonder if it is the war that has caused Canada to sell us 35 per cent more under the Underwood tariff law than it did under the Payne law for the same period last year. Here we have illustrated Democratic reciprocity—a 50 per cent gain to the foreigner. I wonder if it was the war that caused us during the first seven months of 1914—that is, the first seven months immediately preceding the war in Europe—to buy from the foreigner $121,943,698 more than we did the first seven months of 1913. I wonder if it was because of the war that we sold to the foreigner during the first seven months of this year $126,290,975 less than we did for the corresponding period in 1913. I wonder if this tremendous loss in our foreign trade of more than a million dollars every day, prior to August 1, that the present tariff law has been upon the statute books, was due to the war in Europe.

During the first seven months of this year—before the war began—we lost in foreign trade the tremendous sum of $248,234,673. I wonder if this was due to the military war in Europe or due to the Democratic industrial war in this country.

But the staggering loss of $248,234,673 in our foreign trade in the first seven months of 1914 apparently meant nothing to the Democratic administration. They continue to spend money more lavishly and more extravagantly than has ever before been done by any other Congress. This $248,234,673 of trade against us means that much gold or its equivalent taken out of the country. It means a loss in trade of more than a million dollars a day. It means that more than a million dollars a day, as compared with a year ago, is taken from the American workman and given to the foreigner. Remember this is the result of the tariff law that was to enable us to go forth and capture the markets of the world. And yet our Democratic friends, looking upon these figures, made public by their own official, express a profound surprise that mills and factories are closed or running on short time, that we have tramps and beggars, that millions are idle, and that there is universal business depression, and that our gold is going from us, and that we are facing an empty Treasury, and that the people must be further taxed to pay the expenses of the Government.

The trouble with this country is not the war in Europe, but the Democratic tariff law upon our statute books. It is not the war in Europe, but free trade, that has brought our industrial ruin. [Applause.]

THE MONEY IN THE BANKS.

If, as our Democratic friends contend, we need money to-day to meet the expenses of government, and it is admitted that we do—we always do under a Democratic administration—why not take the Government money deposited with the banks of the country? Why should this Nation loan its money to the banks of the country at 2 per cent interest and then directly tax the people to pay the expense of government? Is not this directly taxing the people of the Nation for the benefit of the banks? Is it not directly taxing the people of this Nation in order that the Government may loan money to the banks at a cheap rate of interest that they in return loan at a higher rate of interest to the people to pay the identical taxes levied? If not, will some one explain why? The banks get this money from the Government for 2 per cent—that is, the money paid to the Government by the people—and then the banks in return again loan at from 6 per cent to 12 per cent to the people who paid it to the Government—a direct taxing of the people in order that the banks may make money by loaning Government funds that should be used to pay Government expenses.

And where is this money of the United States Government deposited? What banks are using it and profiting by it? Most of this money is in the banks of New York. So, while this Nation loans its money to assist speculators and gamblers it taxes the people, places a burden upon the legitimate industry, in order to do it.

The Democratic Party has been persistent in its denunciation of the "interests" and of the money power. They have sought to make great political capital by so doing. How does their vocabulary square with their acts? In the name of the people, the Panama Canal act was repealed, so that the railroads could increase their freight rates, and now in the name of the people the Government loans its money at 2 per cent to the banks that they may make money by loaning it again to those who are compelled to pay the tax.

I trust that the people of this Nation may be made to understand that they are taxed, not to pay the expenses of government, but to accommodate certain favored banks in New York and the South. What would be thought of a man that had money in the bank drawing only 2 per cent interest that would leave it there and borrow money at from 6 per cent to 12 per cent to run his business? Yet the Government does even worse. It takes the money of the people and loans it to the bank at 2 per cent and then taxes the people to pay the expense of the Government, thereby permitting the banks to again loan this money to the taxpayers at from 6 per cent to 12 per cent interest, and all this is done in the name of the people. All this is done in the name of reform; in the name of freeing the people from the burdens that the "interests" have so long placed upon them.

But our Democratic friends reply, "If you take the money out of the banks you will disturb business and take it out of the channels of trade." Can it be possible that such a proposition is seriously urged by sober-minded men? When money is taken out of the pockets of the people, is it not taken out of the channels of trade as much as if it were taken out of the banks? In fact, is not the money in the banks there for the express purpose of being placed in the pockets of the people in order that it may be used in the channels of trade? When the money is taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers, is it not taken out of general circulation as much as if it was taken from the banks? Is it possible to more widely disturb business than by direct taxation? Can you possibly conceive of any method that would more generally take the money out of the channels of trade than a direct tax?

Can it be possible that drawing $8,000,000 per month from these banks, having on deposit more than $75,000,000 of Government money, would disturb business as greatly as to levy this direct "war" tax of $105,000,000 upon the American people in this time, as you now admit, of general business depression and uncertainty?

Under this wise Democratic provision the taxpayer takes the money out of his pocket and gives it to the Government. The Government then gives it to the bank, and the bank again loans it out at a high rate of interest to the taxpayer, and he again puts it into his pocket. And yet our Democratic friends tell us that if they take it out of the banks in the first place it disturbs business.

Looking at this proposition at any angle you please, to the ordinary mind it appears that the only difference in the two transactions is that in the one case you give the profits made by loaning at a high rate of interest to the banks and in the other you give it to the taxpayer. This administration evidently prefers to permit the banks to loan to the taxpayer at a high rate of interest the very money that he is compelled to pay to the Government. But of course this Democratic proposition is not done for the benefit of banks of the country, but for the benefit of the people. This is a perfectly plain proposition, and anyone that fails to understand it or does not agree with the Democratic position is an un-American partisan.

DEMOCRATIC ECONOMY.

The plank in the last Democratic platform in regard to economy is as follows:

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

No one but a scared office-seeking Democrat can read that plank to-day without smiling. That plank of the Democratic platform, like the plank in regard to the Panama Canal, has been demonstrated to be merely "molasses to catch flies." It has been brazenly repudiated, as was the free-tolls plank and as the plank in regard to a second term for the President will be. Yet that Baltimore platform closed with these solemn words:

Our pledges are made to be kept when in office.

In the light of the present, that is the most humorous sentence ever uttered by a Democrat. What an altogether lovely picture Democratic promises and Democratic performances make when placed together!

Our Democratic friends so long attacked and denounced the Republican Party for extravagance that I am sometimes constrained to believe that some of the more credulous among them almost persuaded themselves that it was true. But now they have had the experience of running the Government themselves, and what is the result? What now about Republican extravagance and Democratic economy? This Congress cut $11,000,000 from the pension appropriations. About $20,000,000 less was needed this year for the Panama Canal than for some years past. But counting out $30,000,000 for the canal and pensions, counting out more than $40,000,000 for the rivers and harbors, counting out the $40,000,000 proposed in the Democratic ship-subsidy bill, counting out this sum of more than $100,000,000, and still this Democratic Congress, pledged to economy, that came into power with the hot denunciation of Republican extravagance upon their lips, has already appropriated $100,000,000 more this session than was ever appropriated in any session by any Republican Congress that ever met in this Capitol. Yet, says the Democratic platform, "Our pledges are made to be kept when in office."

What has caused this unparalleled extravagance and this unexampled waste of the public money by this reform Democratic administration, pledged to economy? It is mostly due to incompetency in every branch of the Government. Every department and every bureau, it appears, has increased its expenditures. This extravagance is largely due to the increase of useless offices—the very thing that the Democratic platform condemns. This administration has dismissed from the service some policemen guarding a street crossing, getting $900 per year, or some scrub woman on her knees, earning $20 per month, and then created a list of jobs for useless commissioners, assistant secretaries, and special attorneys drawing salaries from $3,000 to $12,000 per annum. Some of this wasted money went to buy automobiles for petty officials, as was illustrated in the case of the Public Printer having two high-priced electric machines, one of them principally for social purposes; or to buy automobiles for Cabinet officers without authority of law, as in the case of the Secretary of Labor; or to pay so-called experts, as in the case where $4,400 was paid to the editor of a Wall Street journal to write the present Democratic banking law.

All the low-salaried offices abolished, let it be remembered, were under civil service. All the high-priced offices created were filled by faithful Democrats as a reward for public service.

Certainly the question may be fairly asked why the Democratic Party should indulge in these unparalleled extravagances, creating useless offices, wasting the public money to pay political debts when there is widespread business depression.

Is this a time to indulge in unlimited expenditures? The people everywhere are compelled to economize. The people of this Nation to-day are spending far less money than they did under Republican rule. They are buying less clothes; they are eating less food; they are spending far less for pleasures and enjoyments; they are denying themselves the luxuries and many of the comforts of life. In such times as these why should not the Democratic administration practice at least reasonable economy? Why should they now tax the people that they may be indulged in the most extravagant and wasteful expenditures in all the Nation's history? Why in such times as these should this single session of Congress appropriate the enormous sum of $1,089,408,777, a sum more than $100,000,000 in excess of that ever appropriated in a single session by a Republican Congress, and this does not include either the rivers and harbors bill or the proposed ship-subsidy bill.

If the Democratic Party had practiced reasonable economy, there would be sufficient money on hand to-day to meet the expenses of government. If they had only appropriated during this session of Congress an amount equal to the greatest appropriation ever made by the Republican Party, they would still have more than sufficient money for all necessary expenses.

In the light of these facts what becomes of the promises of Democratic economy and upon what grounds can they now justify taxing the American people? In the face of these figures is it possible that any American citizen is so stupid as not to know that the plea of "war" tax is a mere pretext to hide Democratic incompetency and extravagance? [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, when I picked up my newspaper yesterday morning, I read a statement of the bringing in of this war revenue bill; I glanced at another column, and to my profound regret I found that our dear friend, our companion in arms and erstwhile ally, Francisco Villa, had left the constitutionalist reservation and taken to the warpath. And I wondered if it was this outbreak down on the Mexican border—that called for a rapid depletion of the visible supply of "Watchful Waiting Wins" buttons that had been recently displayed about the Halls of Congress—that was responsible for a war tax in time of peace. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Speaker, I think it is awfully unkind of our dear friend. It shows a woeful lack of gratitude and appreciation on his part, after all the administration has done for him, to break out at this inopportune time. Why could not he have waited until after the election, as I understand he promised to do, before pulling off his little insurrection? [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Never again may it be truthfully said, "There is no new thing under the sun," for Democratic incompetency has burgeoned and blossomed and brought forth a thing hitherto unknown, undreamed of—a war revenue, protruding its unwelcome presence at a time when we sustain relations of profound and unruffled peace with all the world, except our late friend and ally Gen. Villa, who, I regret to say, is on the warpath again.

But let no one suppose that the presence of this strange and hitherto unheard of thing is an evidence of the possession of unsuspected inventive genius on the part of a notoriously uninventive, unimaginative political organization. In naming it a war revenue bill Democratic inefficiency and incompetency unconsciously and unwittingly pays tribute to truth, for while no martial note or sound of arms disturbs the quiet of our boundaries, this is in very truth a tax bill born of war; not of war abroad but Democratic war against thrift, industry, and prosperity at home. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The war whose losses and ravages you seek to repair and fortify against by forced levies on the people of a Nation at peace with all the world is not the war declared last month in the chancelleries of Europe, but the war against the welfare of the American people declared by your party at the beginning of your administration and relentlessly pursued to this day. Yours has been a war against sound, sane, and sufficient revenue and financial policies; against the lawful pursuit of legitimate enterprise and the wholesome and steady employment of honest labor; a war against that security of employment and income which is the anchor of the Nation's hopes and homes.

But the presence of this hateful, unusual, and unnecessary messenger of new burdens of taxation in the time of peace should occasion no surprise coming as a product of this Democratic Congress. The whole Nation will bear testimony that it is the expected and natural child of your policies. None can deny that it is the legitimate offspring of a Congress whose revenue legislation, paralyzing to prosperity, fails in the production of sufficient revenue for your extravagant expenditures. [Applause on the Republican side.] A Congress whose currency legislation fled to the bombproofs of the Republican Vreeland currency law at the first sound of a hostile shot 4,000 miles away. [Applause on the Republican side.] A Congress whose Uhlans and Cossacks of fantastic radicalism have spread terror and dismay throughout our industrial Belgiums. A Congress whose acts and attitude have served to match the devastation wrought by the war abroad with a vastly wider, if less complete, industrial paralysis at home. [Applause on the Republican side.] A Congress which has made it clear to our industrial Louvains that peace may have its devastation but little less complete than that of war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Sixteen years ago the 27th of last May this Chamber witnessed the introduction of a real and necessary war-revenue bill, which you, lacking in real legislative, inventive genius and imagination, have slavishly copied in your bogus war-revenue bill. Seventeen of the men, including our honored Speaker and the leader of the majority, Mr. UNDERWOOD, who then sat upon the Democratic side and with all their Democratic colleagues save three, voted against that bill, now occupy seats on this floor. No hateful rule of cloture stifled your voices or denied you the right to amend. Two whole days and two night sessions gave ear to your declamations; an entire day was given to the consideration of amendments.

It was May. Dewey had just smashed the enemy at Manila Bay. Armies were organizing, the dogs of war were out of leash, the enemy's ships were at our water gates. What was your answer to that imperative patriotic call for immediate revenue? You voted against it. If you had had the power you would have withheld the needed revenue. You offered instead an income tax the Supreme Court had declared unconstitutional [applause on the Republican side], and which you did not propose to put in operation until four months after the date when hostilities actually ceased, peace was finally established, and the boys came marching home. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is not the war in Europe, it is your war on prosperity and your reckless extravagance which has, in the main, created the situation that has urged your action. Your revenue bill failed from the start. Your extravagance accentuated the shortage. The loss of customs revenue through decreased imports, due to war, did not in the month of August exceed two and a half millions, and is not likely in the future to exceed that amount per month, or twenty-seven millions in a year, if the war lasts that long. The reduction in the appropriations for the current year below those of last year for pensions and the Panama Canal alone amount to almost exactly this sum. If it were not for the fact that, in spite of these decreases in expenditure, the total of your appropriations this year is the greatest in all our history, these reductions in expenditures would alone more than balance any loss of revenue by reason of the war in Europe.

The balance in the general fund of the Treasury is to-day, including $12,000,000 obtained from the sale of two battleships, over $121,000,000. It has been as low as $74,000,000 under your administration, so it could be reduced without danger. But you prefer to lay direct taxes on the people rather than to call upon the banks for any part of the $75,000,000 of this Treasury balance which they are holding at 2 per cent. Had you given us the opportunity to amend we gave you in 1898, we could have suggested how, if added revenue were necessary, it could be secured in such form as to aid rather than oppress our people; in such manner as to lay the burden on those seeking our markets rather than on our own citizens struggling to hold them. If you will neither retrench nor legislate wisely, to increase revenues without burdening the people, nor draw from the banks gradually a portion of the people's funds they now hold, still another course is open to you. Certificates of indebtedness, as provided by law, could be issued monthly in such sum as would represent the estimated previous month's loss of customs revenues, if any, due to decreased importations caused by war. Under the Republican administration of 1917, and the Republican prosperity which will come with it, the country would cheerfully and easily wipe out the debt you had accumulated. In fact, they expect to have to do that after Democratic administrations. We will support cheerfully any necessary measure of defense of the Public Treasury; but we refuse to vote a penny of added tax burden on the American people, in support of, or as a tribute to, your policies of war on prosperity, and of reckless extravagance in expenditure. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I believe there is some virtue in partisanship, but I believe that it also ought to be intelligent, and a great deal of the partisanship of the opponents of this bill that has been voiced here yesterday and to-day has lacked that quality. I have known members of the Republican Party to undertake many gigantic tasks. I have marveled sometimes at their courage even while I deplored their lack of discretion, but I have never marveled more than at the task that has been undertaken here. They would have the country believe that the European war is of such a character that its effect upon the financial and economical conditions of America can be ignored. Now, a man who is willing seriously to propound that is willing to undertake anything under the sun. The most stupendous conflict of all time—one that has called actually into the field over 10,000,000 of men—is now in progress, and yet men would so minimize its results as to tell you that it has no effect upon the conditions of one of the great nations of the world. As a member of a great, historic party, I should be ashamed to advance any such absurd proposal, and I marvel at the Republican leaders undertaking to do so. Now, what are the plain facts, about which we all really agree? Approximately a thousand million dollars are raised annually by taxation of various kinds to run the Government. Of that one thousand million dollars, a little over $300,000,000 comes from postal receipts—about matching postal expenditures—and therefore can be ignored for the present. Of the seven hundred and odd millions of general receipts, the Republicans raised by customs dues during the last year when they were in power about 44 per cent. The Democrats have raised, under the first year that they have been in power, by customs dues about 5 per cent less, or 39 per cent. I shall submit tables showing in detail the revenues received from customs, internal revenue, and other sources for the fiscal year ending July, 1913, and the fiscal year ending July, 1914.

The following are the tables referred to:

Ordinary receipts, fiscal year 1913.

Customs (customs receipts are 44 per cent of the total)		$318,891,395.86
Internal revenue—
Ordinary	$309,410,665.81
Corporation tax	35,006,299.84
		344,416,965.65
Public lands		2,910,204.69
Miscellaneous		57,892,663.64
Total		724,111,229.84

Ordinary receipts, fiscal year 1914.

Customs (customs receipts are 39 per cent of the total)		$292,320,014.51
Internal revenue—
Ordinary	$308,659,732.56
Corporation expenses	10,671,077.22
Corporation income	32,456,662.67
Individual income	28,253,534.85
		380,041,007.30
Public lands		2,571,774.77
Miscellaneous		59,740,370.13
Total		734,673,166.71

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, it is perfectly manifest to anybody who will be frank that with most of the great nations of the world at war the customs revenues that would come to the Government, either under a Republican tariff law or a Democratic tariff law, would be greatly lessened. That is so plain that he who runs may read. That being true, there are these alternatives open to the party in power and responsible for the conduct of the business of the country—either to supply new sources of revenue, not to levy additional taxes in the sense of getting additional money from the taxpayers, because that is not the fact, but to change the source and method by which you were to raise the moneys necessary to run the Government, or to tide over the deficiency, if it could be tided over, by drawing on any surplus that the Government might have, or by selling bonds and putting a mortgage on the future.

The Democratic Party in facing those alternatives was big enough to consider what should be done from the standpoint of what is right rather than what should be done as a matter of expediency. We could have delayed the levying of this tax, we could have delayed the bringing in of the bill until after election, and have deprived you of any campaign thunder you may be able to get by virtue of what you will be pleased to say is an additional burden laid upon the American people. But, instead of that, we realized what every thinking, conservative man in America realizes, that in a condition of such world convulsion, with credits impaired as they are, it was of the utmost importance that the Treasury of the United States should not only be in a position to stand any present shock, but any future shock that might come by reason of this tremendous disturbance of conditions. We believed that it was important not to put any greater strain upon the banks than was already placed upon them by this condition, and so believing, we have not looked to the moneys to the Government's credit in the banks, but have sought to obtain by internal-revenue taxes the revenues no longer to be had at the customhouse.

Members rail at the Democratic administration because it has deposited $75,000,000 with the national banks. Now, the only difference between the Democratic Party's action in that regard and the Republican Party's action in the past has been that you deposited money free of any interest and we have deposited money and asked 2 per cent interest on it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, the fact is this, also known of and admitted by all thinking men who are not talking simply for the sake of party advantage: We have lived under a currency system that has been the worst currency system of any civilized nation on the globe. Under it your discount rate upon speculative loans was always less than it was upon commercial loans, because there was no medium whereby you could rediscount commercial paper, and therefore the New York banks having reserves deposited with them by the interior banks had to loan money upon such character of collateral as would enable them in ordinary times to immediately get it back when money was called for by the interior banks that had loaned to them; and hence loans were made upon stock and bond collateral, a collateral that is readily convertible in ordinary times, but which in times of great distress becomes the most difficult and in many ways the worst collateral that a bank could have. Here were the banks of America with a great mass of this collateral. Here were more than a thousand millions of dollars of American securities owned abroad, every Government in Europe wanting gold, and gold only, to finance the war, and every one of the peoples of those countries struck by the blighting effect of this war, with the need to immediately use every possible resource for cash. The necessary result was the instant offering to America of vast quantities of these American securities held abroad, with a consequent destruction of their market value. If the banks had not been in a position, or had refused to protect in some degree those offerings, they would have destroyed much of their own collateral, their own securities would have dwindled, credits would have vanished, many would have faced bankruptcy, although in point of fact more than solvent, amply able ordinarily to take care of all demands.

If the Government with that situation had let the country understand that it was going to add to the burdens of the banks instead of taking from the burdens of the banks as far as they could, you would have had a panic in this country, and then the very men who are here railing against us because we do not go to the banks now and draw out this money would have been loudest in their statement that it was a refusal of the Government to help business and financial institutions that had forced the panic on us. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I say to you that it takes courage and statesmanship of the highest order to face disagreeable tasks, to face them knowing that criticisms will be made which to the casual thinker will carry weight, and to do it without regard to political fortunes, because it is in the true interests of your country. I do not believe there is a man within the sound of my voice, acquainted with real financial transactions, with world currents, but that in his heart of hearts approves of the action that the Government has taken in strengthening the banks throughout the country at this time instead of undertaking to weaken them.

Now, that is the condition that has confronted us. It is perfectly apparent. I care not what may be read about your receipts from customs dues for this week or that week or the month past; the man who does not believe customs dues are going to fall off and continue to fall off for a considerable period of time as the result of this world war has so little knowledge of economic trade currents and conditions as to not make it worth while to bother with him. Of course, you have a large number of customs dues being paid now as the result of goods being taken out of bonded warehouses, and you will continue to have them for some little time, for I understand there is something like $50,000,000 worth of goods in such warehouses, and they will not be tax-paid until they are ready to be used in consumption.

But the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] says to us that communication between England and France and the United States is practically as free as before the war, and that Germany has found a method of exporting dyestuffs through Holland, as I recall, and that therefore we need not expect any great falling off in customs dues. Do you believe that Germany can put the army that she has put into the field, that France can put the army that she has put into the field, that England can put the army that she has put into the field and that she is preparing to put into the field, without affecting her industrial capacity and her capacity to export her manufactured products to other countries? A man who believes differently I do not know how to argue with, because his position is so patently absurd. All of us know that in those countries there is going to be a stagnation in trade and in business that will prevent them from being exporting countries in the true sense for many, many years to come, and of necessity the customs dues we would receive by virtue of importations from those countries will fall away.

The Democratic Party comes to the country and says that we need so much money, not a greater sum than we had anticipated, but we need money that we would have gotten from customs that, by virtue of this war, we will not now get, and therefore we will raise it by an internal-revenue tax. Why, to listen to gentlemen talk you would think there was some special virtue in a tax at the customhouse and some particular vice in a tax that was paid by internal revenue. In point of fact they are both taxes and are both burdens upon the people, and no amount of sophistry can make anyone believe that you get a benefit by levying a tax either at the customhouse or by internal-revenue methods. Taxes are the necessities and burdens of government. They are the price the people pay for the benefits they get from the Government in protecting them in life, liberty, and property. So we do not go to the country with any proposition to lay additional burdens upon the people.

We go to the country simply with a proposal to supply the revenues that have failed through no fault of ours, and which you would have had to supply if you had been in power; only you would have had a greater failure of revenues, because you raised a greater proportion of your total from customs duties than we. To the extent that we have substituted income taxes and a corporation tax for customs dues, to that extent have we lessened the disarrangement of the Government finances by virtue of this world war. Therefore, if there be any difference in the attitude that the two parties would have been in in this emergency it is that we have a less sum to supply than you, because you would have had no revenues coming from an income tax and less from a corporation tax.

Now, statements are made here undertaking to prove that we would have gone bankrupt if there had been no war; and yet the fact is, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and as shown by the receipts of the Treasury, that for the fiscal year 1913, excluding Panama, we had a surplus of receipts over expenditures of $34,418,677, and, including those, there was a difference only of something like $400,000. I consider that good finance. I do not believe, and I never did believe, that there was any merit in a system of taxation that piled up tremendous sums in the Treasury greater than were needed to be expended in a proper administration of the Government. I do not believe that there is any advantage in taxation. I repeat, I think it is a burden and not a benefit conferred upon the people.

Now, much is said also about extravagance, and much of it would find a receptive ear if it came from a little bit different source. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But, great heavens, think of it! Think of it when the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] talks about economy. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Think of it when the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] talks about economy in the expenditures. Why, there is not a man here who does not know that every time we have had questions of appropriations up those have been the men who, if they have criticized us at all, have criticized us because we did not spend more instead of because we spent too much. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, if playing politics in the face of a great crisis were proof of patriotism, I could pronounce a eulogy upon the Republican side of the House that would place them in the category of the truest band of patriots to be found upon this planet. During my entire service here—in fact, during my entire life—I have never seen any assemblage of grown-up men reduced to such serious and desperate straits that they were willing to lay aside their judgment, the facts, the reason, and the patriotism of the situation and devote their efforts to the propagation of extreme, hidebound, stand-pat partisanship.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], in his interesting speech on yesterday, turned his mind back, as is his custom, to the Payne law. This recalls the fact that the lamented Senator Dolliver made the timely statement that during the year 1909 two of the most colossal frauds of this generation were inflicted upon the American people. One was the discovery of the North Pole by Dr. Cook and the other was the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law [applause on the Democratic side], and that the President of the United States promptly and with much satisfaction sent a telegram of hearty congratulation to the author of each. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, whatever merits the Payne-Aldrich law had have been thrashed out and passed upon, both here and by the people of the country. The people have repudiated that law in no uncertain terms. It became odious to everybody except the friends of special privilege. I hope that after this bill leaves the House we shall hear no more of that abominable iniquity, that ghastly abortion—the Payne-Aldrich law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We hear much talk upon the other side about other methods of taxation, but we see no suggestion in concrete form offered by any gentleman upon that side. If they were really sincere in their criticisms of the Underwood law, they would rise up over there as one man and say that this law has broken down, that it is a failure, that it will not only fail to meet the demands of the Treasury in times of peace, but far less will it meet them under war conditions such as we have, and they would propose to repeal this law, with its income-tax provision, and reenact the Payne-Aldrich law. Why do they not do that? Why do they not offer some kind of a substitute if the country is going to the "demnition bow wows" so rapidly from the effects of the Underwood tariff law? They dare not propose to this House the reenactment of the Payne law and the repeal of the income-tax law, and go back to their constituents and tell them that they had decided that wealth ought not to pay its share of taxes in this country, that it ought to be exempt, as Republican administrations exempted it during all the past years [applause on the Democratic side], and that we ought again to restore a tax of 45 per cent on wool, 145 per cent on cheap woolen blankets, 90 per cent on cheap cotton socks, 60 per cent on ordinary woolen hats, 15 to 25 per cent on all agricultural implements that the farmers use, and on through the long category of all important necessities of the American people. They well know that they dare not make this offer, because the Progressive Republicans in the West——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. HULL. I have but a very few minutes. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman as soon as I have concluded the statement I am making.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee declines to yield.

Mr. HULL. They know they could not get together upon a substitute bill of that character.

Now, I have been very greatly surprised at the attitude of the other side of the House in the face of this tremendous crisis, as compared with its attitude and the attitude of the Democratic minority during the Spanish-American War conditions. On that occasion the Democrats who addressed the House invariably stated that they had no disposition to delay the passage of a needed emergency revenue measure. They favored raising the war emergency revenue. They differed, however, as to some of the items that were to go into the bill, and whatever occurred in the way of discussion and votes on that occasion simply reflected differences of opinion as to the particular items that should compose the law.

Now, in that connection the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], with great glee, suggested that the Democrats proposed an income tax on that occasion to meet the emergency, but fails to do so now. Why, the gentleman has evidently given no attention to the surroundings at that time. At the time of the outbreak of that war we had a net balance in the General Treasury fund of $118,000,000.

The Republicans, led by Mr. Dingley and others, insisted that we ought to have a good-sized general balance in the Treasury. The Democrats did not controvert this, but cooperated in the passage of an emergency war-revenue measure of $100,000,000. Second, there was an immediate issuance of $199,000,000 of bonds and the transfer of their proceeds to the credit of the Treasury; and, in the third place, as everyone knew and calculated, the customs receipts jumped up $56,000,000 during the fiscal year 1899. The outcome was that the Republican administration during one fiscal year threw into the Treasury $300,000,000 of new revenue, with the further result that they had $100,000,000 surplus at the end of that fiscal year. When the Treasury was given immediate relief by the proceeds of $199,000,000 of bonds it was but natural that Democrats would urge an income tax to aid the war expenses. They talk about economy now. I recall that on that occasion Democrats earnestly suggested economy. Our Republican friends disregarded every phase of economy, even with respect to normal expenditures, and we find that for the fiscal year 1899 they voted $14,627,449 for rivers and harbors. We find that for that same year, in the very face of that crisis——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Not now. I will be glad to yield later.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to embarrass the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. I did not hear the gentleman. I find, according to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that the appropriations were increased so that the normal expenditures were more than $39,000,000 in excess of those of the previous year, to say nothing of tens of millions of dollars of authorizations for public buildings, rivers and harbors, and other miscellaneous appropriations. That is in strange contrast with the attitude of these gentlemen on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, the conditions at this time are immeasurably more serious than they were at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. I wish I had the time to read one sentence from a noted financial publication describing the utter disruption of international business affairs and the almost complete standstill to which not only the interstate but the international commerce of the entire world has come. From the farthermost countries of the world we are getting daily information that the people are in a state of terror as a result of this awful European conflagration, that business is suspended everywhere, and, of course, our international commerce is almost entirely paralyzed. Both our international credit and exchange has broken down. In the face of these tangible facts, admitted by the Republican press throughout the country, admitted by leading citizens everywhere who have been willing to be fair, we find the Republican minority here suddenly disposed, purely for the sake of temporary partisan advantage, to take the indefensible position they have announced on this floor.

They continue to harp about the Payne law as a revenue producer. I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, and I would wager whatever reputation I have, that a board of experts, composed of fair men of both parties, who might go through all the facts and figures as to our imports, our exports, our Treasury receipts and expenditures, would unanimously hold that the Underwood tariff law during its first nine months yielded a greater revenue than the Payne law for the corresponding period of the year previous, or even greater than the Payne law would have yielded for the first nine months during which the Underwood law has been in operation.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] speaks about there being some excess of exports over imports during a portion of the recent past few months. Why, if he would turn back to the year after the Payne law was in operation he would find that the same condition existed. These temporary fluctuations signify nothing with respect to the operation and effect of a great tariff system. Furthermore, the Payne law was in operation four years. If the Republican administration had not issued two series of Panama Canal bonds, that law would have brought in a deficit to the Federal Treasury three out of those four years. In addition to that, it had an advantage that the Underwood law did not have in that during two of those years there were abnormal and unexpected and unaccountable increases from the internal-revenue proper—$22,000,000 for one year and $19,000,000 for another year. This makes $41,000,000 to the credit of the Payne law that was wholly unexpected and unaccounted for. These receipts decreased during the first year of the Underwood law, as it happened. During the four years that the Payne law was in operation $147,600,000 of Panama Canal expenses were paid. They issued $41,000,000 of bonds. That leaves $106,000,000 paid out of the general fund, or $26,650,000 a year. The Underwood law paid $34,000,000 of Panama Canal expenses last year, and still the Treasury came out about even. This canal feature reveals another annual loss of $7,500,000 to the Underwood law which did not apply to the Payne law. This makes an average annual difference of $18,000,000 derived from unexpected sources which went to the credit and advantage of the Payne law and which the Underwood law was deprived of. Now, we know—a blind man or a driveling idiot knows—that when this war broke out and our $7,000,000,000 commerce with Germany, Belgium, Austria, and European Russia suddenly went out of existence, when our international exchange broke down, when our exports of $650,000,000 of cotton and $50,000,000 of tobacco ceased, when every class of international business came to a standstill, the Treasury suffered losses at the customhouse. The returns show patently to any person who will read, or see, or hear that the loss of customs receipts for August, for example, was $11,500,000. Deducting the income tax average yield per month would make the net war loss at least $7,500,000 for this one month. We know further that for September, according to the latest Treasury report, there is a loss of $8,000,000 up to the 23d of this month. According to every calculation the loss to the customhouse growing directly out of the war will be for September near $6,000,000 after deducting more than $4,000,000 for the average monthly income tax yield.

If we therefore take the minimum of monthly customs revenue loss yielded since the war commenced, we would find a loss during this fiscal year of more than $60,000,000. Furthermore, any person who gives considerat on to our existing conditions knows that while England and France had on hand a surplus of goods with which they had been supplying us constantly before the war, and that after 30 days, and when the ocean became cleared of the enemy's vessels, they shipped to us as much of this surplus as they could, this was chiefly to fill orders received before the war. But since then virtually all of the factory workers in France have gone to the war. Stocks of raw material are rapidly disappearing, such as France and England procured from Germany and Belgium and other warring countries, with the inevitable result that our imports from Europe must naturally fall off as long as the war continues, and no one can prophesy that it will end within any short time.

That is the situation, Mr. Speaker; but in the face of all this serious condition we are upbraided, purely for blind partisan purposes, with not being able to secure not only enough money out of the Underwood tariff law to conduct the Government in a time of peace, but also to sustain the Treasury in a time of most serious war conditions. This is an extraordinary tax imposed for extraordinary purposes. While we are not actually at war, we are actually facing war conditions as much or more, in some respects, than if we were at war. Our international trade was never better than during the Spanish-American War. But the only answer we get from gentlemen on the other side in their political extremities and in their favorite pastime of undertaking to bunko the people again is that we ought to be economical. My God! a political organization that raised the ordinary national expenses of the Government from $460,000,000 in 1897 to $982,000,000 in 1913, more than doubled; first a billion-dollar Congress, and, second, as rapidly as they could get to it, a two-billion dollar Congress—they turn round and confront us with the impudent suggestion that we should be economical. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] They say that this Underwood law that is helpless to protect the Treasury in times of peace and in times of normal trade is amply able, it has such great recuperative power in a time of war, that it will bring in ample revenue to meet all war emergencies. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

I can not understand another one of the many inconsistencies of gentlemen on the other side. I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that I am usually somewhat patient and have great respect for gentlemen on the other side and their opinions, but it is when they are asserting those opinions frankly, honestly, and candidly. I see my time is expiring, and I would say in conclusion that no one desires to pay this war tax, and no Member of Congress at all desires to impose it. It requires both courage and patriotism to impose this tax to meet inexorable war conditions, and it requires patriotism to pay it uncomplainingly. Neither will any two Members here agree on each item to be taxed. I did not get some of the important items I would have taxed. I strongly urged them. But being overruled by a majority of my colleagues and the President, I shall cheerfully go with them and help to meet this great war emergency by voting for the bill. Naturally, it will be repealed just as soon as conditions permit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is our first official contribution to the cost of the European war—one of those glancing blows that the noncombatant nations must expect, I suppose—a spent bullet, so to speak, from the firing line. Fortunately, we are not hit yet in a vital part and the lesson written large on the eastern horizon is worth to our citizens all that this measure call upon them to pay.

A little over a month ago by the calendar—it seems a century in the march of events—we heard a chorus of criticism of the President's "colossal blunder" in Mexico. We were described in the opposition papers as "the laughingstock of Europe." Our "amateur diplomats," it seems, were a source of grief and shame as compared with the polished experts of the Old World. Well, by their fruits we know them better now. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The whirligig of time has not taken long to bring its revenges. Meanwhile the professional diplomacy of Europe has wrought a blunder so colossal that no man living can reckon its remote consequences. Will it set loose the repressed fanaticism of Africa and the near East? Will it bring Asia down upon the back of an exhausted and divided Europe? These are possibilities already discussed. And even if the equilibrium of the whole human race is not to be upset, the immediate result of the intriguers' handiwork must have horrified themselves if they have human feelings under the mask of professional calm. They see the young men of seven nations destroyed by new and hideous methods of slaughter or sent to the hospitals mutilated and enfeebled for life; womanhood wrung with anguish, children doomed to every privation. They see industry paralyzed, the harvests blighted, homes razed, villages burned, cities gutted and seared, venerable monuments laid low at the bidding of military necessity. Ten millions of men—the strongest, the freshest, the most capable—are torn from the paths and avenues of production and set to the task of destroying one another. The one sure harvest of this autumn in these seven nations involved, numbering over 400,000,000 human beings, is hatred. Children yet unborn will hate others yet unborn because of the extreme technical proficiency and masterly maneuvers of your "trained European diplomats." [Applause on the Democratic side.] Well may President Eliot, of Harvard, insist that a fruit of this war shall be the abolition of secrecy in the negotiations of

States and the adoption of more frank and democratic methods by which the various peoples, who have no murder-breeding differences with one another, may decide these momentous issues for themselves

In this welter of barbarous passion we note with satisfaction that the names of American diplomats emerge with honor. A Gerard, a Herrick, a Brand Whitlock, and many more, have proved themselves equal to the emergencies which have confronted them and won the respect of the countries to which they are accredited. That "amused Europe" of which we heard so much envies us now our tranquillity. Among the chancelleries which acknowledged President Wilson's offer of mediation there is not one—or any thinking man anywhere to-day—that does not wish he could have been summoned at an earlier stage to avert the tragedy now moving before our eyes to its awful consummation.

To what does our President owe his commanding eminence at this juncture? To his lofty character? To his breadth of historical vision? To his humanitarian sympathy? To his steadfastness of purpose? To his sense of justice which has placed our country definitely and irrevocably in the vantage position of strict neutrality? [Applause on the Democratic side.] To these personal qualities the President owes much of his world-wide influence and his achievement in foreign as in domestic policy; but his position is even more secure as a worthy and convinced exponent of the American tradition. The principles upon which our Nation was founded have received in this year of grace a vindication which makes every one of us glow not with exultation or pride but with gratitude to the fathers who stamped a whole continent with their political conceptions.

We are sometimes told that it is our isolation that makes us peaceful. We are a unit, without divisions of boundary, between two oceans that interpose their might in our behalf against foreign invaders. No doubt these accidents of situation have been a blessing to us; but there is something more than accident in the resolute antipathy to war which is a specific, ingrained element of the American character. We love peace because our Government is a Government of the people. Democracy, precisely because it rests on justice, has a natural predilection for peace; aristocracy, which rests ultimately on force, has a natural inclination for war. In no other country in the world have workingmen the freedom and the power that they enjoy in the United States. In no other country are women so honored, so influential, so advanced in industry and education. These are the two great classes whose voice, if it could have been heard in Europe before the fury came and swept away all reason, would have prevented the war. They hate war because they suffer most by war. The victorious general has his medals and titles and other prizes worth striving for—his name in history, perhaps—but the mechanic or farmer who fights in the ranks, the wife or mother in the empty home, what souvenirs have they? Wounds, loneliness, and the dreary grind of a lifelong poverty. It is they who can recite with most fervor the inverted beatitude of the late Mayor Collins, of Boston: "Cursed are the war makers, for they shall see the devil." As women and workingmen gain power wars will become fewer. [Applause.]

I have said that democracy is essentially peaceful, because it rests on justice. It can not consistently build its own foundations on a declaration of equal rights and proceed to the denial of these rights by wars of subjugation. A democratic nation like ours must aim at prosperity through industry and commerce, not by foreign conquest and the addition of territory which other peoples have made their own.

It is true we have had great soldiers in America, and honored many of them—our list of Presidents includes a Washington, a Jackson, a Taylor, a Grant, a Garfield, and a McKinley, but they were citizen-soldiers. Not one of them for an instant set his soldiery above his citizenship or was possessed with the mania of war as a discipline for manhood. The Christ of the Andes, cast from the metal of melted cannon used in the wars between Argentina and Chile, and set up on the boundary between these two reconciled nations in pledge of perpetual peace, would have moved them more than any battle monument glorifying mere supremacy in combat. The beauty of our Memorial Day is that it is a day not of triumph but of reconciliation.

We are not only a peaceful Nation, we are a Nation composed of many elements. Descendants of all the European peoples live here in harmony and in equal status before the law. This circumstance gives our neutrality a certain positive character. It is not negative or indifferent, but active. If the opportunity should come, we shall enter keenly upon the task of mediation, precisely because we know the worth of all the warring nations through their immigrant children who have become our fellow citizens. Through these immigrants we hope to see a reaction of the American idea upon Europe, so that the present calamity may be the last of its kind. Already democracy has worked its way into some of the most conservative nations of the world. We read of constitutions and parliaments in Turkey, China—even in Persia. As surely as that political conception spreads and its underlying philosophy is accepted, peaceful methods will follow and the appeal will be to reason and not to force. The only use of war in democracy is to punish the disturbers of peace. As the motto of Massachusetts runs, "Ense petit placidam sub libertate quietem"—"She draws the sword to insure peace under liberty."

Peace and liberty! They are the twin angels that guard us. May afflicted Europe soon turn to them for the protection which we enjoy! May a Christ of the Rhineland soon arise to guarantee friendship and mutual esteem between the great nations now locked in a barbarous death grapple, in which victory and defeat prove no more as to essential justice than the individual trial by combat of the Middle Ages.

Meanwhile Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, stands before the world embodying the true American ideas—democracy, liberty, peace, and good will to all. As the exponent of these conceptions he has behind him the whole American people of to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY].

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the revenue bill now under consideration is an emergency measure for which the President and his party are in no way responsible.

The greatest war not only of modern times but of all times now being waged in Europe is alone responsible for the situation that makes necessary the passage of this bill. Six European countries from which we have been receiving large imports are at war, with the result that there has been a falling off in customs duties to the amount of about $10,000,000 per month.

This bill does not provide for the raising of additional revenue. No additional revenue is required. This measure will furnish the Government with the same amount of revenue by other methods and from other sources that the Government would have received from customs duties if there had been no war in Europe.

This measure follows closely the lines of the Spanish War revenue law, except that certain articles are eliminated from and certain articles included in the tax list, and with the further exception that many of the rates are lower.

This bill is not just as I would have made it. I would have left out some of the articles upon which taxes have been levied, and I would have included other articles in the tax list.

However, a revenue bill can not be framed by one person alone, and it is impossible for each Member of this House to have a law to his liking. Legislation of this character is generally a compromise, and must necessarily be so.

I had hoped that it would not be necessary to pass any legislation of this character. In common with others, I thought that bonds could be sold to provide the necessary revenue until other and less objectionable methods for replenishing the Treasury could be put into operation.

After it became apparent that additional revenue from some source would have to be raised in order to take the place of our failing customs receipts I introduced an inheritance tax bill which provides a graduated scale of taxes on all devises, bequests, and transfers of property by will or the intestate laws of any State or Territory. My aim in drafting this bill was to subject the swollen fortunes of this country to a tax that would furnish a considerable sum of money for the support of the General Government. A tax on inheritance, together with an increase on the rates of the larger incomes, it was thought, would supply us with plenty of funds.

But the President and Secretary of the Treasury are of the opinion that a bond sale at this time would be impracticable and dangerous because of the critical financial condition of this country as a result of the war, and that revenues derived from an inheritnace tax and from an increase of rates on larger incomes would not be available for some months. Therefore these methods for increasing the revenues of the Government could not be considered in this emergency.

Since the beginning of the European war more than $1,000,000,000 of American securities owned by foreigners have been dumped, so to speak, upon our markets. The New York Stock Exchange was obliged to close its doors shortly after the war begun, and business has not been resumed since. The fact of the matter is the European war has not only struck down our customs duties to the amount of $10,000,000 a month, but it has also completely demoralized trade and industry and brought about in this country a critical financial situation.

The United States Treasury can not stand the shrinkage of revenues resulting from this war. The financial integrity of the Government must be maintained.

Government funds now on deposit in various parts of the country for crop-moving purposes can not be withdrawn without running the risk of bringing about a financial and industrial crisis. For the same reasons a bond sale is impracticable at this time. A sale of $100,000,000 of bonds would cause a withdrawing from the banks of that much money, and consequently make the financial situation more critical. Therefore it appears that there is nothing left for Congress to do but to pass this emergency revenue measure.

An effort has been made in this debate to make it appear that the President and his Secretary of the Treasury are advocating the passage of an emergency tax bill because they are trying to favor the banks of the country by refusing to withdraw Government funds now on deposit in the banks.

A sufficient answer to this contention is the fact that by the terms of this bill the banks are called upon to pay a substantial part of the total sum to be raised.

It has been the policy of this Government for many years to keep Government funds on deposit with the different banks throughout the country, and the only difference between this administration and former Republican administrations in this respect is that under the present administration the banks are required to pay 2 per cent for the Government money in their vaults, while under former administrations they got the money for nothing.

It has been repeatedly charged on this floor that this legislation has become necessary because of the failure of the new tariff law as a revenue producer. But the facts do not sustain this charge.

The Government receipts from all sources, not including postal receipts, for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1914, first year of the Underwood tariff law, were $734,000,000, as compared with $724,000,000, the receipts from the same sources for the last fiscal year of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law.

Instead of being a failure as a revenue-producing measure, the Underwood tariff law, with its income-tax feature, produced approximately $10,000 000 more revenue in its first year than the Payne-Aldrich tariff law did in its last year. Therefore the tariff policy of the Democratic Party can not in any way be held responsible for the measure we are now considering.

Much has been said during this debate about the extravagance of the Democratic Party as a cause for this emergency tax measure.

Here again the facts do not support the charge.

The Democratic Party has been in partial control of this Government for 2 years, and in complete control for about 18 months, and during all of this period appropriations have been made for 3 fiscal years—1913, 1914, and 1915.

The appropriations for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914 were the joint work of a Democratic House, Republican Senate, and a Republican President, and both parties are responsible for these appropriations, although the record shows that when these bills became laws they carried appropriations to the amount of $54,000,000 more than they did when they were passed by the Democratic House, as a result of increases made by a Republican Senate.

The appropriations for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1914, for which the Democratic and Republican Parties are jointly responsible, amounted to $1,098,000,000.

The Democratic Party alone is responsible for the appropriations made by the present Congress, which amount to $1,115,000,000, in round numbers. These appropriations provide for the expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1915.

Increase of appropriations of present Congress for fiscal year ending July 1, 1915, over appropriations of Republican and Democratic Congress for fiscal year ending July 1, 1914, $17,000,000.

The present Congress has been obliged to make unusual and unavoidable appropriations for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1915, because of the development of the parcel post, the war scare in Mexico, the European war, and for the Panama Canal, as follows:

Increase in Post Office appropriations	$28,000,000
Appropriations resulting from Mexican situation	20,000,000
Appropriations resulting from European war	8,000,000
Appropriation for Panama Canal in excess of amount required of last Congress	2,000,000
Total appropriations of present Congress that were unavoidable and unusual	58,000,000

The pension appropriations for the present Congress were $11,000,000 less than the pension appropriations of the last Congress because of a decreasing pension roll. Deducting $11,000,000 from $58,000,000, we have $47,000,000 as representing the extraordinary and unavoidable appropriations required of the present Congress that were not required of the last Democratic-Republican Congress.

The increased appropriations because of the Mexican situation and the European war are accounted for as follows: The Army and Navy bills, when they finally became laws, carried appropriations amounting to approximately $12,000,000 more than they carried when they passed this House. There can be no doubt at all but that the increases in these bills made by the Senate were the result of the critical Mexican situation at that time. Appropriations in deficiency bills for the Army and Navy as a result of the Mexican situation were made to the amount of more than $8,000,000; $2,750,000 was appropriated for the purpose of bringing Americans home from war-torn Europe; $5,100,000 was appropriated for the purpose of starting a war-risk insurance bureau, made necessary by the European war, in order to enable American products to reach foreign markets; and $1,000,000 was appropriated to enable our foreign embassies to take care of increased business as a result of the war. Our embassies are handling to-day the foreign business of the warring powers.

In passing, it might be noted that the Post Office Department of this Government, for the first time in a quarter of a century, is self-sustaining, thanks to Democratic efficiency, and the increased appropriations made by the present Congress for the development of the parcel-post and postal facilities in general can not in any way be made the basis for the charge of extravagance against the present administration.

Eliminating the unavoidable and unusual appropriations of the present Congress made necessary by the Mexican and European situation, and eliminating increased appropriations for the Post Office, which are taken care of by the revenues of that service, and eliminating the increased appropriations for the completion of the Panama Canal, it appears that this Congress in its appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, has retrenched and economized to the extent of $30,000,000 in comparison with the appropriations of the Democratic and Republican Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

This is not the only comparison that can be made regarding national expenditures that will give us some idea as to what would have been the condition of the Public Treasury if the Democratic Party since coming into power had practiced the brand of economy that the Republican Party indulged in when it was in power.

The appropriations for the support of this Government were increased under Republican rule from $485,000,000 in 1898 to $986,000,000 in 1909, or an increase of more than 100 per cent in 11 years.

During its last six years of power the Republican Party increased the expenditures of this Government on an average of $210,000,000 a year, and during its last three years of official control the appropriations for the support of the Government were increased $307,000,000 over the appropriations for the three previous years, or an increase in national expenditures on an average of more than $100,000,000 a year.

The total appropriations for the last three fiscal years, during which time the Democratic Party has been in partial and complete control of the Government, exceeded the total expenditures for the three previous years—Republican years—by $150,000,000, an increase on an average of $50,000,000 a year, as compared with an increase on an average of more than $100,000,000 a year during the last three Republican years.

During the last 25 years appropriations for the support of the Post Office Department and for pensions have constituted the two big items that go to make up the sum total of our national expenditures, and in comparing the financial records of different administrations these two items may well be eliminated.

I say these two items may be eliminated because the Post Office Department, as stated herein, is self-sustaining, and any expenditures for that branch of the Government go directly for the benefit of the people and are paid for out of the growing post-office receipts and should not be considered at all in the matter of estimating increases or decreases in appropriations. Likewise should the appropriations for pensions be eliminated because, I take it, there are no Members of the Republican side of this House who will stand on this floor and denounce the Democratic Party for having made more liberal provisions for the old soldiers in their declining years.

Pension legislation has come to all parties as a result of our wars, and very little criticism has ever come from the public generally because our pension laws have been made more liberal.

Personally I have no apologies to offer for any vote of mine on pension legislation. I believe that the gallant defenders of the Union—in fact, all the soldiers of the Republic—have received nothing more than they were entitled to at the hands of a grateful people.

I am satisfied that the Democratic Party will not be censured for having made appropriations to make easier and pleasanter the last days of the scarred veterans of the Republic as they march gallantly on toward the setting sun of life.

The appropriations for post-office maintenance for the last three fiscal years exceed the appropriations made for that service during the last three years of Republican rule by $132,436,000, and the appropriations for pensions for the last three fiscal years exceed the appropriation for the same fund during the last three Republican years by $41,478,000, or a total increase of appropriations for these two items during the last three years of Democratic control over the last three years of Republican rule of $174,000,000.

If we eliminate the increase in appropriations made during the last three years for the support of the Post Office Department and used largely in the development of the parcel post, and if we eliminate the increase in appropriations for pensions made during the same period, we find that the expenditures for running this Government have been $24,000,000 less during the said last three years under partial and complete Democratic control than they were during the last three years of Republican rule.

It is not contended that the Democratic Party has made the record for economy that it ought to have made since it has come into power in this House, but it is submitted that to be able to reduce the ordinary expenses of this Government $30,000,000 in a single year is an achievement that ought to at least protect the party from being charged with extravagance by the survivors of the Cannon régime.

It would seem that the party that permitted the expenses of our Government to increase 100 per cent in 11 years, that the party that increased the appropriations for the support of the Government during its last six years of official power at the rate of $210,000,000 a year on an average, ought not to be charging with extravagance a party that has been able to conduct the ordinary expenses of the Government with decreased and not increased appropriations.

If the Democratic Party had followed the example set by the Republican Party during its last six years of official life in the matter of governmental expenditures, the total appropriations for the present year, instead of being $1,115,000,000, would have been closer to $1,300,000,000.

Well might the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS], a Progressive Republican, state, as he did on the floor of this House in this debate, that "it lies not in the mouth of the Republican Party to charge the Democratic Party with extravagance."

A few weeks ago the ranking Republican Member of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], read a lecture to the Democratic Party on its extravagance in the management of the finances of this country. The gentleman especially denounced the Democratic Party for creating a lot of Federal offices, and in particular did he object to the conduct of the party in the creation of the Federal Reserve Board and the new Trade Commission.

I have no doubt at all but that every sympathizer with the old régime objects to the creation of the positions made necessary by the enactment of the Glass currency bill and the Federal Trade Commission bill. If Cannon was still in power in this House, these offices would never have been created, because the Cannon part of the Republican Party would never have framed any such laws. These laws were passed for the purpose of controlling monopoly. The supporters of Cannon and the believers in Cannonism never had much use for legislation designed to control monopoly, and particularly for legislation that would interfere with Wall Street in its control of the financial affairs of this country.

Here, again, the record makes the apologists for the old Republican régime look ridiculous when it disclosed the wholesale increasing of Federal offices during the last 16 years of that party's lease of power.

When the gentleman from Massachusetts and his party came into power in 1897 they found a Government pay roll of only 178,000 names, but when they left office in 1913 they left a Government pay roll upon which appeared the names of 441,000 people.

In the four-year period from 1909 to 1913, when this country was under complete control of the Republican Party, there were 100,000 names added to the pay roll of the Government, or an increase in Federal offices at the rate of 25,000 a year.

Think of it! From the inception of this Government down to 1897, it was found necessary to create only 178,000 Government positions; yet the Republican Party of Cannon, Dalzell, and PAYNE found it convenient to increase the number of public offices 260,000, or more than 200 per cent, in 16 years, in order to find official pap for every party worker.

The opponents of this bill are not opposing it because they object to any of its items. They are opposed to the passage of this bill or any bill of this character. In other words, they are playing politics. They do not hope to beat this bill; they do not wish to beat it. They do not desire that their country's financial and industrial welfare should be threatened by a refusal to pass this measure, but in the hopes that it may better their political fortunes they are widly denouncing the Democratic Party for attempting to pass this measure.

How unlike the conduct of the Democratic Party when the Spanish War revenue measure was up for consideration! The Democratic Members of Congress at that time did not oppose the granting of ample revenues to the Government, although they did differ on the methods to be adopted for securing such revenue.

At the time of the Spanish War bonds to the amount of $200,000,000 were issued and sold, and the proceeds turned into the Treasury, and an emergency revenue measure was passed providing for additional revenue to the amount of more than $100,000,000 a year.

The Spanish War lasted only a few months. War was declared in April; Dewey sailed into Manila Bay and sunk the Spanish fleet in May; the Cuban campaign was practically over in July, and the boys were being mustered out in September.

Charles Morris in his history of the Spanish War estimates that this war cost the Government $130,000,000.

Notwithstanding the fact that in the beginning of the Spanish War bonds were sold to the amount of $70,000,000 more than the total cost of the war, on the 13th of June, 1898, the Republican Congress passed an emergency revenue measure providing for the raising of $105,000,000 a year, and the said revenue measure remained on the statute book for more than 2½ years after the war was closed.

The fact of the matter is, the war was almost over when this revenue measure was passed, and after the Treasury had received from the sale of bonds more than enough to cover the total cost of the war.

Some of the Members on the floor of this House who assisted and were responsible for the financing of the Spanish War are now heard in denunciation of the Democratic Party in its attempt to raise $100,000,000 by an emergency revenue measure to take the place of $100,000,000 in customs duties struck down by the war.

It is a remarkable fact that the Members from the Republican side of this House who are most severe in their denunciation of this bill as an unjustifiable burden on the people, and who are loudest in their talk of economy, are the very Members who several months ago were trying to goad the President and this country into a war with Mexico. If these gentlemen had been successful in their efforts to bring about war in this country, what would have been the financial consequences of their efforts, not to mention the anguish and sorrow of mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, and sweethearts of American soldier boys whose lives would have been sacrificed on the field of battle?

If our country was at war with Mexico to-day—and we would have had a war on our hands if the critics of this bill and of the Mexican policy of the President had had their way—the administration would be obliged to ask not for the passage of a hundred-million-dollar emergency revenue measure but for a billion-dollar measure.

This is not the time for playing politics when the credit and financial stability of the Government are at stake. The Democratic Party is facing a crisis not of its own creation. It is always disagreeable and highly dangerous from a political standpoint, especially on the eve of an election, to pass a tax measure.

President Wilson has solved this problem from the standpoint of what is right and not from the standpoint of what is expedient. The President believes in meeting all questions and all emergencies fairly and candidly; he believes in being honest with the people; and while it would undoubtedly be to his party's interest to have delayed the passage of this measure until after election, he is not the kind of a President to permit party expediency to interfere with what appears to him to be his plain duty.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] had read the morning dispatches from the South what effect it would have had on his eloquent and beautiful exordium. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I sat with interest listening to the eloquent gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who charged that the men on this side lacked intelligence in their defense and protest against the strong hand of taxation being laid on the American people. We on this side were all glad that the gentleman from Kentucky had not qualified as the official censor and critic of intelligence. I recognize in the gentleman from Kentucky the proof of intelligence and shrewdness which he denies us, because when the President of the United States suggested means of raising this revenue that it should be that from which there would be a "yield with a certain and constant flow"—mark the words—it meant malt first, vinous second, spirituous third. But the great product of Kentucky is exempt from the operations of this bill. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

We think in triads. So when the first and second articles included in the suggestion were named, and then they suddenly sidestepped the third, took a tangent and burdened business, it was a violence to rhetoric, a shock to logic, but it seemed to conform to the demands of geography. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] saw fit to refer to those who happened to differ with him in respect to this bill as "driveling idiots." I deplore his adverse judgment. I will not answer in kind, because I know he is not. I want you to remember the gentleman from Tennessee is the author of the income tax; he predicted that from personal incomes we would raise $70,000,000 in the first year, whereas the actual amount realized is little more than $30,000,000. He came within $40,000,000 of it. Under the circumstances we can probably afford to take the gentleman's adverse characterization as complimentary. That is the second great failure feature of the Underwood law.

The gentleman from Tennessee also invoked the shades of the eloquent Senator from Iowa, Mr. Dolliver, who had in a moment of passion seen fit to characterize adversely the tariff law of 1909 as a fraud. Yes; and I venture to say that if the eloquent and superb Senator from the State of Iowa, once a Member of this House and now gone to his reward, could return to earth and look upon the legislation enacted since he departed, eloquent as he was, imaginative as he was, with such a profound command of the English language, with that precision and purity of diction for which he had no peer in America, he would have looked upon the Underwood bill, and, quailing at the task of proper characterization, said, "As a legislative folly and failure it was the last word in legislation." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The real proposition before us is that we shall lay the strong hand of the Government upon the people in the form of taxation, to wring from industry and the poor nearly a quarter of a billion of dollars. The sum is not $100,000,000, as asked by the President, nor yet $105,000,000, as discussed by the committee. The bill by its terms becomes operative upon its passage, presumably in a few days, except the stamp tax, which goes into effect November 1, 1914. The stamp tax ceases by the terms of the bill December 31, 1915. If the bill goes into effect early in October, the amount collected by the time the stamp tax terminates will amount to about $130,000,000. Taking into account the location of the veto power, those representing the people and opposed to this tax can not force its repeal before some time after March 4, 1917, when the collections will have amounted to $120,000,000 more, or a quarter of a billion in all.

The eminent author of the Underwood law endeavored to defend it as a revenue producer save for the loss of customs duties incident to the European war. He forecasted the customs income for the first year at $267,000,000, or $22,250,000 per month. The receipts from customs fell short of this average in November, December, February, April, and May following passage of the tariff act. The average falling off for August and September from that average was only $3,921,376 per month; and if this war continued with unabated fury for a year and customs duties not tend to become normal the deficit from that source would be less than $48,000,000. This is not possible; $30,000,000 would more probably fairly meet it. Now, the Underwood law will remain in operation, and even though it should fall short $30,000,000 on customs and $40,000,000 on income tax next year, as it probably will, there is no occasion for wresting a quarter of a billion taxes out of the people. In this appears the real reason why all amendment to the bill is forbidden by the rule under which its consideration is being conducted. An amendment to limit the operation of this law to six months or a little longer would have probably carried in the House if the Members had been free to vote on it. But the large purpose of the majority is to create a large fund to tempt large and extravagant appropriations.

The Underwood law is a failure, first, in its primary purpose as a revenue producer, as confessed in the presentation of this bill within a year after its passage. No great law should be constructed for simply "summer skies and sunshine"; it should be constructed to meet emergencies as well as ordinary demands.

It fails in its two principal features—first, customs duty; second, income tax.

As a revenue producer from customs, it fails largely because of its fundamental injustice and discrimination against the producers of America. Had farm products not been placed upon the free list, or rates so radically reduced, the revenue arising from their importation would have more than made up for all the probable loss that may arise by reason of the vast war zone of Europe. Farm products for the last year have been coming in from Australia, Canada, and South America, which are not embraced in the war zone. The importations for the first 10 months of the Underwood tariff law of 27 leading farm products amounted to $143,766,341, as opposed to $53,610,961 worth in the corresponding period under the former law. The loss of revenue for that period, due to the removal and reduction of rates of the Underwood law, amounted to $40,183,580.04. Assuming that the last 2 months of the first year of the present law will average with the other 10 months, the toal loss of revenue on these 27 articles will be $48,540,296.06. That this will really amount to more than $50,000,000 I am convinced, because I have just received the figures for August, and while the increase for 10 months amounted to only 168 per cent up to the month of August, 1914, the increase of these 27 articles over the August before amounted to 190 per cent. The amount of imports of these 27 articles for the month of August, 1913, was $4,246,659, while for August, 1914, it was $12,354,801. The following is a list of the losses of revenue upon each of these 27 articles for the first 10 months under the present tariff law:

	Loss of revenue.
Horses	$301,756.95
Cattle	4,678,137.45
Sheep	69,448.43
Other animals, including poultry	69,961.29
Corn	2,041,161.15
Oats	2,026,988.64
Wheat	302,489.40
Hay	305,006.00
Beef and veal	2,856,859.21
Mutton and lamb	207,498.97
Pork	159,271.57
Bacon and ham	143,353.24
Prepared meats	534,039.50
Bread and biscuits	95,573.25
Milk and cream	148,919.85
Butter and substitutes	268,980.88
Cheese and substitutes	1,060,301.74
Eggs	301,405.20
Beans	296,072.20
Onions	182,479.60
Peas	169,218.20
Potatoes	415,572.75
All other vegetables	146,472.30
Wool	23,402,612.27
Total for first 10 months	40,183,580.04

It will be seen by this that had the farmers of this country not been discriminated against there need be but little deficit in the Treasury, although the extravagant expenditures practiced by this Congress should be insisted upon and carried through.

When the President asked for $100,000,000 there was pending, with good prospect of passage, a rivers and harbors bill appropriating fifty-three millions. A determined minority of the Senate has since caused that to be cut down to twenty millions, thereby saving more than the reasonably expected deficit in customs receipts for the 12 months following the beginning of the war. There is a ship-purchasing bill, involving $30,000,000.

The present terms of that bill provide the amount to be raised by bond issue; but the President's message clearly shows that the bond issue would not be available at this time. Then, too, the Congress would probably do with this as it did with the Alaska bill. There it was proposed to raise the amount of money by the issuance of bonds, but when it came to the test Congress refused to issue bonds, and simply arranged for the payment out of the Treasury. Undoubtedly that would be the course followed in the ship-buying project. Then there is the project for paying Colombia $25,000,000 for some vague and shadowy claim which that country is asserting, which would make up, in all, $88,000,000. It would be very easy, by reasonable economy, to make up the additional $12,000,000 and dispense with any necessity of this war-revenue bill.

Everybody in the United States with a due sense of our conditions for the last 16 months has been economizing. Even here in Washington more Members and Senators are dining at Childs's and fewer at the New Willard than have been for two decades.

The following is an editorial from the Beatrice Sun, the leading Democrtic paper of the congressional district which I represent:

Our beloved country is at peace with the world, yet it is proposed to impose a war tax upon our people, and, what is worse, special taxes upon business, which has not been as brisk as we could wish. Before the Government is fully committed to that policy for increasing its income, why not consider doing something to expenditures to make them come down to speaking terms with income?

In our individual affairs, when income is curtailed by bad crops, slow business, sickness, fire, storm, or any cause whatever, we try to get along without some of the things we would have bought had the income been unimpaired. The summer vacation is shortened or cut out altogether. The straw hat that saw its best days a year ago is made to serve. The old automobile is polished up and used another season instead of being traded in on the newest creation. When his income slacks up the prudent man tries to put the brakes on his expenditures.

The gentlemen with whom we have intrusted the running of our Government do not seem to apply the same principles to the public's affairs that they would apply to their own. Why not try to make appropriations meet income, part way at least, instead of imposing burdensome taxes upon the people and upon business in peaceful times in order to get money for Government luxuries? To a man up a tree it looks as though some economies might be effected "and still the White House carpet not be threadbare."

The farmers, business men, and laborers of the United States are not prepared to accept and are making their protest felt against the levying of war taxes in time of peace when the Treasury can be replenished by the exercise of the reasonable economy which the citizens of the United States are now observing. But the great reason for levying this war tax in time of peace is not to replenish the Treasury, but to enable the banks to keep the $75,000,000 now on deposit. Chairman UNDERWOOD said this money was deposited to the extent of $60,000,000 in the banks at the time his party came into power, and his party's administration has increased that amount to $75,000,000. This is a remarkable utterance in the light of the following plank in the Baltimore platform:

We condemn the present methods of depositing Government funds in a few favored banks, largely situated in or controlled by Wall Street, in return for political favors, and we pledge our party to provide by law for their deposit by competitive bidding in the banking institutions of the country, National and State, without discrimination as to locality, upon approved securities subject to call by the Government.

Even as this debate proceeds the Secretary of the Treasury is charging many of the banks, some of which are holding this Government money, with unduly hoarding their funds and charging an exorbitant rate of interest to their borrowers for what they had let out.

The farmers and business men do not want to pay through the price of gasoline, through the sum paid when they sign a note, execute a mortgage, or make any conveyance this money just to enable the banks in the East and South to hoard Government funds for which they pay 2 per cent interest and loan it out at from 6 to 10 per cent.

Neither do bankers, who obtain no advantage whatever from these deposits, nor other business men selected by this bill to bear special burdens of tax, feel that they are being properly treated by the taxing power of this Government in being required to pay a war tax in time of peace in order to raise money to pay the running expenses of the Government, while the Government has deposited, payable upon demand, $75,000,000 in certain banks. I might say in passing that not a dollar of this Government money is deposited in the congressional district I represent, and it has one of the largest crops in its history to move.

Of course, the second and most important failure of the Underwood tariff law is its disastrous effect upon business. The nonemployment of labor, the inactivity of factories, the stagnation of business generally, and the increasing purchase of foreign-produced articles have changed the course of the golden current which has heretofore been running into this country and sent it rushing to Europe. The balance of trade, beginning with April and ending with July, this year has been against us, in the sum of $20,500,000. For 13 months ending July 31, 1914, imports have increased $102,084,509 over the corresponding period, while the exports have fallen off in the sum of $108,166,147—a loss to us in our trade relations, so far as production of money is concerned, of $210,250,656. If that amount of money, which should have been kept in this country, were retained here and in the banks or elsewhere, there would not be so great a stringency as we have been suffering from for several months past entirely independent of the war.

I am not convinced that the drawing of two to four million dollars per month out of the banks for use by the Government—knowing that a very large portion of it would be returned to some of these banks—would seriously hamper any of them. And I believe that if this legislation is passed as it is being attempted to be passed—upon the basis that it would disturb the banks to have the Government draw its own money from them for its own purpose—it would cause the banks to lose more money from other depositors than all the Government might see fit to draw.

This bill should be defeated because it can only be necessary if unnecessary expenditures are made. Unnecessary expenditures need not be made if the Government will economize, as its citizens are doing. It is unnecessary and unwise to create a fund which at the end of this foreign war condition will leave from $150,000,000 to $250,000,000 in the Treasury to be exploited in all kinds of unwise, improvident, unsound, and unnecessary governmental expenditures. [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON].

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the passage of this bill. I shall do so with some reluctance. I would like to avoid, if possible, the casting of a vote that even had the appearance of being cast for political reasons. But, although a vote against this bill in the face of the reasons that are advanced for its passage may seem to some to be one inspired by a desire to play politics, I assure the House, and particularly those on the majority side, that I am not opposing the bill for any such reasons. I would support the administration in this matter without the slightest hesitation and vote for the imposing of further taxes if I was convinced that any such step was necessary at this time or that it was going to be necessary in the near future.

In proof of these statements I think I have but to point to the fact that I supported the President in the Panama tolls matter in the face of the fiercest kind of opposition, and I also voted in favor of the resolution upholding his course with regard to Mexico. But I am utterly unable to see the necessity of this bill now. It might be necessary to take such a step as this in time, and if that time came I would support such a measure as this, but until it does come I shall oppose it.

Mr. Speaker, the worst thing about this bill is the special rule by means of which it is being jammed through this House. Such a rule as this makes a joke out of representative government. It is without the slightest excuse or justification for existence and is the most outrageous and disgraceful of all such rules that the majority has brought into this House.

In the report filed on the war-tax bill by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means they tell us that it is expected that the taxes it proposes will amount in the first year it is in force to $105,000,000. The special rule forced through the Committee on Rules and then forced through the House by the majority here under which we are considering this bill provides for seven hours' general debate, at the conclusion of which, the rule provides, "the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion, except on a motion to recommit." In other words, we are asked to tax the people of this country $105,000,000 in the next 12 months by placing additional taxes on the commodities and documents specified in this bill with a limit of seven hours placed upon its consideration and discussion. And we must take this bill with its terms just as they are or leave it, for under the terms of this special rule there is not only no hope of having the House adopt any amendment, but under the rule we are denied the right to even offer an amendment. What a farce such a proceeding is! Who is representing the people of the 435 congressional districts of this Nation in the making of this legislation so far as this House is concerned?

The majority members of the Ways and Means Committee are representing them, or, when you get right down to bedrock, their sole representative here is our genial and able friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. He wrote this bill, and without the change of a letter, except as I shall note in a moment, it has been recommended by the committee and will be passed by the House.

What were the Members of this House sent here for? To turn over all their powers and duties and rights as legislators to the leader of the majority, whoever he might be? Not at all. But that is the practical result of the adoption of this special rule. Why, by means of the force and power that goes with greater numbers, compel Members of this House to take or leave a bill as one man chooses to offer it? Why jam a gag rule through the committee and the House, which refuses a full and free discussion of this measure, first, as to its necessity as a whole, and, second, as to the wisdom or need of its specific provisions?

All the time consumed on debate of any measure under a rule like this one is a joke. To be logical, those who believe in putting legislation through in this way should have their rule provide for no debate at all. The result would be the same. But why do they not carry their theory to its logical end and put their legislation through without uselessly taking up even so brief a time as seven hours in debate that can not possibly affect the legislation in question? To fool the people, to give the proceeding the appearance, at least, of legislative procedure. To one looking on from the outside the use of such machinery as this to get a bill through the House would seem to mean that all the wisdom of the House resides in the minds of the majority members of the committee reporting the bill. But certainly the last word has not been spoken, either on the wisdom or the correctness of the detail of legislation, when the committee is through. The necessity of two corrections in the bill has been discovered since the bill was reported on Tuesday. Doubtless there are other changes that should be made and that could and would be suggested by the membership of this House but for this gag rule. And the majority makes this rule so drastic that it takes away from the House even the right to vote on the two changes that have been found to be necessary, for the rule provides that the two amendments making these changes shall, upon the adoption of the rule, "be considered as offered and agreed to." This is gag rule run mad.

I confess that when I come to consider and determine my vote on a bill, under the circumstances created by such a rule as this, I do so with something akin to a prejudice against the bill itself. I have made every effort, however, not to permit my disgust for the rule to interfere with my conclusions upon the bill.

Now, why are we asked to provide for this additional taxation at this time? Because during the month of August there was, as compared with the corresponding month of last year, a falling off of $10,629,538 in the revenues collected from customs, and we are told that a continuation of this decrease in the same proportion throughout the current fiscal year would probably mean a loss of customs revenues of from sixty to one hundred million dollars.

As I have considered that reason which has been advanced by the majority for this proposed legislation, two things have occurred to me. The first is this: The supposition that the falling off in revenues collected from customs during the month of August will or may continue throughout the present fiscal year is a pure guess, and I do not believe we ought to base a revenue bill calling for a hundred millions in additional taxes on a guess. It is admitted that the Treasury is in no need of these additional taxes to meet obligations now, but we are urged to avoid future embarrassment by providing for these additional revenues at this time. If the consideration of this legislation were postponed until the coming short term of Congress to be held this winter, we would then be able to tell much more accurately what the falling off in customs revenues would be for this fiscal year, because we would then know whether the falling off for August, the first month of the disturbance in Europe, was continuing about the same as it showed for that month or was increasing or decreasing. In other words, it seems to me that the figures for the first 30 days of the war are too uncertain on which to base additional revenue legislation, and before passing such legislation we might better wait until we are in a position to frame it and pass it in the light of the falling off in customs revenues which actually occur in the first three or four months of the war. If our Treasury did not enjoy its present balance on the right side of the books, the case might be different. But with a general fund balance in the Treasury amounting to about $119,000,000, it seems to me we can afford to wait before passing such a bill as this, at least until we have more than one month's experience with the results of the disturbance in Europe on our customs receipts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD told us yesterday that if the party in power kept silent on this question now and after the elections were over brought in such a bill as this the charge would be made that they had deliberately attempted to deceive the people and had avoided meeting the issue until after the election. I believe he is right about that. But any such result could easily be avoided by a frank statement issued by some official in authority to the effect that if the falling off in our revenues continued for several months as it had during the first month or two months of the war it would be necessary to provide for additional revenues, but that the passing of such legislation would not be taken up until after the first of the year, so that an opportunity might be given to determine as definitely as possible, first, whether conditions due to the war were going to so affect our revenues as to make such a measure necessary, and, second, if it did prove to be necessary, just how much further revenue was going to be needed. If the position of the party in power were thus clearly made known, and legislation did prove to be necessary later, no charge of attempting to deceive for campaign purposes could successfully be made.

Another thing that I would call attention to is this: We are asked to provide for additional revenue to the extent of a hundred million dollars on the ground of a ten-million-dollar falling off in customs revenues for the month of August compared with August, 1913. A falling off in the customs revenues to that extent does not warrant the levying of these additional taxes, it seems to me. The best friends of the Underwood tariff bill admitted that it would result in a falling off in customs revenues, and, of course, it did. This has nothing at all to do with merits or demerits of the present tariff law, and I do not wish to be understood as defending the old law. What I mean is that the present law, because of its lower duties, must necessarily have resulted in a falling off in customs duties. The party in power provided for that very result and put the income-tax law on the statute books so as to provide the Government with revenues to the extent of the falling off that was going to result from the lower duties provided in the new tariff law.

Now, if we are going to pass a bill at this time providing additional revenue for the Government based on the falling off in revenues, we should determine the amount of additional revenue called for in this bill, not on the falling off in customs revenues, but on the falling off, if there is any, in the total revenues. It is just as unreasonable to base the amount of additional tax to be levied by this bill on the falling off in customs revenues as it would be to argue that there could not possibly be any reason for any additional tax because of the increase in income tax collected in any given month this year over the corresponding month last year.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a copy of the daily statement of the United States Treasury giving the figures up to the close of business on Wednesday of this week, September 23. That statement shows the following facts with reference to the general fund balance: The total receipts of the Government, including customs, internal revenue, and miscellaneous, for the month of September up to and including the 23d were $42,319,728.53. The total receipts for the same period last year amounted to $44,050,174.72. This means a falling off in the total receipts of the Government for this period amounting to $1,730,446.19. The falling off in the total receipts for August of this year, as compared with August of last year, amounted to $10,527,208.86. In other words, present indications seem to point to the fact that the falling off in the total revenues, amounting in August to about ten million and a half, is going to amount to less than two million and a half for the present month.

In figuring up the falling off in revenues from all sources for any given month another fact must be taken into consideration. Under the income-tax law practically all the revenue from that source comes into the Treasury during May and June, and therefore we ought to spread the revenue from this source over the entire year in estimating a falling off in revenue for any one month as compared with the same month last year. If we pursue that course in estimating the falling off in revenues from all sources for August, that falling off will amount to only seven million and a half, for in spreading over the revenues from the income tax we would have to credit some $3,000,000 for each month. When we take this item into consideration in determining the condition of the revenues during the present month, instead of there being a falling off in revenues from all sources during September, as compared with this month last year, we will actually be running ahead about half a million dollars.

These facts prove to my mind that Congress is not justified in passing this bill levying more taxes and raising additional revenue, based on the supposition that the $10,000,000 falling off in the revenues that occurred in August is going to continue throughout the fiscal year. But even assuming a loss in revenue for the current year to the extent of a hundred million dollars, which I have shown will probably not be the case, I still contend that this measure is not necessary at this time. The majority tells us in their report on this bill that this loss of revenue will cause a serious deficit in our Treasury balance "unless replaced by taxes from some other source." That is not the only alternative open to us.

Retrenchments and economies can be made and practiced which will accomplish the same result. A good start has been made in reducing the appropriations made in connection with the rivers and harbors bill by reducing them from $53,000,000 to $20,000,000, provided they are kept there. It would be well to keep both eyes on that bill, by the way. It would be a fine spectacle if the Senate amendment to that bill should be disagreed to here and the bill sent to conference, there to slumber until after the elections and after additional revenues had been assured by the passage of this bill, and then during the short session be returned by the conference committee in its original form or anything like its original form.

Another step in the right direction can be made by not passing the so-called shipping bill. Aside from the fact that there are good reasons why the Government should not take any such course as is suggested by the terms of that bill, particularly at this time, there is the additional reason for not passing it, that it can not be afforded. If that bill is not passed, the Government Treasury will be spared an expenditure of $40,000,000.

I believe a public-buildings bill has been contemplated for the session of this Congress to be held next winter. How many millions that bill would carry no one can tell. I presume forty millions would not be far out of the way. Most, if not all, of that should be eliminated at this time. If the purchase of no new building sites is authorized and the construction of no new buildings is provided for by this Congress, but such a bill confined to provisions for continuing contracts on projects now in course of construction, millions of dollars can be saved.

All the appropriation bills for the present fiscal year have been passed except the rivers and harbors bill. We were told yesterday that, disregarding that bill and the corresponding bill for last year, the total appropriations made for the current fiscal year exceed those made for last year by about $...1,000,000, and that statement has not been denied. Although Congress has passed the bills making these appropriations, there is no law that I know of that compels the different departments to spend all the money that has been appropriated. Even the proponents of these large appropriations would have pared them down millions of dollars if they could have looked into the future. Events that were in the future when the appropriations were made are now conditions of the present. Economies necessitated by these conditions can be practiced by the departments notwithstanding the appropriations. If that course is taken, the condition of our Treasury is not such as to need the increased revenues contemplated by the taxes proposed in this bill.

We are told that we have a general fund balance in the Treasury amounting to about $119,000,000, of which $75,000,000 is on deposit in the national banks on call. It is intimated that the withdrawal of these funds might disturb business. Doubtless it would if the banks were called on to return all these millions to the Treasury at once. But no such course as that is necessary. If this money was withdrawn from the banks and returned to the Treasury gradually, business would not be disturbed and the end sought would be reached, for the money would be available for Government use if needed. Certainly there is no justification for the raising of additional revenue by taxation for the purpose of maintaining deposits in national banks.

Mr. Speaker, these are the reasons why it seems to me the passage of such a bill as this, proposing the raising of $105,000,000 in additional revenue through the taxes specified in the bill, is not required at this time. As I said in the beginning, solely for the reason that I believe it is unnecessary, I shall vote against this measure.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE.]

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, the war measure now being considered is unjustified by existing conditions and unnecessary at the present time.

While customs have declined under the Underwood tariff law, the returns from internal revenue are heavy.

Banks have been allowed to issue emergency currency and, as shown by recent report of the comptroller, are in good condition.

The burden of taxation will fall heavily on our people, already oppressed by change in our system of raising revenue.

Under the Underwood bill nearly everyone in the district I have the honor to represent is taxed.

The farmer will have to pay his full share of the burden. The oil refiner having outstanding contracts on the gasoline he produces will have to continue his operations at a loss. The banker is not exempt. The manufacturer who ships his products will have to pay his part. The man who signs a note or makes a deed or executes a mortgage or takes out life insurance or protects his property with fire insurance is taxed. Everybody is taxed. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the present Congress has been the most extravagant that has ever convened in Washington. Its appropriations exceed by more than a hundred millions any of its Republican predecessors.

By practicing economy we can easily meet the situation created by the war in Europe. Everybody now is practicing economy. Why not the Government?

It is impossible to consider this measure without being reminded that during the campaign of 1912 capital was rejoicing in its productiveness, work was plenty, labor was enjoying the right to sell its services at prices which brought happiness and comfort to all of our homes.

Under Republican rule we as a Nation had witnessed a long period of prosperity, with a steady rise of compensation for every service, whether of brain or muscle.

So securely established seemed our prosperity that many of our citizens thought it beyond the reach of politics, something to be calculated upon with certainty, and something beyond the reach of tariff changes. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party met in convention at Baltimore and adopted a platform. It told the country just what it would do if it had a chance. The election followed and a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate and a Democratic Executive were elected. A free-trade tariff bill was passed, and to-day we are engaged in passing measures that will still further place a burden on the American people. But the change that was so much sought for two years ago has not produced the great benefits to humanity that were so much desired. The cost of living instead of being lowered has reached a higher plane. With the large shipments of farmers' products from Argentina, Canada, and Australia, the farmer finds that his ever-increasing load of indebtedness has not been reduced by reason of the change in party administration. If by virtue of Europe's producing ability being disturbed by the war new demands for foodstuffs will temporarily increase the price of our farmers' goods, it will nevertheless not lessen the burdens laid upon him by additional taxes. Many of our workshops are idle, and the honest and willing laboring men are seeking employment. Merchants suffer because consumers have no money. When we turn the searchlight of public opinion upon our present conditions the American people see things more clearly and now begin to realize that the program of the party in power as it relates to the interests of our people has not been satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker, going back over the history of our country for the last quarter of a century, and after carefully considering the last Democratic administration and comparing it with the present one, we see the deadly parallel and are irresistibly drawn to the conclusion that the paramount issue of this campaign is the tariff.

It will play the determining part in the next campaign for President. Shall the policy of protection, under which the country has so greatly prospered, be continued, or shall we continue under the Underwood tariff, with all of its demoralizing conditions, or shall a radically different policy be inaugurated? The Republican Party is ready with its answer. There is no uncertainty about its position on the tariff. It believes that to abandon the protective policy would be to inflict a serious blow upon American industries. It believes that the American people should supply the wants of America, and in order to accomplish this we must assure the American people of American markets. "Made in America" should be our slogan, inspiring, unifying, and fundamental. Let us carry this banner at the head of our columns.

Our products should be sold in the best markets of the world, American markets; sold where the people have the most money, right here in the United States of America; sold where the laboring man is best paid, best fed, best clothed, and best educated in all the world. Instead of this bill we need a protective-tariff law which will turn the balance of trade in our favor. So, then, it becomes our duty at once to lay the foundation for the victory of 1916 and to establish the principles and practices of protection. Depression will then have its last day. I am confident if the people will elect a Republican majority in the House this fall the Republican Party in 1916 will be returned to the control of national affairs. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the President delivered his "war" tax message to Congress on September 4. It is now September 25. Twenty days have passed, not in open debate, not in the open at all, but in private meetings of party leaders behind closed doors, in secret committee conferences, and a secret party caucus. And now, after all these long days of subterranean scheming, this bill emerges, protected by a caucus rule which limits debate and prevents amendment. It is not possible to consider the measure and debate its merits. Barely time is allowed the minority to voice its protest. No opportunity is given to amend the terms of the bill, to strike out some of its items, or to substitute others. The bill must be taken as it is, and the administration demands that it be passed without change, and at once.

The present Democratic House was elected partly as a protest against what was denominated the tyrannous Cannon rules and upon a promise that there should be free debate and a fair chance to consider on its merits every bill proposed. Instead of this, White House dictation and the caucus have instituted a reign of party tyranny that makes the Cannon régime pale into insignificance. This bill can not be considered under this rule on its merits, and the rule was expressly designed to accomplish that result. The only chance it has of real consideration will be in the Senate, where gag rules can not be applied. But the country is entitled to have measures affecting so vitally its interests considered by its Representatives, fresh from the people and understanding their condition and desires. They will not approve the shackling of their Representatives, and this bill will not the more commend itself to their favor when they understand the manner in which its passage was secured.

NATURE OF THE TAX.

This bill proposes to levy an extraordinary tax of $105,000,000 annually, distributed as follows: On beer and other fermented liquors, $32,500,000; on domestic wines, $6,000,000; on gasoline, $20,000,000; on bankers, brokers, amusement places, and so forth, $10,000,000; on manufacturers and dealers in tobacco and cigars, $5,000,000; on telephone and telegraph messages, $1,500,000; stamp taxes upon deeds, mortgages, bonds, notes, agreements, bills of lading, and so forth, $30,000,000.

The estimate on the amount which will be derived from gasoline is admittedly too low. It will be more likely $30,000,000 than $20,000,000. And the amount paid as a tax will not measure the amount paid on its account by the consumer. Iowa uses 75,000,000 gallons of gasoline annually, and the consumption is rapidly increasing. Its use is not confined to automobiles. It is used by farmers and mechanics all over the State in their stationary engines, and by the housewives in their kitchens. It is purchased for some purpose by nearly every family and is used in a multitude of ways. The direct tax paid on this 75,000,000 gallons will be $1,500,000 annually. But the tax is paid by the producer, and the jobber will add one-half cent to his price, the retailer one-half cent to his, and the consumer will pay at least 3 cents more per gallon on account of the tax. This will mean for Iowa alone an annual contribution of $2,250,000 to the Democratic "war" tax on gasoline alone.

REASONS GIVEN FOR ITS INFLICTION.

The President's advisers, by inducing him to recommend and force through this so-called "war" tax, have subjected him to a threefold attack: First, the Secretary of the Treasury and the sponsors of the new banking and currency scheme have been afraid to put their plan in operation unless they can force the people to contribute to the Treasury so that its resources and surplus may be piled mountain high as a refuge in case of a coming financial storm; second, the author of the Underwood tariff law and his party associates and the authors of the income-tax law, seeing the utter failure of those laws as revenue producers, seize upon the European war as an excuse for a forced assessment on the American people to make good their default; third, the managers of the Democratic Party in the House and Senate, realizing the record of reckless extravagance which their party has made in this Congress, and realizing also that more money must be obtained if they do not bankrupt the Government by their profligacy, inflict this tax to pay for their extravagance.

CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

The contention that there is justification in the present condition of the Treasury for the imposition of a "war" tax is not justified. There is no necessity for any action at present, so far as the condition of the Treasury is concerned. The Government is not by any means insolvent. There is no deficit in sight. Even under the most pessimistic view we can safely run for months without any change in our laws. We are still operating the finances of the Government under Republican laws. When the Republicans turned over the Government to the Democrats on March 4, 1913, there was a net balance in the general fund of the Treasury of $149,000,000. It is true the Democrats have reduced this surplus until it is now but $119,000,000, but it is still a fairly good balance.

We had gold coin and bullion in the Treasury September 15, 1914, $1,213,000,000. It is true that we had depleted our fund of gold by $100,000,000 during June and July, for we were compelled to ship it abroad to pay the deficit on our adverse balance of trade. But we still have by far the largest gold reserve of any nation in the world. Although the European nations have been accumulating gold for months in anticipation of the war, we have six times as much as Germany, four times that of Great Britain, and twice that of France or Russia.

THE BANKS.

The President realizes this, for in his message to Congress he says:

> The Treasury itself could get along for a considerable period, no doubt, without immediate resort to new sources of taxation. But at what cost to the business of the community? Approximately $75,000,000, a large part of the present Treasury balance, is now on deposit with national banks distributed throughout the country. It is deposited, of course, on call. I need not point out to you what the probable consequences of inconvenience and distress and confusion would be if the diminishing income of the Treasury should make it necessary rapidly to withdraw these deposits.

According to the President's statement, it is not because the Government does not have the money to meet its needs, at least for a considerable time, but because a large part of it is deposited in the banks, and it would "inconvenience" them to withdraw it.

A singular justification for this imposition of a "war" tax on the people! This money was deposited by the Government in the banks, not for them to keep and consider their own, but only as a temporary deposit—"on call," as the President says, until the Government should need to use it. The Government now needs to use it. Why should it not do so?

The President says it would "inconvenience" the banks. No doubt that is true. The banks pay but 2 per cent interest on these Government deposits and loan them doubtless at 8. To the extent of their profit of 6 per cent they would be "inconvenienced." But is an inconvenience to banks who took the Government funds subject to call justification for a "war" tax that will injure and punish every man, woman, and child in the United States? Is the loss of the profits to the banks on these deposits of more consequence to the administration than the laying of $105,000,000 of taxation upon the people of the country?

But the President says that to "rapidly withdraw these deposits" would not only occasion "inconvenience," but also "distress and confusion" to the banks.

In the first place, it may be said that there is no necessity to withdraw the Government funds "rapidly" from the banks. The President estimates the deficit for the fiscal year, which it is necessary to make up by this proposed "war" tax, at $100,000,000. That is but $8,000,000 per month. It would be necessary to withdraw but $8,000,000 per month of the Government's money from the banks, and this amount would supply the expected deficit for nine months. That to do so would bring "distress and confusion" to the banks is not reasonable to suppose.

An examination as to the present condition of the banks shows that never in the history of the Nation were they as strong as now. Two causes have contributed to this: First, the widespread business depression occasioned, as we believe, by the free-trade policy of the administration has caused the banks to get ready for the regular Democratic panic which inevitably follows such legislation. The banks have therefore increased their resources to stand the storm when it should come. Second, the passage by the administration of a new banking and currency law which entirely changes our present system, and, indeed, revolutionizes our whole financial system, has caused the banks, in apprehension as to the anticipated consequences, to pile up their reserves mountain high, so as to be able to protect themselves against the unknown consequences of this theoretical and experimental legislation.

To such an extent has this been carried as to incur the angry denunciation of the Secretary of the Treasury. On the very day we commenced consideration of this bill he gave out a public statement saying that "there was an extraordinary hoarding of money by banks throughout the country and a piling up of resources without occasion." The legal requirements are but 15 per cent, but the Secretary gave instances where they had been increased to over 70 per cent. The Secretary severely censures these banks, publishes a list of them, and declares that no additional favors shall be given them.

And yet we are told that it is necessary to tax the Nation $105,000,000 rather than take out the money of the Government from banks which are unnecessarily piling up their reserves and hoarding their money.

The increases in the national banks within a year have been nothing less than marvelous. From June 4, 1913, to June 4, 1914, they increased their store of specie, mostly gold, $67,000,000; they increased their surplus and undivided profits $2,774,000; they increased their individual deposits $315,000,000, their Government deposits $15,000,000, and their postal savings deposits $5,000,000; they increased their total resources $445,000,000.

Their deposits June 30, 1914, amounted to $6,286,000,000. To withdraw from this vast sum $8,000,000 per month would hardly make a noticeable diminution. It would be only about one-hundredth part of 1 per cent.

That such withdrawal would in any perceptible degree impair the general business interests of the country is ridiculous when it is considered that besides the amount of deposits in national banks already stated there is on deposit in State, private, and savings banks and loan and trust companies $11,520,000,000, so that the total amount of money now on deposit in the banks of the country is $17,222,000,000.

It appears clear that it will not occasion "distress and confusion" to the banks for the Government to gradually withdraw and use as it may need its deposits. The American people will never justify the imposition of a "war" tax merely because the banks would prefer to keep the funds which the Government has deposited with them subject "to call" and because it would "inconvenience" them to allow the Government to withdraw and use its own funds when it needs them.

EFFECT OF THE DEMOCRATIC TARIFF.

The President, in his message to Congress, gives as his only reason for asking that Congress impose this extraordinary "war" tax upon the people that on account of the European war imports are falling off, with a consequent loss in revenue, and that if the falling off continues there will not be enough money to run the Government through the year. He says that—

During the month of August there was, compared with the corresponding month of last year, a falling off of $10,629,538 in the revenues collected from customs.

If continued, he says, this will mean a loss in the year's revenue of $100,000,000. Then at once he adds:

I need not tell you to what this falling off is due. It is due in chief part not to the reductions recently made in the customs duties, but to the great decrease in importations, and that is due to the extraordinary extent of the industrial area affected by the present war in Europe.

It would be inferred, of course, from this statement that there had been no lessening of revenue because of lowered duties, but that suddenly the European war came and at once—in one month—our revenues fell off $10,000,000. In fact, for every month since the Democratic tariff has been operative the revenues have fallen off as compared with the corresponding month a year ago. The President is quick to call attention to the diminished revenues for August, the first month of the war, and to attribute the loss not to the Democratic tariff but to the war. But why did he not tell the country of the diminished revenues for July, when there was no European war and when the excess of our imports over our exports was over $8,000,000, and of June, when the balance against us was $650,000, and of May, when the balance against us was over $2,000,000, and of April, when the balance against us was $11,000,000?

As a matter of fact, during all these months and before the European war we had increased imports but diminished revenues.

Our imports for the first seven months of the present year up to the 1st of August, when the European war broke out, amounted to $1,137,000,000. Our imports for the corresponding seven months last year under a Republican tariff were but $1,016,000,000. This shows an increase in the imports of $121,000,000 for this year. Now, mark the difference in revenue. Instead of a proportionate increase in revenue there was a large decrease. The duties collected last year were $196,000,000, while the duties collected this year were but $152,000,000—a loss of $44,000,000 in revenue for the first seven months of this year under the Democratic tariff. In other words, with $121,000,000 more imports we had $44,000,000 less revenue.

Why do our Democratic friends conceal these facts? Why is not the truth told regarding the "tariff for revenue" law?

During these seven months American products and American labor were displaced by foreign products and foreign labor to the extent of $121,000,000, while during the same period the Government lost $44,000,000 in revenue.

But that does not measure the loss to the Nation, for during the same period our exports fell off over $126,000,000. In seven months the loss to American producers and American labor was over $247,000,000. And all this was before any European war was thought of in America.

And what have been the compensating advantages of this immense sacrifice of American interests and Government revenue? None whatever. The cost of living has not decreased. No legitimate American industry has been benefited. On the contrary, factories have closed, business has stagnated, all lines of trade and commerce are depressed or ruined. Over a million workingmen with steady employment at American wages have been thrown out; 242,000 freight cars that should be busy moving the crops are idle. These conditions are not the result of the European war, they existed before the war. They are the direct result of the Democratic tariff law.

It should surprise no one that such results follow such policies. They always have. The most recent previous Democratic experiment in tariff reform brought about the same conditions. In that instance the Cleveland administration was compelled to issue bonds to carry on the ordinary expenses of the Government in a time of world-wide peace and following an era of Republican prosperity such as the country had never known before.

Now, the shadow of that humiliation hangs so heavily that the Democrats do not dare resort to the old expedient. Instead, they propose a "war" tax. In a time when the Nation is at peace with all the world a "war" tax is found necessary. It would have been better if they had again adopted the old plan. That would have forced a final consideration of the real difficulty, and might have led to a real remedy.

DEMOCRATIC FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT.

The inability of the Democratic leaders to comprehend questions of revenue and finance is further shown with regard to the income tax. They estimated that it would yield a revenue of from $70,000,000 to $100,000,000. Instead, it has produced but $31,000,000. The collection this last year was only for 10 months, but it is not expected the receipts for the present year will exceed that amount. There are not many flourishing incomes nowadays.

Their utter lack of method is shown in their delay in passing the necessary supply bills. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has stated, the fiscal year of the Government begins July 1 of each year. The appropriation bills for each year should all be passed before July 1, for expenditures commence then. For 14 years, from March 4, 1897, to March 4, 1911, the Republicans controlled both branches of Congress. Every appropriation bill was passed before July 1, although there are 13 regular appropriation bills to prepare and pass each year.

How different is the Democratic record! During their first year nine of the appropriation bills were not passed for nearly two months after July 1. The Government was carried on by joint resolutions continuing the appropriations provided by a Republican Congress. In their second year the great sundry civil bill was not passed at all, and that was one of the reasons President Wilson gave for calling a new session of Congress. This year four of the great appropriation bills were not passed until weeks after the fiscal year had expired. It has been necessary during this Congress to pass three deficiency bills, and more are anticipated.

This is, however, but what might have been expected. It is but a repetition of the record under Cleveland. In his administration Congress was obliged to sit the whole year round to get the appropriation bills passed. This was not necessary for 20 years until last year and again this year. Twenty years ago, with 80 majority, the Democrats could not keep a quorum present to do business without docking the Members' pay. Now, with 141 majority, they are compelled to resort to the same device.

But the failure of the Democratic tariff and income tax as revenue producers do not justify the imposition of an extraordinary "war" tax. It is not a temporary ailment we are called upon to treat; it is a permanent disability. Nobody proposes a "war" tax as a permanent burden on the country. Nobody should support a temporary expedient for an inherent defect. Especially is this true when the demands of the present can be supplied from a surplus which Republican prudence and foresight has provided. The deficient revenues are due to two causes, neither of which can be remedied by a bill of this character. These causes are, first, theoretical and experimental legislation, based not on investigation and facts but upon political expediency and speculation; second, lavish expenditures and reckless extravagance. The remedy lies in getting back to well-tried principles and proceeding on safe lines.

Republicans are not in favor of excessive tariff rates. They only wish to so adjust them as to promote American industries and protect American labor. They do not oppose an income tax. They want to see the wealth of the country bear its fair share of the burdens of the Government. What is needed now is not the imposition of a "war" tax, but a rearrangement of our fiscal policy, so that sufficient revenue to run the Government, economically administered, can be obtained and our prosperity again established. And there is ample time to do that, even with diminished revenues. It will require nine months, if no further extravagances are indulged in, to exhaust the Republican surplus. In the meantime a frank and fair investigation of conditions can be made and something that will not be so burdensome secured to meet these conditions.

It is not claimed that the European war will not cause at least a temporary decrease in our revenues, but the Republican contention is that that decrease is not the principal cause of our falling revenues and our business depression. Of course we shall suffer because of the European war. The whole world will suffer. But with our present surplus in the Treasury we do not need to burden our people with an extraordinary "war" tax. We can take time to rearrange our fiscal policy and adjust it with reason and care to whatever changed conditions exist. Especially is it unwise to respond to this ill-judged hysterical demand for more taxes, to meet not the changed conditions resulting from the European war but from Democratic free-trade policies, experimental legislation, and reckless extravagance.

DEMOCRATIC EXTRAVAGANCE.

It is not only necessary to provide funds; it is necessary as well to keep our expenditures within our income. No matter how large our revenues, if our expenditures exceed them the Nation will become bankrupt. Not only has the dominant party failed to provide adequate revenue to meet the expenditures of the Government, but it has during the last three years made a record of extravagance in expenditures unparalleled in the country's history. With diminished revenues and increased expenditures, the administration cried for help. It is because of this and not the European war that this tax is proposed. While the surplus provided by Republican legislation is as yet unexpended, and there is no immediate emergency, the administration knows that a final deficit is inevitable and will finally be made known.

It is a remarkable omission that the President in his address to Congress, in which he sets forth the deplorable condition of the Treasury, calling for an extraordinary increase in taxation, says not a word about the necessity for economy in expenditures. Is it only necessary to consider how to fill the Treasury and not to care how it is emptied? And this omission is the more remarkable in view of the fact that his party associates in both House and Senate were seeking by every possible means to drive through Congress a river and harbor bill, the largest and most lavish ever proposed in the history of the country, besides other expenditures of millions entirely unnecessary, especially in view of our diminishing resources.

The President presents his demand for more money with the deepest regret, saying that he does it "to discharge a duty which I wish with all my heart I might have been spared." Yet with this sad duty in his mind, in the fulfillment of which he tells the country they must tax themselves $105,000,000, he knows his supporters are by every parliamentary practice endeavoring to force a "pork-barrel" bill through Congress which would add $53,000,000 to our expenses.

REPUBLICAN RECORD ON ECONOMY.

The appropriations of the last Congresses exclusively controlled by Republicans, namely, the Sixtieth and Sixty-first Congresses, were remarkable for the fact that there was little increase during the four years. The ordinary appropriations, excluding the permanent and post-office appropriations for the four years, were as follows:

For fiscal year ending 1909	$627,516,000
For fiscal year ending 1910	648,191,000
For fiscal year ending 1911	663,725,000
For fiscal year ending 1912	634,549,000

The total appropriations for the last year amounted to $1,026,682,000. The Democrats were quick to denounce it as a "billion-dollar Congress." Their national platform declared:

> We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of the recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic givernment and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

DEMOCRATIC RECORD.

Now mark the return to Democratic "simplicity and economy." The first Congress Democratic in both branches marks its advent by appropriating more than $100,000,000 in excess of the last Republican Congress, which the Democrats denounced for its "profligate waste" and "lavish appropriations."

The appropriations this year exceed their own record of last year by $31,803,000, and are by far the largest ever made by any Congress in the history of the Government. Besides, if the bills become law which have already passed the House, $68,469,000 will be added to the total.

With regard to the amount of the total appropriations this year, the showing is worse when it is considered that the amount for pensions is smaller by $11,150,000 than last year on account of the large mortality among the survivors of the Civil War and that the appropriation for the Panama Canal was $14,108,000 less than it was last year.

The increases made in appropriations by this Congress have not been confined to any particular line; they have been all along the line. It will be remembered how Republican Congresses were denounced for their lavish support of militarism; yet the Army appropriation this year is larger by $7,644,000 than any Republican Congress ever passed. It will also be remembered how the Republicans were accused of useless extravagance in their appropriations for the Navy, yet the Democrats appropriated $17,590,000 more for the Navy this year than any Republican Congress ever allowed.

Take the Alaskan bill. We appropriated $36,000,000 to build a railroad, or rather a system of railroads, in Alaska. It was entirely justifiable to build a line from the coast to the interior, tapping the principal coal fields. As I showed on the floor of the House during the debate, such a road could have been built for $20,000,000. A distinguished Alaskan is quoted as saying it could have been done for $10,000,000. Yet the majority would not listen to argument and voted down every amendment to curtail the expenditure. They were bound to spend $36,000,000, and they did.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

As originally introduced the river and harbor bill was large, altogether too large. It contained items which were not only unnecessary but ridiculous. On the floor of the House Republicans pointed out the defects and protested, but in vain. They would not listen to protest or appeal. The estimates submitted called for $34,266,000. The House, with its tremendous majority, forced an increase to $39,408,000, with authorizations for $4,061,000 additional in contracts, or a total of $43,469,000, or nearly $10,000,000 more than the original estimates. When it got to the Senate the Democratic committee increased this amount $10,000,000, so that the Democratic Party tried hard to pass a river and harbor bill carrying over $53,000,000. That it was cut down to $20,000,000 was not due to Democratic economy, but to Republican courage, persistence, and ability.

The action of the Democrats in trying to force through a large river and harbor appropriation this year is the more inexcusable when it is remembered that last year the Democrats passed a river and harbor bill carrying $41,000,000. From 1897 to 1904 the Republicans passed but two river and harbor bills—one for $16,000,000 and the other for $26,000,000. These were prosperous years, and certainly the need of river and harbor improvements was as great then as now. Last year the Democrats passed a bill carrying $41,000,000, and this year endeavored to pass another of $53,000,000, a total of $94,000,000 in two years. This is the Democratic record of "economy" as against the Republican record of $42,000,000 in seven years. Their action is still more inexcusable when it is known that there was on June 30 last an unexpended balance from previous appropriations of $45,338,000. Surely it would have been better to have waited until at least a larger part of the balance had been expended before forcing another appropriation.

It is a great service which the Republicans of the Senate have done the country in forcing down their appropriation from $53,000,000 to $20,000,000. It is known the Republicans of the House will endeavor to reduce the $20,000,000 to $5,000,000. I sincerely hope that may be done. If any appropriation at all is justified this year, $5,000,000 is ample to carry us over another year.

There has been no attempt or pretext of economy. Bill after bill has been passed, carrying appropriations which might have been omitted altogether, and in many cases where the appropriation was justified the amount was excessive.

And the program of lavish expenditures seemingly has only begun. The next bill to be considered is a proposition to expend $30,000,000 in buying ships to embark the Government in the shipping business.

Back of that lies the proposition to pay $25,000,000 indemnity to Colombia, and $3,000,000 for something in Nicaragua.

Where is the money to be had for these questionable projects? Is it deliberately proposed to provide for contemplated expenditures of this character by these "war" tax levies?

DEMOCRATIC TESTIMONY.

It is unnecessary for Republicans to prove the extravagance of this Democratic Congress and administration, for their own leaders admit it and fitly characterize it. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. FITZGERALD] has vainly endeavored to stem the flood of extravagance. In one of his appeals to his colleagues, delivered on the floor of the House, he said:

> In a few months I shall be called upon in the discharge of my official duties to review the record that this Democratic House shall have made in its authorization of the expenditure of the public moneys. Whenever I think of the horrible mess that I shall be called upon to present to the country on behalf of the Democratic Party, I am tempted to quit my place. I am looking now at Democrats who seem to take amusement in soliciting votes on the floor of the House to overturn the Committee on Appropriations in its efforts to carry out the pledges of the Democratic platform. They seem to take it to be a huge joke not to obey their platform, and to make ridiculous the efforts of the members of our party who do try to live up to the promises they made to the people. I know that some Members on this side are voting continually for appropriations, because they fear the wrath of the public if they do not vote out of the Public Treasury assistance for everything anyone suggests.

We charged the Republicans for 12 years of my service in the House, under Republican administrations, with being grossly extravagant and reckless in the expenditure of the public money. I believed that charge to be true. I believed that my party, when placed in power, would demonstrate that the charges we had made in good faith were true. We are entitled to the help and to the support of the Members on this side of the House in honest efforts to carry out the pledges of the Democratic Party, and in our attempts to show that what we charged in order to get in power was true. We have not had that support. Our Democratic colleagues have not given that support to us thus far during this session of Congress.

They have voted against recommendations that they should not have voted against. They have unnecessarily piled up the public expenditures until the Democratic Party is becoming the laughingstock of the country.

I appeal to them now before it is too late. I appeal to them now before we have gone beyond recall to stop the conduct of which they have been guilty. Do not continue to vote for these improper and improvident appropriations. Those who propose to continue to do so should at least have the courage openly to assert upon the floor of this House that they believe that the professions of the Democratic Party have not been made in good faith, that they can not be carried out, and that we are not entitled to power because of those professions.

And the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], a leading member of the same great committee, said:

I said this in a speech before, in the last session; and when I made that speech Members of the Democratic House came to me and asked me not to put it in the RECORD, because it would be used by the Republicans in their campaign book. Let them use it. If they do, it will be by way of confession and avoidance. They can get no consolation out of it, except that we know better. You may use that statement now, gentlemen, because when Democrats get to be so violently extravagant that it makes our record look bad as compared with the very wicked records of the Republicans, I must apologize to you Republicans for having ever used the words "criminally extravagant" in criticizing the appropriations that you made, for if that expression, "criminally extravagant," was proper to apply to you, my God! the English language has never found an adjective strong enough to apply to Democratic extravagance.

ABOLISHING USELESS OFFICES.

But the record would be incomplete without reference to another demand and promise made by the Democratic Party. In its platform it demanded "a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people."

The new administration came in with loud promises of reductions in offices. It at once dismissed a number of small-paid clerks. Most of these have been replaced, but in the replacement Democrats have been substituted for Republicans. Besides this the number and variety of new offices and places created for hungry Democratic office seekers is bewildering. Especially in the creation of big, fat jobs, with large salaries, are our Democratic friends adepts.

The new banking law creates five new offices with salaries of $12,000 each, with a multitude of other places.

The salary of the Comptroller of the Currency has been increased from $5,000 to $12,000.

The new Trade Commission creates five new offices, at $10,000 each; a secretary, at $5,000; and an unknown number of subordinates.

The new board of appeals has three members at $4,000 each.

Commercial attachés may be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce at any salary he may name, and for the payment of their salaries he is given for the first year $100,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury has been particularly active and strikingly successful in getting new places created in his department. Not only are the large number in the new banking department to his credit, but by some means he has secured the war-risk bureau also, although it properly belonged to the Department of Commerce. For the salaries in this branch $100,000 was appropriated, with $5,000 for the chief. Besides this he demanded a new assistant at $4,500, although he had three already at $5,000 each. When he took the place from his Republican predecessor there were 3,183 persons employed. At once he demanded an increase in the force in Washington alone of 358. At that time the field force of the department was 1,407. He demanded an increase in this force of 678. But yesterday he demanded 2 additional clerks in the division of loans and currency, 26 clerks and 16 counters in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, 4 laborers in the same office, and 3 clerks, 2 counters, and 2 laborers in the office of the Treasurer. This little addition will only cost $41,260 a year.

The Democratic Senate has added 35 new employees at a total annual additional expense of $49,380.

Increases in salaries are almost "too numerous to mention." The salary of the private secretary to the Secretary of the Treasury has been increased from $2,500 to $3,000; chief of division income tax, $2,500 to $3,500; six Assistant Attorneys General, each $7,000, to $9,000; ministers to Spain, Chile, and Argentina, each $12,000, to $17,500. Besides a new minister to Uruguay has been created at a salary of $10,000.

In January last Mr. Bryan appeared before the Appropriations Committee and said:

I was determined that there would be one department that would be run on less than it was before, if I could bring it about.

And he submitted estimates that made the total expenditures for his department $120 less than it was the year before.

But his reputation as a reformer was lost when the bill was amended in the Senate at his request with the addition of an assistant to the Secretary at $4,500 and two clerkships at $1,800 each. He had economized by adding to the annual expense roll $7,980.

The ex-editor of the Commoner and bosom friend of Mr. Bryan was appointed governor of the Canal Zone at a salary of $14,000. This he was compelled to give up because the law abolished the office April 1. In order that the matter should be arranged satisfactorily, an entirely superfluous place was made for him. The authorization could not be secured until May 20, so, in order that there might be no break in his salary, President Wilson made an official order that the salary should commence April 1.

These are instances of the return to that "simplicity and economy" which the Democratic platform demands. It is not surprising that with a record of such extravagances Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. SISSON should have berated their party colleagues for their inconsistency, violated promises, and bad faith.

This proposed "war" tax has no justification from any standpoint. We can not hope for prosperity under a Democratic administration. That party never has given the country prosperity, and apparently never can do so. But we ought to endeavor to injure the people just as little as we can. We ought not to burden and punish them unnecessarily and wantonly. If we will defeat this bill, adopt a system of the most rigid economy, such as everybody else is doing in these days, and after careful, nonpartisan, and intelligent investigation endeavor to readjust our revenue system so that we may meet the necessary expenses of the Government as they arise, we can get along until the next election, which will bring again a Republican administration and good times.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, when President Wilson, on September 4, delivered his address at a joint session of the two Houses of Congress and asked that additional revenue be provided for the Government, and gave as a reason for this request the failure of sufficient customhouse receipts, I am sorry that he did not furnish us with a general statement of the receipts by the Government from all sources, as well as a statement of the disbursements of all kinds, so that we might have had a full and clear understanding of our financial standing; for I take it that the levying of additional taxes is a matter of such extreme importance that it should be given our most careful thought and consideration. We should have a free, full, and, if necessary, a prolonged discussion, and only as a last resort should we levy additional taxes.

OPPOSED TO BILL.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. I am opposed to the levying of extra taxes, thereby placing an unnecessary burden on the people. I wish it were possible to prevent the passage of this bill by this House. I wish it were possible to prevent its enactment into law, for it must be borne in mind that we are passing through an industrial depression caused largely by the laws we have already passed, and the greatest possible service this Congress can render to the country is to repeal about $57,000,000 of extravagant, unnecessary, and reckless appropriations which we have already passed and then adjourn. If we do this, we will not need the revenue that it is proposed to raise by this war-tax measure.

The revenue laws now in force will produce sufficient revenue if we manage our affairs along business lines and avoid unnecessary and extravagant appropriations. On certain items we are able to make a considerable saving, especially on pensions and Panama Canal expenses. Last year we appropriated for pensions $180,300,000, this year we appropriated for pensions $169,150,000, making a saving on this item of $11,150,000. Last year we appropriated for the Panama Canal $34,826,941, this year we appropriated for the Panama Canal $20,718,000, making a saving on this item of $14,108,941, or a total saving on both items of $25,238,941.

But we find when we count up the appropriations made by this Congress that the appropriations exceed last year's appropriations by $31,803,082, which, if added to the saving on pensions and Panama Canal expenses, to which we have referred, makes a total excess appropriation of over $57,000,000. These figures do not include the rivers and harbors bills of either year. The House passed the rivers and harbors bill, which is now in the Senate, which with amendments calls for appropriations of $53,000,000; but thanks to the strenuous and successful opposition of the Republican Senators, led by Senators BURTON of Ohio and KENYON of Iowa, this is one instance where the Republican minority, after a most severe and determined fight, has been successful in curtailing Democratic extravagance. The appropriations in this bill will be cut down.

To this must be added the Democratic treaties with Colombia and Nicaragua, the former carrying an appropriation of $25,000,000 and the latter $3,000,000. In addition to these enumerated there are a large number of other bills pending, some of which have already passed the House, which carry appropriations amounting to about $35,000,000; so that if all these bills are passed, your appropriations will be more than $100,000,000 in excess of last year's appropriations. Would it not be better to cut out these appropriations which are really not necessary and practice a little economy, same as everyone else does under similar circumstances, instead of taxing the people? Had the President given instructions to the heads of the departments to economize instead of instructing Congress to levy taxes it would have been better.

Mr. Speaker, I want to show that the Democratic Party has received and disposed of a larger income since they are in power than the Republicans ever had to dispose of in a similar length of time. When President Wilson was inaugurated on March 4, 1913, a little over 18 months ago, there was a balance in the Treasury of $149,335,777.78. To show the result of the fiscal year's business ending June 30, 1913, for which the Republicans were responsible, although they relinquished office on March 4, 1913, I will quote receipts and disbursements of the Government, which include all receipts and disbursements except that of the Post Office Department, which department showed a profit:

Total ordinary receipts for 1913 were	$724,111,230
Total ordinary expenditures for 1913	682,770,706
Leaving a net balance to our credit of	41,340,524
Total ordinary receipts for 1914 were	734,343,701

DEMOCRATIC EXTRAVAGANCE.

This is an increase of ordinary receipts over the previous year's ordinary receipts of over $10,000,000, and the previous year shows a credit balance under Republican management of over $41,000,000, and now under Democratic management, with an increase of over $10,000,000 in receipts, you come to Congress, 60 days after the close of the year, and demand that additional taxes be levied to raise money for the Government, when, as a matter of fact, had you practiced the same economy that the Republicans had practiced you would have a balance of over $50,000,000 on hand.

The President stated that this tax is necessary because of the falling off of the revenue in the customhouses. We understood and you told us, when you passed the Underwood tariff bill, that you expected this falling off, and this was your excuse for passing the income-tax law, which you said was necessary to make up the deficit or falling off in customhouse receipts. And it did make up this loss, as the following figures will show. We collected at the customhouses for the year ending June 30—

Showing a shortage of	26,762,838

The income tax has produced about $36,000,000, which is about $10,000,000 more than was lost in the tariff revenue, which accounts for the $10,000,000 increase in the ordinary receipts over the previous year to which I have referred. Of course the income from customhouse receipts this year will be less. Last year we had the benefit of the Payne law for three months, and the duty on wool for five months, as well as the sugar duty. Had the Underwood bill been in force for the entire year, even with the sugar duty that it carries about a year longer, the receipts would have been about $26,000,000 less, and on the same volume of receipts next year it will be so much less, and when the duty on sugar goes off in a little over a year from now you will lose about $40,000,000 more; and should the country be so unfortunate as to have the Democratic Party in control at that time, you must then pass some legislation to raise revenue, but such legislation is not needed now.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS.

When the President delivered his address on September 4 there was a balance in the Treasury of $122,843,190, of which $75,000,000 was deposited in national banks on call. It is a splendid thing for the Government to deposit funds in the banks to assist in moving crops, and so forth; and when you did this you only followed the Republican policy, but the difference is when the Government needed the money the Republicans withdrew it gradually as the Government needed it, but you Democrats are going to tax the people in order to keep it in the banks and tell us that if you withdraw it, it might disturb business by its withdrawal. I fail to see why the drawing of $100,000,000 from the pockets of the people is preferable to the drawing of $75,000,000 from the vaults of the banks.

NEW TARIFF BILL CAUSE OF TROUBLE.

Mr. Speaker, the real trouble is caused by the Democratic so-called "competitive" tariff bill passed by this Congress. Not only because it has proven a failure as a revenue producer, but rather because it has opened our markets to the manufacturers of the world and has resulted in increased importations of foreign merchandise, which in turn is responsible for the industrial depression which we are now experiencing. It was supposed that this bill would reduce the high cost of living. In this it also failed.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point in which it has failed which I consider of most extreme importance, to which I wish to call the attention of this House.

BALANCE OF TRADE.

It has affected our balance of trade adversely. Before the enactment of the present tariff law you told us that if we expect to increase our foreign business we must reciprocate by buying foreign goods, and that the present tariff law prevented the importation of these goods; but if this tariff law was removed and lower duty imposed, so that foreigners could sell more goods here, they would then buy from us in much larger quantities and that new markets would be opened to us.

Now, let us see what has happened and compare the results of the Payne law with the competitive tariff:

In 1911 our exports exceeded our imports	$522,094,094
In 1912 our exports exceeded our imports	551,057,475
In 1913 our exports exceeded our imports	652,875,915
In 1914 our exports exceeded our imports	470,457,375

And in November, 1912, the very month in which the Democratic Party was successful at the polls, we imported merchandise amounting to $153,094,898, and during the same month we sold abroad merchandise aggregating $279,244,191, leaving a balance of trade in our favor for that month alone of $126,149,293. It seems to me that these figures would convince any fair and open minded person that it is not necessary to buy abroad in order to sell abroad. You will notice the effect of the Underwood tariff bill in the figures of 1914. You will notice that our trade balance fell off over $182,000,000 as compared with the previous year, due entirely to the "competitive" tariff; whereas, as you will also notice, that under the Payne law this balance had gradually increased year after year.

The falling off as shown in the figures of 1914 continued month after month, growing less and less, until in the month of April we find a balance of trade against us amounting to $11,339,544, and this balance of trade has continued against us every month since that time. You will notice that these figures represent the conditions of trade when there was no thought of war in Europe. If these figures do not convince fair-minded persons of the utter failure of the Democratic Underwood tariff bill, I do not know what would convince them.

This bill has not opened up to us the markets of a single country that was not opened to us before the passage of the bill, but it has surrendered our markets to foreign countries; so that, aside from the loss of revenue for the Government, it has been far more harmful in that it caused and is directly responsible for the terrible depression of the manufacturing interests and the desperate condition of the wage earners, and it has resulted in turning the balance of trade against us.

It is indeed discouraging to look forward to the time when our year's bill must be squared, when we have no trade balance in our favor. Let us hope that, even though it be caused by the unfortunate war and conditions of foreign countries, we may succeed in exporting more goods and importing less, and again turn the balance of trade in our favor. Otherwise we will have a tremendous bill to settle. There have been, no doubt on account of the foreign war, turned back to us possibly $200,000,000 of stocks and bonds; we must pay out possibly $200,000,000 more for ocean freight carried in foreign bottoms. We have an interest account to settle on stocks and bonds held by foreigners, which will require possibly $200,000,000 more. The American tourists in foreign countries have spent fully $100,000,000. All of these obligations must be paid in gold or its equivalent. If the President is fearful that the withdrawal of $75,000,000 from the vaults of the national banks, which money would be put immediately in circulation again in this country, will disturb business and affect the banks, what does he think will happen when from $600,000,000 to $700,000,000 in gold must leave the country in payment of our foreign debts?

It is certainly high time, and far more essential and important, that we should be concerned about this trade balance and the general depressed condition of the country than in levying additional taxes to provide funds to take care of the excessive, unprecedented, and extravagant appropriations made by this Congress, which have broken all previous records.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, this war-tax measure before the House has necessarily focused attention upon the Underwood tariff bill. Under the Democratic gag law under which we are working, and under which I am now speaking, it will be impossible for me to pay attention to but one feature of the Underwood bill as it affects my State, the Pacific coast, and Northern States.

Mr. Speaker, the Underwood bill was brought before the House when I was but a juvenile, a freshman Member, when I had served but a few days in the House. On first glancing at that bill I noticed that cotton ties and cotton bagging were on the free list. I glanced down toward wool sacks and wool bagging and wheat sacks, and I noticed that they were not on the free list. I thought for a while, in my simple juvenile innocence, that this was an oversight, an inadvertence, that it would surely be corrected by our Democratic friends as soon as their attention was called to this seemingly careless omission of free wheat sacks; so I, like "innocence abroad," offered an amendment to put wheat sacks on the free list. Being artless and unsophisticated, I supposed, of course, that my amendment would carry. I saw myself making campaign thunder for my campaign in Oregon and on the coast, but alas! to my great dismay my amendment was defeated. Why was it defeated, Mr. Speaker? Why was the duty left on wheat sacks and wool bagging, while cotton bagging and cotton ties were placed on the free list? Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a campaign document, the campaign book issued by Mr. UNDERWOOD, the majority leader, in his senatorial campaign in Alabama last spring. It is headed:

"Democratic senatorial campaign. The issue and the facts. 'The man of the hour,' OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, statesman, Democrat."

On the bottom of the first page is this quotation from the Bible:

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

[Applause on the Republican side.]

And he gave them free cotton bagging and ties! [Applause on the Republican side.] On page 13 of Mr. UNDERWOOD's campaign book in that memorable campaign against Mr. HOBSON he shows the saving to the cotton growers, his constituents and party friends, to be over $5,000,000 on account of free cotton bagging. Again, I call the attention of the House to page 35 of this campaign book, under the heading of "The mantle of Ananias," where he says:

"One of the innumerable conscious misrepresentations of R. P. HOBSON is with reference to the tariff tax on"—

And then, in large, heavy type—

"bagging and cotton ties. This is disposed of by Mr. UNDERWOOD's speech at Collinsville."

Here is the speech quoted:

"Capt. HOBSON charges I took the tax off of whisky and put it on cotton bagging and cotton ties to tax the farmers."

And again, this line in heavy type:

"That statement is as false as any ever made in the history of mankind. The exact opposite is true. We did not change the tax on liquor, but I did put cotton bagging and ties on the free list."

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Gentlemen, would that I could return to Oregon and say that I put wool bagging and wheat sacks on the free list. [Applause on the Republican side.] He says further in his speech:

"The records will sustain me in this statement. Why any sane man, knowing the record as Capt. HOBSON does, dares to make such a statement contrary to the facts I can not understand. The facts are that when we tried to pass the free list containing cotton bagging and ties over President Taft's veto, Capt. HOBSON was absent and did not vote."

I will have to skip down to the part where again in heavy letters he states:

"The item putting cotton bagging and ties on the free list is in the bill that is now a law."

Yes, Mr. Speaker; the item is in the Underwood bill. Free wheat sacks and free wool bagging denied to the North and the West; free cotton bagging and free cotton ties given to the constituents of the gentleman from Alabama for campaign thunder and campaign arguments in a senatorial contest in Alabama account, Mr. Speaker, for five or six million dollars of deficit in our revenue, which we must now supply with a war tax. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Again referring to the front page of this campaign book of our senatorial candidate in Alabama, "the man of the hour," OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, I read:

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (St. John viii, 32.)

Yes; free from Democratic tariff discrimination against the North and the West.

I desire to cite another example of free-trade inconsistency and discrimination against the West practiced by our free-trade friends. I shall read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 27, 1914, on page 5623, from the remarks of the author of the bill to repeal free tolls on the Panama Canal, Mr. SIMS of Tennessee, who endeavored unsuccessfully to conceal his desire for protection for the timber of his State, his free-trade inconsistency, and discrimination against the West behind the bogie man of the Lumber Trust and the Weyerhaeuser interests:

"Mr. SIMS. * * * Now, you southern people that are interested in forest products, that are interested in the value of lumber on the east and Gulf coasts, if you give the Lumber Trust, the Weyerhaeuser interests of the West, free passage through that canal, lumber on the Gulf and Atlantic coasts will go down from $3 to $5 a thousand. It will affect the price of lumber back from the coast for 500 miles. Yet gentlemen who represent a subsidized and protected monopolistic interest are willing to do it, even if they destroy or damage their own particular industry.

"In the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission Mr. Walker, representing the hardwood-lumber interests of the South, said distinctly that even now lumber from Washington is invading southern hardwood markets on the Gulf and Atlantic coasts. Now, you can see why the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] stands where he does. If you give these Weyerhaeusers the privilege——

"Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

"The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

"Mr. SIMS. Certainly; if he is not a subsidist.

"Mr. COOPER. Do I understand that the gentleman is opposed to having western lumber compete with southern lumber?

"Mr. SIMS. Oh, no; but I am trying to show you what a very foolish thing it is to give the Weyerhaeusers the free use of a Government facility, paid for by the taxes of the people, when to do so reduces the value of the property of millions who pay these taxes.

"Mr. COOPER. You are trying to protect the South against the competition of the West.

"Mr. SIMS. I am trying to show the people in the southern hardwood country the folly of doing something which will reduce the price of their own products and to submit to being taxed in order to do it."

How cunningly our free-trade friend Mr. SIMS pleads for protection for the timber of Tennessee against the Pacific coast product. He wants his protection in the guise of tolls at the Panama Canal.

Again I read the Biblical quotation from Majority Leader UNDERWOOD's senatorial campaign book, which I hold in my hand:

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (St. John viii, 32.)

The voters will know the truth at the November elections, and we shall be free from sectional favoritism in congressional legislation.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, President Wilson, in his message delivered to the Congress on the 4th of this month asking and urging Congress to provide additional revenue for the Government, assured us in clear-sounding phrases that the request was made by him with deepest regret, but that the necessity for further legislation to provide additional revenue was occasioned by the rapid falling off of the revenue under existing laws and prevailing conditions.

He cited to us the fact that there was a falling off in revenues collected in customs during the month of August amounting to $10,629,538, and he maintained that while the Treasury could, no doubt, get along for some time without any immediate resort to new sources of revenue, it would cause inconvenience, depression, and confusion of business to withdraw, to pay the running expenses of the Government, any of the approximately $75,000,000 of the general funds of the Government deposited on call with the national banks in different parts of the country.

The falling off of the revenues, the President further says, "is due in chief part not to the reduction recently made in tariff duties but to the great decrease in importations." The President seems to have in mind that some one might have a suspicion that the falling off in revenue was in part due to the reduction recently made in the customs duties. As usual he gives no facts and cites no authority from which his conclusion is drawn. In his message he treats this whole subject in glittering generalities and with studied and pleasing phraseology.

The gist of his message, however, is that the present Democratic administration needs more money to pile up in the Treasury and in favored banks and to meet its extravagant expenditures. His conclusion is that under present conditions the easiest way to get this money is to take it out of the pockets of the people who toil on the farms, in the factories, and in the shops of the land.

The usual Democratic recourse to a bond issue to secure money to carry on the business of the country has been cast aside at this time, for, as the President says, the business of the country is in such condition that "the offering for sale of bonds would make an untimely demand on the money market, as this is manifestly not the time to withdraw working capital from other uses to pay the Government's bills."

"Draw it from the pockets of the people, not from the banks or the business of the country," seems to be the President's direction. Get the money and get it "so that it will begin to yield at once and in certain and constant flow," his message urges.

For many months business throughout the country has been in a very bad way. More men have been idle and seeking jobs than for many years. Whether this is due largely to the inefficiency of the present administration to conduct the Government safely and hold the confidence of those engaged in business, or whether it is due to the European war—which is now the Democratic stock excuse for all their blunders and mistakes—need here take no time for discussion. This fact is clear, however, that the country is in the throes of hard times. The fact, too, is that the customs revenues of the Government have not only fallen off, as the President has said, in August, but have been falling off for several months past.

The Underwood tariff bill has already, like other Democratic measures of its kind, proven to be a flat failure as a producer of sufficient revenue and as a means of reducing the high cost of living. For many months the working people of this country have had to deal with the existing business depression. They have been obliged to economize and curtail expenses in every possible way. In view of the protestations made in the past by the party now in power it might be expected that some of its preachments of economy would be put into practice at this time.

This is one of the planks of the Baltimore platform, on which the present administration rode into power:

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

How inconsistent have been the practices of the party since it has come into power! With the Democratic Party in full power and the South in the saddle, the party has shown its inability to manage the country. This Congress has been more reckless and more extravagant in its appropriations and expenditures than any Congress in the history of the country.

The table below, prepared by the clerks of the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate, give a chronological history of the appropriations made for the fiscal years 1914 and 1915.

The appropriations made for the fiscal year 1914 aggregated $1,057,605,694.40, not including the amount carried by the river and harbor act approved March 4, 1913, and which appropriated $41,073,094 and authorized contracts in addition amounting to $6,795,000.

The amount already appropriated by this Congress for the fiscal year 1915, not including the amount carried in the river and harbor bill, is $1,039,408,777.26, which is $31,803,082.86 more than appropriated by the last session of the Sixty-second Congress for the fiscal year 1914. The good Lord Himself only knows what the appropriations carried by the river and harbor bill this session would be if it were not for the long and hard-fought opposition made by Republican Members of the House and Senate to the outrageous expenditure proposed in this bill. When it is recalled and taken into account that the pension bill enacted by this session carries $11,150,000 less than the pension bill for the fiscal year 1914 the extravagant appropriations made by this session become more apparent.

Showing the disregard of economy that has been evidenced by the different departments of the Government and the growing tendency to extravagant use of Government funds is the fact that the Executive at the beginning of the session and at different times since has submitted estimatees for appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 amounting to $1,112,415,382.02. These estimates exceed by $23,006,604.76 the extravagant total appropriations that have been made.

Where economy has been exercised in any of the appropriation bills it has been largely due to the efforts made by this side, or by individual members of the Republican Party. The defeat in the Senate of the river and harbor "pork-barrel" bill, saving to the taxpayers of the country between thirty and forty million dollars, was due not to the President nor to any of the proponents of the bill or of the Underwood tariff bill, but to the persistent work of Republican Members of the House and of the Senate and to the response from the country, which was awakened to the further attempted extravagances of the present majority in Congress.

There really is no necessity for this additional tax on the people if a sensible economy in the management of the Government appropriations and expenditures is practiced at this time as the conditions of this country and the conditions in the world at large warrant.

[5] No river and harbor act has become a law at this session, but the sum of $6,988,500 is appropriated in the sundry civil act to carry out contracts heretofore authorized for river and harbor improvements.

[6] The sum of $10,045,795 was appropriated in the sundry civil act to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements for 1914.

[7] This amount includes $7,217,500 to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements and $26,326,985 for construction and fortification of the Panama Canal for 1915, and is exclusive of $6,196,221 carried under "Miscellaneous."

[8] This amount includes $6,988,500 to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements and $21,842,475 for construction and fortification of the Panama Canal for 1915.

[9] This amount includes $10,045,795 to carry out contracts authorized by law for river and harbor improvements and $21,135,393 for construction and fortification of the Panama Canal for 1914.

[10] This amount is approximated.

[11] This is the amount submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in the annual estimates for the fiscal year 1915, the exact amount appropriated not being ascertainable until two years after the close of the fiscal year. This amount includes estimated amount of $60,717,000 to meet sinking-fund obligations for 1915.

[12] In addition to this amount contracts are authorized to be entered into, subject to future appropriations by Congress, as follows: By the fortification act, $600,000; by the naval act, $26,650,000; by the sundry civil act, $810,000; in all, $28,060,000.

[13] In addition to this amount contracts are authorized to be entered into, subject to future appropriations by Congress, as follows: By the Army act, $150,000; by the District of Columbia act, $1,615,000; by the fortification act, $300,000; by the naval act, $21,296,524; by the river and harbor act, $6,795,800; by the public buildings act, $38,347,850 (exclusive of $8,161,000 for authorizations without contracts, etc.); in all, $68,505,174.

This statement from the Department of Commerce shows that while the customs receipts under the Underwood bill have been much less than under the Payne bill, the combined customs receipts and ordinary receipts have been and are now sufficient to meet all reasonable, necessary, and economical expenditures of the Government:

I have here a statement giving the customs receipts by months for the years 1911, 1912, 1913, and up to September 1, 1914:

Duties collected from customs, by months, from January, 1911, to August, 1914, inclusive.

	June	23,553,447.58
	July	22,988,465.04
	August	19,431,362.52

This shows that the falling off in customs receipts in February, 1914, as compared with February, 1913, was greater than the falling off of receipts in August, 1914, as compared with August, 1913.

Much of the real cause of the troubled business condition in the country and the hard times prevailing may be found in the following table showing our imports and exports of merchandise for the years 1912, 1913, and 1914:

This shows clearly that there has been a constant falling off in our balance of trade since the enactment of our present tariff law until now; and since April of this year, for the first time in 16 years, the balance of trade is against us. In October, 1913, our exports exceeded our imports by $138,912,162. In August, 1914, our imports exceeded our exports by $19,030,382. This accounts for the drain of millions of gold from this country to Europe as well as for many of our idle factories and workshops.

What our people need now is a lessening rather than an adding to their tax burdens. I am confident that there is no one in this Chamber but realizes deep down in his heart that with any reasonable economy in Government appropriations there would be no necessity for this tax at this time. When the people of this country are given the opportunity to right and readjust themselves and to again adopt a policy of government and legislation that will bring about a balance of trade in our favor, and under which the exports of our manufactured products will increase rather than decrease from month to month, all will be well. Then there will be no talk or discussion of a war-tax measure like this at a time when we are at peace with the whole world. [Applause on the Republican side.] No defense in reason can be made to the "gag" rule under which this bill has been brought into the House and under which it is now being considered. Under the rule not a single amendment to the bill can even be offered. The introduction of such an almost unheard-of rule by the majority on a measure of this kind is a plain admission that a free discussion of the different items of the bill is feared by its authors. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], who has preceded me on the floor, explained somewhat how cotton bagging and cotton ties were placed on the free list in the Underwood tariff bill, while in the same bill a duty was placed on wheat sacks and wool bags, and made clear the prominent part free cotton bagging and free cotton ties played in the recent senatorial campaign in Alabama. In examining this bill I have been unable to discover any good reason why California wines should be so heavily taxed and Kentucky whisky should escape any additional tax. Doubtless the authors of the bill have a reason which has not yet been clearly disclosed to the House.

The tax on gasoline provided for in this bill will lay a heavy burden of taxation on many families in the Northwest, where gasoline is so generally used in the household and for the operation of farm machinery. If in an emergency and under an economical and careful administration of the affairs of the Government such a tax as this were actually needed to meet the necessary expenses of the Government, our people, who are the most generous and patriotic people in all the world, would cheerfully pay it. But when there has not been shown any real necessity for the additional tax at this time and when extravagant appropriations and inefficient management of the Government have given rise to the legislation before us, it should be opposed by every citizen, irrespective of what his party affiliations may be. I trust that an aroused public will bring its influence to bear to defeat this unnecessary legislation as it assisted in the defeat of the indefensible appropriations that were proposed in the river and harbor bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, because of the great war now raging in Europe the amount of goods imported into this country is much less than usual, and, consequently, the amount of money which is collected as duties on goods shipped into this country is very much less than usual. The receipts of the Government are, therefore, not sufficient to pay the expenses. On account of this fact the President has recommended to Congress the passage of a war-tax law, which will provide an amount of money sufficient to make up the shortage in receipts which has been caused by the decrease in importations.

It is not a pleasant task at any time to levy taxes such as are proposed by the pending bill. Nevertheless, if such a tax be necessary in order to provide money to carry on the Government, then every courageous, broad-minded Member of this House, of whatever party, should support the bill, and every person who has the country's best interest at heart will approve the action of the House in passing such a law.

I say that it is unfortunate that it has become necessary on account of the great European war to pass a war-tax bill. However, though we are not at war with any other nation of the world, yet the war that is now raging in Europe is so great in its proportions that it has seriously affected the trade of this and every other country in the world, because ships of commerce dare not sail the seas.

Yes, it is unfortunate that because of war in another part of the world we must pass this emergency war tax, but how much worse, how much more unfortunate it would be if we were compelled to levy a war tax because of a war in which this country itself were engaged.

The fact that this great Nation is at peace with all the world and is free from strife is something for which every citizen of this country should rejoice and be thankful. And yet if some of the so-called leaders of the opposition party could have had their way during the last year this country would no doubt be embroiled in one of the bloodiest and most disastrous wars in its history. When the present administration came into power it found the so-called Mexican problem on its hands. A state of revolution existed throughout all of Mexico. President Madero, of Mexico, had been murdered, and Gen. Huerta at once set himself up as dictator. The United States Government, with President Wilson at its head, refused to recognize Huerta as President of the Republic of Mexico. We declared that a Government which had secured its power by murder would not be recognized as a Government by the United States.

For taking this stand President Wilson, Secretary Bryan, and those of us in Congress who supported this policy were severely denounced and sneered at by those whose chief concern is to place themselves in power, regardless of how well the party in power may be conducting the affairs of the Government.

Time and time again our policy in regard to Mexico was severely criticized by some of the leaders, not the rank and file, of the Republican Party, and referred to contemptuously as a policy of "watchful waiting." Let me say, sir, that the American people are now very, very thankful that we did have a policy of "watchful waiting."

To-day 10,000,000 of men in foreign lands have been placed against each other for mutual slaughter. The modern guns and instruments of warfare are proving their awful power to slaughter human beings and destroy property.

Throughout Europe to-day there is misery and desolation. Hundreds of thousands have already been slain, and hundreds of thousands more have been far worse than killed—they have been horribly maimed and mangled. Young men who had their whole lives before them, who were the pride and joy of their parents, and who were looked to by their aged fathers and mothers as their sole support in old age, have either given up their lives or have been made absolutely helpless. Men who a little while ago were strong and rugged and cheerful will soon be wandering about unable to earn a living. Some will be hobbling about on wooden stilts; others will have empty sleeves hanging by their sides. Beautiful cities have been laid waste, homes have been destroyed, and many, many of the people who are not actually on the battle field are wandering about on the highways without a home of any kind to shelter them. Little children are asking piteously about the return home of their fathers, and sad-eyed, tender mothers have not the heart to tell them the truth.

All this because the statesmen of Europe listened to the jingoes. All this because the heads of European Governments gave heed to the silly talk about national honor.

It is only a few short months ago that President Wilson and Congressmen who supported him were sneered at and jibed, not only by the interests and party advantage seekers in this country, but also by the press and public men of the nations now at war in Europe. But the Government of the United States fortunately could not be stampeded and rushed into a war with Mexico, a war which would have had more serious results than many people supposed, and to-day ours is one of the few nations of the world which is enjoying peace and comfort.

And yet many of the people in this country have their sorrow because of the European war. Sons and brothers of many of our people have already fallen on the battle fields of Europe. Fathers and mothers of many of our people have been made penniless and are suffering terrible hardship. As a Nation, however, we are at peace with all the world.

Mr. Speaker, it is well to consider for a moment why this is so. It is because the Government of the United States is a Government of the people. The people of any country seldom make war, although it is they who must fight the battles when war is begun. In this country public officials are supposed to represent the will of the people. So far as a public servant carries the will of the people into effect, just so far is he a really successful official. In the years past we have had Presidents and Congresses who would engage us in war with little provocation, and there were always some who sympathized with that idea, but the great majority of the people never willingly entered upon a war without complete justification.

Almost every person in the United States is thankful to-day that we are not engaged in war. The President and Congress have done the will of the people in keeping out of war, and the people are showing unbounded confidence in those who have thus been true to their trust.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I shall oppose this measure because I believe it to be unnecessary and an additional hardship to many already oppressed by the injurious effects of the Underwood tariff law.

The great, vital, material bread-and-butter issue before the American people is the tariff question as comprehended in the slogan, "Made in America."

The Underwood low-tariff measure has been disastrous from its very beginning. It has demoralized industry and trade and shattered confidence. It has not only increased the cost of living but has deprived several millions of wage earners from opportunities to earn any living.

The Underwood bill has forced a drain upon our gold that necessitates the remarkable pooling proposition of bankers to raise $100,000,000 in gold to pay debts and help our credit in distracted Europe. Instead of curtailing expenses and deferring expenditures upon projects that can be postponed, it is proposed to pass an emergency measure to take from the pockets of the people in times of peace $100,000,000 to make up for the losses in revenue that month by month has resulted from the made-in-Europe articles that have been placed on the free list and shipped here to displace American labor.

Instead of giving a balance of trade in our favor of three to five hundred million dollars a year to protect our gold supply, it has turned trade against us for goods made in Europe to the startling extent of about two hundred and forty millions a year. The war abroad is not responsible for this disastrous showing. Free-trade legislation is simply repeating its history.

The lowered duty on sugar was a serious blow to the sugar industry, cane and beet, throwing out of employment thousands of men and destroying millions of dollars of investments. It has lessened the home product by nearly 150,000 tons, strengthened the monopoly of the refiners, and added 2 to 3 cents a pound to the price to the consumer, and has already cost the Government twelve and a half million dollars in revenue.

Eight million fewer sheep in the United States is the result of the agitation for free wool and the removal of the duty, with consequent great losses to that industry and loss of employment to textile workers because of increased importations of woolen goods. This unwise legislation has deprived the Government of nearly twenty millions in revenue. It has not reduced cost of wearing apparel, but has displaced thousands of wage earners and has added to the cost of meat by lessening the supply of lamb and mutton.

The increased freight and passenger rates demanded by the railroads because of the large decrease in business and impairment of earnings the Underwood bill has caused to that great industry making and employing force will be another burden upon the people that should cause us to hesitate before passing this measure.

Senator BURTON'S successful effort in forcing the Democrats to agree to a reduction of fourteen millions of dollars in the rivers and harbors bill shows what can be done. Reduce expenditures. That is the way to make unnecessary a war tax on the people in time of peace. Other expenditures should be deferred, and not burden the people with an additional tax of one hundred millions in a period of hardship that the Nation is now passing through. It is the duty of the Nation as well as an individual to economize in expenditures when the income is falling off. The present Congress has spent millions more than the previous Congress, yet it purposes to take another hundred millions in an emergency tax from the people.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said on the floor to-day concerning the failure of the Underwood tariff bill. I do not understand why so much stress is laid on that, because it is no new thing for a Democratic tariff law to be a failure. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to vote against this war tax bill because I am opposed to a system whereby the people in my district are to be forced to pay for Democratic improvidence, extravagance, and financial mismanagement.

The tariff for revenue only which the Democratic Party put into effect in October, 1913, is now admitted to be a failure. Under the guise of making up revenue lost by reason of the war, the Democratic Party is in reality trying to cover up the failure of the new tariff law to raise the revenue which it was expected from it.

Coming into power under an absolute pledge of strict economy, the Democratic Party has been wholly heedless in its extravagance. If the tariff for revenue only had not been enacted, the Treasury would not now be depleted. If the Democratic Party had been economical, there would be no necessity of raising $100,000,000. Unfortunately, however, there has been no attempt at economy, and none of the policies of the Democratic Party has been designed to build up. The river and harbor bill was framed with a view to satisfying preferences and prejudices and not with any idea of the national importance of the rivers involved. As a result, the entire bill has been discarded. The Delaware River, which should have had more than $1,000,000 for continuing work, now must go without any appropriation for such work because of the Democratic folly and mismanagement.

Why should the people of the country be taxed to pay the bill of the Democratic Party? Why should the people be compelled to pay additional taxes when the party in power, by the exercise of a little economy and the exercise of a little judgment in tariff making, could have conserved the revenues of the country? It is all very well to say that the European war brought about this condition in the Treasury, but the fact is that the revenues had fallen off to an alarming degree long before the war began. Later on I will cite figures in proof of this statement.

It is significant, however, that the revenues of the country have always fallen into an alarming condition after the enactment of these so-called tariffs for revenue only. After the passage of such measures four Presidents of the United States have been compelled to appeal to Congress for more revenues.

In his message to Congress in September, 1837, after the "sliding-scale act" had failed to properly finance the Government, President Van Buren said:

I deeply regret that events have occurred which require me to ask your consideration of such serious topics. I could have wished that in making my first communication to the assembled Representatives of my country I had nothing to dwell upon but the history of her unalloyed prosperity. Since it is otherwise, we can only feel more deeply the responsibility of the respective trusts that have been confided to us, and under the pressure of difficulties unite in invoking the guidance and aid of the Supreme Ruler of Nations and in laboring with zealous resolution to overcome the difficulties by which we are environed.

President Buchanan, in his message to Congress nine months after the passage of the "progressive free-trade act," said:

The earth has yielded her fruits abundantly and has bountifully rewarded the toil of the husbandman. Our great staples have commanded high prices, and up till within a brief period our manufacturing, mineral, and mechanical occupations have largely partaken of the general prosperity. We have possessed all the elements of material wealth in rich abundance, and yet, notwithstanding all these advantages, our country in its monetary interests is at the present moment in a deplorable condition.

In calling Congress together in special session, four months from the time of his inauguration, the "tariff for revenue only" having failed to maintain the Government, President Cleveland said:

The distrust and apprehension concerning the financial situation which pervade all business circles have already caused great loss and damage to our people and threaten to cripple our merchants, stop the wheels of manufacture, bring distress and privation to our farmers, and withhold from our workingmen the wage of labor.

President Wilson, in his message September 4, 1914, said:

Gentlemen of Congress, I come to you to-day to discharge a duty which I wish with all my heart I had been spared, but it is a duty which is very clear, therefore I perform it without hesitation or apology. I come to ask very earnestly that an additional revenue be provided for the Government. During the month of August there was, as compared with the corresponding month of last year, a falling off of $10,629,538 in revenues collected from customs. A continuation of this decrease in the same proportion throughout the current fiscal year would probably mean a loss of customs revenues of from sixty to one hundred millions.

And we ought not to borrow. We ought to resort to taxation, however we may regret the necessity of putting additional temporary burdens on our people. I respectfully urge that an additional revenue of $100,000,000 be raised through internal taxes devised in your wisdom to meet the emergency.

The argument of President Wilson is not tenable. Imports to the United States under the operations of the present law for 10 months ending July 31 increased $102,478,621, according to a table of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. In the same period, as shown by figures from the same source, duties paid on imports decreased $30,770,070, which is more than 30 per cent of the deficiency which the administration, preparing to levy special taxes, attributes to the European war.

A gain in imports was to be expected under the lower duties imposed by the Underwood bill, but it must come as a shock to those who framed the law that revenue has decreased to such a point where extra taxation is necessary.

Had a deficiency occurred under duties such as were levied by the Payne-Aldrich bill, we would have the satisfaction of having produced in our mills, with American labor, a large part of the manufactures accounted for in the increase of more than $100,000,000 in imports. As the matter stands, however, we have not made the goods, our working people do not get the wages, and we are more than $30,000,000 short in revenue, which is now to be made up by the further taxation of our people. This is unjustly charged to the war account.

The attempt to blame the decreases in revenue solely upon the war is shown up in its true light by the customs figures of Philadelphia.

At the port of Philadelphia the duties collected in August, 1913, amounted to $2,167,000 as against $1,208,000 for last month, a decrease of $959,000. If the theory of those who would blame the war is sound, then there must have been an unprecedented decrease in the imports received. The figures show, however, that $6,923,000 worth of goods entered at Philadelphia last month and $7,045,000 in August of 1913, a difference of only $122,000. Thus, under the Underwood tariff law, there was in one month a decrease in imports of only $122,000, while the decrease in duties collected reached the figure of $900,000.

The consequences of the tariff for revenue only policy were plainly in evidence before the European war began, and it will not be possible for the Democrats to attribute conditions to the European disturbances.

If the United States had been squarely upon a protectionist basis at the time of the European war it would have been in a better position to meet the shock of the situation. Mills would have still been running full time. There would have been employment for everybody and there would have been no convulsion of capital and labor. The country would have been able to meet the emergency much more boldly and effectively. Whenever the tariff issue has been presented squarely to the American people they have voted overwhelmingly for protection, but due to the split in the Republican Party in 1912, although a large majority voted for protection, a plurality elected Wilson and gave the excuse for the abandonment of the protective principle. It is for this error that the country is paying the price to-day, and the effort to confuse the situation by attributing the disasters to the European war will not be effective with any thoughtful person.

Even though it were not the acts and omissions of the Democratic Party which had brought about the conditions which this war tax is designed to meet, I would oppose the program, because it is as unscientific as the rest of the Democratic policies.

This bill is as haphazard as the tariff bill, and based on the same hit-or-miss policy. Just as the Democratic Party failed to guess what the tariff for revenue only would do, it may fail to guess what the war will do. And all this guessing falls heavily upon the people who pay the bill.

What does the administration know about the need of additional revenue? How can it say that $100,000,000 will be needed in the future? This bill is pure guesswork. The imports in August decreased, but no one can say what will happen in October or November or December. No man can tell whether the decrease in revenue for the fiscal year will be $25,000,000 or $150,000,000.

We could figure it out on the basis of decreases in revenue prior to the European war, but the Democratic Party preferred to ignore these decreases and regard merely the European war results. If this tax has been figured out solely on the basis of what has happened in one month of war, why should an estimate of losses be made for a whole year? What authority has the Democratic Party to say that this war will last a year?

It is impossible to consider the question of Democratic legislation without analyzing the Democratic policy as it is declared in acts and achievements rather than in promises. Since the beginning the Democrats have declared themselves to be the foes of what they called special privilege. They maintained, on the one hand, that conferring privileges on favored individuals or corporations was a crime against the general welfare, and on the other they averred that whether or not it was vicious or beneficial it was morally wrong to use the law-making power to such end and purpose.

It will be conceded that special privilege is as great an evil as the Democrats have declared it to be. It is a great evil to give to one at the expense of another through the medium of a statute. But special privilege can work two ways. It is as bad theoretically so to frame statutes that those specially hated or feared shall receive punishment as that those favored or loved shall receive privileges.

The handing out of punishment by the same method stifles industrial activity, reduces the measure of prosperity, and there is no question of fair or unfair division of the profits, for the simple reason that there are no profits. There is only stagnation, unemployment, and taxes—always taxes and more taxes.

The further the investigation into recent legislation is carried the plainer it becomes that the lawmaking power of the Nation has been perverted, that statutes have been enacted to the end that political enemies might be punished. The aim of the tariff law was to hurt those who had succeeded. Rates were delicately adjusted so that they would do the most harm to the hated corporations, and the degree of the hate can be determined by a glance at the rate. No consideration was given to the prosperity of the country, and any industry which had shown a disposition to grow to large proportions was to have its activities reduced and profits impaired as a punishment for its success.

Now, we find that this system of tariff making is a complete failure. Industries have been injured and workingmen thrown out of work. Revenues have fallen off and advantage has come to nobody. The remedy proposed is to tax the people to make up a prospective deficiency of the Treasury, without knowing what that deficiency is going to be.

The Democratic Party promised to reduce the high cost of living, and the result has been an increase in the cost of living. The Democratic Party promised to end special privileges, and the result was constant legislation to destroy industry and employment and lower wages. The Democratic Party promised an era of economy, and the result has been a period of unparalleled extravagance. The financial management of the Government has been bungled and the people of the country are now to be forced to pay the bill.

In estimating the needs of the Treasury at $100,000,000, without knowing anything about what will be actually needed, the Democrats are deliberately making the country swallow extravagance. This tax will bear upon the small storekeepers and the consumers; upon men and women who can ill afford to pay additional and unnecessary taxes, which could be avoided by the exercise of the most ordinary economies. I want to voice my protest against this iniquitous oppression of the people who had been promised an economical administration, and who are now being asked to pay for blundering legislation and unprecedented extravagance. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I can find no justification for laying upon our people at this time the great burden of this war tax of $100,000,000 when we are at peace with all the world. An effective and economical administration of the revenues of the Government would have reduced the deficit to a much smaller sum, and that should be made up by no war tax but by a revision of the tariff on a basis of moderate protection to agricultural and competitive manufactured products, thereby restoring the markets to our producers, employment to labor, and prosperity of the country.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I can not concur in the recommendation of the President that the revenue bill under consideration should be enacted. It proposes to tax the industries of the country to make up the deficiencies in the customs duties. There appears to me to be no immediate necessity or justification for levying additional taxes upon the people, who are already overburdened, when there are other and better ways to meet the embarrassing situation which confronts the Government.

Why would it not be wiser to curtail our appropriations for a year to the extent of $100,000,000? When a wise man is confronted with a reduction of his income he practices economy, and why should the Government not do the same thing, instead of imposing further taxes?

Would it not be wiser to offer for sale the Panama bonds still unissued, or a portion of them, and bring from hiding millions of dollars withdrawn from circulation, the bonds to be paid when the customs receipts again become normal?

Why not restore to the dutiable list wool, sugar, and a few other articles, which would doubtless bring ample revenue to meet the deficiency and thus avoid levying a tax as proposed, which should only be considered in a time of war?

When the Government is operating under a protective tariff system we have a surplus in the Treasury instead of a deficit. In addition, we are then selling abroad more than we buy, home industries are built up, labor is employed, and the people generally are prosperous.

Every thinking man must recognize that the business conditions of the country and the lot of the wage earner are far less satisfactory than at the close of the last administration 18 months ago. Since the enactment of the Democratic tariff bill it is a deplorable fact that many manufacturers in the country have curtailed production because of a lessening of demand for their products, which has resulted in the discharge of hundreds of thousands of employees, while some have closed down entirely to await sufficient orders to warrant resumption, and their employees have sought work elsewhere, generally without success.

But few, if any, merchants, professional men, farmers, or wage earners are as well off as one year ago, and there is not much hope for more prosperous times in the immediate future under existing conditions.

As intelligent beings it is natural that we should inquire into the cause of these adverse conditions and correct them.

Is it not a historical fact that whenever the Democratic Party has enacted a revenue tariff depressed business conditions have followed? What other result could be expected when the home market for the products of the American manufacturer and farmer is surrendered to the foreign importer, and we buy abroad many things which we can produce and thus keep our money in our own country?

The Wilson revenue tariff law of 1894, enacted by a Democratic Congress, not only resulted in a long siege of slackened business and unemployment, but our revenues were reduced to such an extent that a bond issue was necessary in order to raise money to pay the expenses of the Government, and $162,000,000 was borrowed at 4 per cent interest. Under the succeeding Republican administration the credit of the Government had been so improved that the Spanish-American War bonds of 1898 were floated at 3 per cent and the Panama Canal bonds a few years later at 2 per cent.

The Democrats are again in power and we are again confronted by a deficit in our revenues, due, in part, it is true, to a curtailment of imports on account of the European war, but largely because of the great falling off during this year of our revenues from customs duties as a result of the operation of the Underwood tariff law placing many articles on the free list and a radical reduction of the duty on other articles. Because of this partisan legislation the American people must now submit to a most arbitrary and unnecessary tax, which is soon to be forced upon the business interests of the country, which because of a gradual reduction in the commercial activities of the country during the last 18 months can not bear additional burdens without embarrassment.

The Democratic tariff law has resulted in great damage to the business and agricultural interests of my State, but the beet-sugar industry has suffered irreparably and will be forced out of existence if the tariff is finally removed, as provided for in the recent tariff law. The farmers will not raise the beets if the price to them is reduced, and the sugar manufacturers there can not compete with the foreign manufacturers without reducing the cost of production. A slight reduction has already been made in the price for raw material and in wages, and a large reduction in dividends to the stockholders, because of the reduction of the duty provided for, and yet the price to the consumer is higher than for years.

The lumber industry, the stock-raising industry, and the lead-mining industry, all of which are important factors in the prosperity of our people, are retrograding because of the disturbed business conditions due to the baneful effects of the abandonment of the protective-tariff policy of the Republican Party, under which this country has always prospered. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, most of us would, I think, be glad if we could avoid the necessity of passing this bill, but its necessity arises out of conditions far beyond our control. The dreadful war now raging in Europe, which is wiping out myriads of lives and, like a great conflagration, destroying billions of dollars' worth of property, is seriously affecting every civilized country in the world, ours included. It will cause people to suffer the pangs of hunger in some countries because they can not have the food, while the people in other countries will go bankrupt because they can not sell them the food products they have to spare. It will drain working capital from every portion of civilization to invest in ways and means for destroying human life.

The world is far smaller than it used to be in a certain sense. Places that a generation ago were comparatively remote and difficult of access are now linked together. Steam and electricity, the great ocean cables, and the wireless system of telegraphy have brought the ends of the earth together and have made neighbors out of distant nations.

Each one has learned to utilize the products of the others and to take advantage of them to such extent that the nations now constitute a kind of plexus, or web, so that a serious disturbance to any of the great industrial nations results in a corresponding industrial disturbance in the others.

The present cataclysm involves not one, but seven of the great nations of the earth with fair prospects of involving others. Populations aggregating 450,000,000 are involved directly and over 500,000,000 more are involved indirectly through colonies or subject races, almost two-thirds of all the inhabitants of the earth.

The whole machinery of the world's commerce is thrown out of gear. It is impossible that the effect would not be seriously felt. Our commercial relations with the nations involved were peculiarly close, and the effect on us is, of course, manifest.

In the development of the world's commerce, the high seas had been covered with fleets of merchant ships, busy carrying food and wares from country to country, so that the greatest danger to navigation arose from the collision of ship with ship. The seas were not big enough for safety.

But when war showed its horrid front, the ships that were abroad sought havens of refuge, and those in the harbors remained there. Commerce practically ceased.

A large part of our Federal revenue is derived from taxes collected from imports brought in through the customhouses of the country. But under existing conditions there will be, of course, a great falling off in imports and a consequent falling off in revenue.

These are indisputable facts, and facts are stubborn things.

What shall we do under these circumstances? How shall the situation be met? True, there is no immediate stress. The Treasury is far from empty, and if we had assurance that the exigency confronting us would be brief, there were little need to take any action. But there is no such assurance. Indeed, to ordinary foresight, the prospect is the other way; it points to a somewhat prolonged struggle, with the probability that yet other nations will become involved. Under such circumstances we can not afford to take any risks. We must not be found like the foolish virgins. We must procure oil for our lamps and keep them trimmed.

Indeed, under the conditions existing at this time, it is peculiarly necessary that the Federal Treasury be maintained in a perfectly sound condition.

Among the things which the European conflict will compel us to consider is the large amount of indebtedness we owe in Europe, which we will, no doubt, be called upon to pay on maturity. New York City is preparing to meet such a demand for $100,000,000 at an early day, and this is only typical of many other cases. To run the risk of an empty Federal Treasury at a time when our working capital is so likely to be depleted were worse than folly, it were madness.

We are criticized by our Republican friends for levying a war tax in time of peace. Of course we know, as everyone knows, that our Republican brethren would like to convince the country that our way is the wrong way. Their teeth have long been watering for the flesh pots. We know that, and the country knows it. But every thinking man also knows that the present disturbance in the industrial life of the country, resulting from this worst of wars, is greater than the disturbance caused by our little war with Spain 16 years ago.

Dependent as we are on Europe for many of the ingredients which enter into our manufactured products and without which we can make little headway in many lines, such as dyestuffs, alkalies, potash, tin in its various forms, and many other things, with far the greater part of the civilized world in desperate deadly strife, with so many of our industrial and financial interests bound up with theirs, with a large portion of our ordinary revenues cut off by the war, the need for action is so apparent that we should forget small politics and see only that larger patriotism befitting Members of the American Congress.

Gentlemen seek to place the blame for the falling off in revenue on the present tariff, and, harking back to the Payne law, insist that it would furnish sufficient revenue if it were now in force.

Our stand-pat protectionist friends, who lose no chance to lament the extinction of the Payne tariff law, think, or pretend to think, that if it were now in force it would produce plenty of revenue. It is pathetic, the superstitious faith they have in a protective tariff. It can produce a given result to-day, then, presto! change, and it produces the very opposite result to-morrow. The very purpose of it was to keep foreign-made goods out, but when we need more revenue, in spite of all danger of capture on the high seas, it would bring them in. Its tremendous capacity for producing diametrically opposite results is illustrated almost as well in the current number—September 25—of what might be called the official journal of protection, the American Economist, as it is in the speeches of protectionists on this floor. I quote:

> The whole aniline-dye trade, although aniline dyes were the discovery of an Englishman, has fallen into the hands of Germany simply because of the policy of free imports, which allowed the product of cheap German labor to replace that of the better-paid British workingman.

Think of it! Oh, ye gods! The cheap labor of protected Germany taking the work away from the better-paid labor of free-trade England. But in the next issue, or possibly somewhere else in this issue, of this organ—or, rather, oracle—of protection, we will be told about the high wages paid under protection and the low wages paid where that fetish is not worshiped.

The Payne tariff law could not produce the necessary revenue under existing conditions any more than the present one can. Such a claim is preposterous. How could we get a revenue from imports that were not imported? What difference to the revenue whether the tariff was 1 per cent or 100 per cent on goods that never came? Would a high tariff on the goods carried enable the ship that carried them to successfully evade the enemy's cruisers?

The gentleman from Alabama estimates that the falling off in revenue from customhouse taxes during the next year will amount to about $125,000,000. It is claimed that this is too high an estimate, as shown by the imports for last month—August—which fell only about $8,000,000 below the receipts for August, 1913. But last month does not furnish a fair test.

War was declared by Germany on the 1st day of August. But many ships were then on the way with cargoes, and, no doubt, most of them reached their destination. Then, again, England did not declare war till the 5th, and it was her entrance into the quarrel which did most to interfere with ocean commerce. And, again, it took all the belligerents some time to get their ships of war in action, so as to sweep the seas of merchantmen, so that the actual falling off in revenue for August does not mark the fair average loss for subsequent months. There is another reason for the slight loss in August which must not be overlooked. Many importers allow the imported goods to remain for some time in the Government or bonded warehouses at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and other ports. The duty is not paid on these goods while they remain in the warehouse; it is only paid when they are taken out.

Thus the duty was paid in August on many goods imported long before, and the receipts for that month made larger than the actual imports justified.

The conditions which confront us are extraordinary. The world has never before witnessed anything like them. Great world responsibility may be thrown upon us at any moment. The industrial or financial exigencies of the situation may at any moment throw grave national responsibilties upon the Government.

We should be able to meet any of these with a full purse. We are well able to pay this additional tax. We hope not to have to pay it very long; but whether we do or not, we should act in time and place the Nation's Treasury and the Nation's credit above all questions of fear or doubt.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it comes with peculiarly bad grace from such a standpatter as my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to be complaining of this measure on the ground that it imposes a burden of $1 per capita on the poor man of this country, or $5 to each family. Especially does that complaint come with bad grace from that side, who have for the 50 years of their practically continued power been delighted to lay heavy burdens on the great masses of the people by their exorbitant tariff taxes. But I wish to call attention to the fact that this measure does not tax in any sensible degree the great masses of the people.

This bill calls for a tax on beer, raising $32,500,000. I know that some of the poor people use beer, but it is classed as a luxury, and is an unnecessary expenditure. Six million dollars is raised from a tax on wine and $20,000,000 is raised from gasoline. None of those taxes in any sensible degree touch the poor, and they amount to $58,500,000 in the aggregate. And then a tax amounting to ten millions is levied upon banks, brokers, custom brokers, theaters, and so forth, making $68,500,000 thus far, and practically none of it has yet touched the poor. And after that there is a revenue tax on tobacco running to $5,000,000, making in all $73,500,000, and then a tax on telephone messages where the charge is 15 cents or over, and that does not touch the masses. Then there is a tax of 1 cent each on telegrams. The average man may sometimes pay this telephone and telegram tax, from which $1,500,000 is expected. This makes $75,000,000, of which, I think, we can safely say not 1 per cent will be paid by the poor man. Then we come to the stamp tax. Stamp taxes are imposed on the following items:

Bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness, etc., for each $100	$0.05
Certificates of stock, original issue, for each $100	.05
Certificates of stock, transfers, for each $100	.02
Sales of products at exchanges, for each $100	.01
Promissory notes, for each $100	.02
Express receipts	.01
Freight receipts or domestic bills of lading	.01
Bonds of indemnity and bonds not otherwise specified	.50
Certificate of profits, for each $100	.02
Certificate of damage	.25
Certificates not otherwise specified	.10
Broker's contract	.10
Conveyances, exceeding $100, for each $500	.50
Entry of goods at customhouse (according to value)	$0.25–1.00
Entry for withdrawal of goods from customs bonded warehouse	.50
Insurance:
Life, on each $100 of the amount insured	.08
Marine, inland, and fire, on each $1 of premium charged	.0½
Casualty, fidelity, and guaranty, on each $1 of premium charged	.0½
Mortgages and conveyance in trust, exceeding $1,000, for each $1,500	.25
Passage ticket (according to value)	1.00–5.00
Power of attorney to vote	.10
Power of attorney to sell	.25
Protest of note, check, etc	.25
Sleeping and parlor car tickets	.02

Study the list carefully and there are few, very few of the items on which the poor man will pay. It might be that the tax on conveyances would be paid by the home buyer, but in my country when we sell a tract of land the seller pays for the execution of the deed, and all expenses connected with it. He sells for so much an acre, and this was one tax collected under the McKinley war revenue act in 1898 that the poor man never did pay. You can read over the whole sum up of taxes provided by this bill and scarcely 1 per cent will fall upon the poor. The truth is that this tax measure falls upon the rich, and that is the reason why gentlemen on that side are so strongly opposed to it. They have been so used to taxing the poor that they view with special horror any measure that might tax the rich. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There is one thing further, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to call attention to. Gentlemen say it was justifiable to pass an internal-revenue tax measure to meet the conditions at the time of the Spanish-American War, but they see no conditions arising from this European war calling for the same action now by the Government. Why, when the Spanish-American War occurred it was a gentle breeze, so far as it affected the general conditions—commercial and industrial—of this country, as compared with the storm that this great war in Europe is producing and its effect upon the industrial conditions of the people of the United States and upon the revenues of the Treasury. Gentlemen talk to you about the Underwood tariff and revenue bill, and profess to believe that the diminution of our revenues has been caused by defects in that law. They know that, whatever the tariff law, you can get no revenue from its operation when there are no imports coming in, and they know that this war has had the effect of very largely cutting off our imports, and that under any tariff law the revenues of the Government would to-day be so diminished that other means would have to be found to supply the lost tariff taxes. But, then, they say we ought to raise all the added revenue we need by increasing the income tax. They know that such a tax would bear no immediate fruit, and that our need of revenue is now, and not next year. Does it not seem strange to hear the Republican Party now urging increased income taxes when during their nearly 50 years' lease of power they refused to levy an income tax at all? We, the Democrats, put the income tax in the Constitution and on the statute books, and we are not afraid to use it when it can be used. The Republicans do not want an income tax; they just want to find fault, justly or unjustly, with the bill we have presented. They are playing politics and trying to fool the people. Gentlemen here to-day on the other side even urge that we issue bonds rather than levy this tax, and they shed crocodile tears over taxing the poor. God save the mark. The country will see through their flimsy excuses and pretenses to their political hypocrisy.

The man who refuses to see conditions as they are to-day, who professes to believe that the Underwood revenue law, and not the European war, is the cause of the deficit in the Treasury, I think, does not even fool himself. He is not equal to the ostrich. That bird, it is said, in the open desert will stick its head in the sand and actually believe that all its feathers are hidden. If the Republican Party is equal to the ostrich, and does actually believe that it is hidden behind its criticisms and carpings, then, during this campaign, at least, that party ought to be known as the G. O. P., meaning thereby the Great Ostrich Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, nations as well as individuals pass through crises. The world is now passing through one of the greatest known to history. The reason America has not been drawn into that dreadful bloody contest in the East is because of the statesmanship of the man who now occupies the White House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] While he was planning for the best interests of this country during the Mexican war, you on the other side of the aisle often ridiculed his administration with "watchful waiting"; while he was struggling to save the lives and property of American citizens by standing neutral in that war, you on the other side of the aisle stood on the floor of this House and bitterly denounced his course and sought to inflame the minds of the public against him; while he has been struggling since his inauguration to enact wise and constructive legislation for the interests of the many, you on the other side of the aisle have been yelling "panic," and have done everything within your power to bring about depression in the business of the country; while he has been industriously laboring for the progress and prosperity of all, you have been appealing by your speeches on the floor of this House to the prejudice and selfishness of the rich in order that you might create a panic in this country, hoping thereby that you would be able to carry the next election; while he has been practicing statesmanship, you have been playing politics; and when his course in national affairs developed into the highest order of statesmanship and the people of the country, regardless of political affiliations, applauded him throughout the land, your guns were silenced until this revenue measure came in.

The President knows that a revenue measure is unpopular. He knows that an election will take place in every State in the Union within the next 40 days. He knows that the enemies to his administration will use this measure as a campaign document and that it will be used by designing politicians for the purpose of appealing not to the patriotism of the American voter, but to his selfishness, and in standing for a revenue measure just before the election, the President says to the country and to the world that the welfare of America is greater than the welfare of any party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] His management of national affairs is a wonderful exhibition of the highest order of statesmanship, and to-day he stands first among the heads of nations. You, on the other side of the aisle, have filibustered for the purpose of hindering and obstructing his plans and policies and, in my opinion, when you go before the people of this country during the remaining few days of the campaign, preaching from the stump the shortcomings of Mr. Wilson, you will receive an icy reception. One of the Republican politicians in the late campaign in Maine told me that every time he mentioned the name of Woodrow Wilson it was followed by a tremendous applause, and in voting against this measure with a view of manufacturing fresh campaign material you will find that the people will regard it as an effort to play cheap politics and not the result of a conscientious conviction.

Mr. Speaker, I would rather discharge my duty as a public servant in Congress for one term than to be in office 20 years playing politics the greater part of the time. Duty often calls upon men in high places for decisive action, and it requires courage to stand firm in the discharge of that duty, regardless of consequences. That is what Woodrow Wilson is doing to-day, and the fact that he is brave enough to discharge his whole duty, regardless of the consequences to his party, will go down in history as one of the greatest deeds of one of the greatest Presidents. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

During the last fiscal year, under the Underwood tariff law, we raised $10,000,000 more than was raised for any year since the Spanish-American War; and were it not for the danger now confronting us on account of the European war we would have plenty of money to run the Government. But the President says it is best to be on the safe side. He says it is necessary to pass this bill, and I will vote for it, because I love my country and I will not stand against its best interest.

Mr. Speaker, there are some things in this bill which I would not have placed in it if I had prepared it. [Applause on the Republican side.] But legislation must necessarily be a compromise to a greater or lesser extent, and the Member who can not go into a legislative body and there make up a bill the best that can be made under the circumstances and then march up boldly and vote for it is not, in my opinion, equal to the occasion. We can not always have just what we want, especially in a legislative body, and the man who is always trying to put the burdens on the shoulders of others without being willing to share a portion of them himself must indeed be selfish, and is not worthy to be the representative of a free people.

Mr. Speaker, I hail Woodrow Wilson as the strongest man in public life and the greatest statesman in the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

tucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker: An emergency revenue bill is now before this body for consideration, but more discussion has been devoted to the Underwood Act and to the former Payne Act than has been given to this bill. I had long ago reached the conclusion that the Payne Act was beyond discussion except in the States of Utah and Vermont.

We heard yesterday afternoon the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] himself extolling the great virtues of his act and telling how much better it was than the Underwood Act, under which we are now living. That, I thought, was a question which had been buried so deep by the American people that even its author would never attempt to resurrect it for discussion again. In the report of the minority of the Ways and Means Committee, which I assume was written by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], I find this sentence:

> If we should defeat this bill, we would then compel the administration to economize or to resort to a bond issue.

Everybody knows that the Republican Party has never wished to economize in the expenditure of public money, and everybody knows that the Republican Party would like to place the Democratic Party in the position of resorting to a bond issue rather than pass a bill which places a tax upon luxuries and not upon the necessaries of life.

If the Democratic Party were to resort to a bond issue, it would finally be paid by taxing the necessaries of life. When the money that the Government now needs is paid, it will be paid, not by taxing necessaries of life, but by taxing the luxuries of life.

The first item which we have in the bill now before us is to increase the tax on beer from $1 to $1.50 a barrel. That does not increase the tax upon all the families of this country, but it increases the tax only upon the families of those who use beer. If beer is to be taxed at all, it can stand more tax than is imposed by this bill. If beer were taxed according to the alcohol that is in it, in the same proportion that whisky is taxed upon the alcohol that is in it, each barrel of beer would be taxed about $2.79 a barrel instead of $1.50 a barrel as is provided in this bill. Some votes are going to be cast against this bill by gentlemen who represent the wine districts of California, because they say that a tax of 100 per cent on wines will confiscate the product; yet for years and years the production of whisky has continued while paying a tax between 400 per cent and 500 per cent, according to the price of grain.

Some gentlemen will vote against this bill because it proposes to raise revenue at all upon intoxicants. Others will vote against it for other reasons. The opponents of this bill seem to prefer to tax bread instead of beer. While opposing this increase of tax upon beer, they are at the same time, without saying so in so many words, advocating a tax upon bread.

In the second paragraph of this bill I find a tax upon wine. Those who oppose the bill are more in favor of a tax upon swine than upon wine. The swine product is the pork which the laborer must have upon which to do a good day's work.

The third section of this bill is that which taxes gasoline. We all recall that only a year or two ago the Republicans stood almost to a man in favor of a tax upon farm implements and farm wagons. They seem now to prefer a tax upon those implements rather than to place 2 cents a gallon tax upon gasoline that is used in automobiles.

In the fourth section of the bill there is a tax upon the capital stock of banks. The gentlemen who oppose that seem to prefer to impose a tax upon the stocks of wearing apparel in the clothing stores.

The broker is to be taxed. What tax can be more equitable than that? He is the middle man through whose hands farm products pass and who really gets the big profit. It is better that the tax should be upon the broker than upon the farmer.

Lower down in the same paragraph the Republicans oppose taxing pawnbrokers. But no one has ever heard a Republican lift his voice in opposition to the taxing of the pawn. I say, let us tax the pawnbroker rather than the pawned property of the poor man.

In the fourth section of the bill another class of brokers is taxed $20. They are the brokers in goods, wares, produce, and merchandise. The Republicans seem to prefer to place tax on produce and merchandise, as was done in the Payne bill, rather than to put an occupation tax on the broker as is done in this bill.

The Republicans oppose section 5 of this bill which puts an occupation tax on the customhouse broker. Yet they are in favor of a tax upon every article which goes through the customhouse.

This bill proposes a tax upon idle amusements, but the Republicans seem to prefer to tax instead everything that goes into the workshop. This bill proposes a tax upon circuses, but the Republicans seem to prefer to tax the hay and peanuts fed to the elephant. It proposes a tax upon other public exhibitions, one of which is baseball. When the free-lumber question was up the Republicans proposed a tax upon lumber, and they are now insisting that lumber should be taxed. When we ask them to tax the proprietor of a baseball park they say "No," and insist that the boys pay a tax on the knotholes in the pine-board fence through which they must look.

The Republicans object to taxing the proprietor of a billiard room.

They also object to the tobacco broker paying a tax.

In the Democratic report upon this bill it is stated, and it is not denied, that import duties will fall off $125,000,000 in the next year. The Republicans prefer to levy this $125,000,000 upon the necessaries of life. By this bill it is proposed to collect $105,000,000 of that amount without putting a single dollar of it upon the necessaries of life. Which do you prefer?

The Democrats prefer to tax the gasoline which goes into the automobile. We prefer that kind of a tax rather than to tax the necessaries of life.

A gentleman said a few moments ago, in referring to the speech made by my colleague [Mr. SHERLEY], that perhaps he was undertaking to dodge the imposition of a tax upon whisky. I have just said that whisky is paying a tax of between 400 per cent and 500 per cent. Some would vote against this bill if it imposed a tax upon whisky at all, while others would vote against it if it imposed more. Answering the suggestion made in a speech a short time ago by the same gentleman, in which he intimated, with as little truth, that perhaps I, too, was interested in whisky, I wish to say that I have never been interested either in the manufacture or sale of whisky, and that thus far in life I have never swallowed a drop of either whisky or beer. [Applause.]

Republicans are to-day talking about economy.

I do not now recall a yea-and-nay vote during this Congress upon the passage of any appropriation bill except that which was had on January 12, 1914, on the District appropriation bill. Upon that roll call there were 36 votes against the passage of the bill. Among them were the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I and a number of others voted against that appropriation bill, because we were unwilling for our constituents at home to be taxed to pay half the taxes of the people in the District of Columbia. However, the three gentlemen whom I have just named, together with a few other Republicans, voted against the passage of the bill because it did not appropriate more money and because the bill required the owners of abutting property to pay part of the cost of the building of streets. The three gentlemen just named have, during to-day and yesterday, inveighed vigorously against the alleged extravagance of a Democratic Congress. I can not now recall a single appropriation that any one of the three of them has ever voted against, except the District bill just referred to, and in that case their objection was because the bill was a saving to the Public Treasury, and not because of extravagance. For instance, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was very active when one appropriation bill was up, in which there were some provisions relating to the District of Columbia.

When, during this Congress, appropriations were sought with which to build "convenience stations," the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] made a desperate effort in favor of an expenditure of $10,000 for each of two convenience stations.

Finally, when it was proposed to reduce the amount from $10,000 to $3,500 for each of these convenience stations, the gentleman from Wyoming spoke of them as "miserable little shacks."

In my section of the country when a man has a residence worth $3,500 he not only considers himself well off, but he really is. He would not think of expending more than $50 for a "convenience station" upon his premises.

In the tirades of the gentleman from Wyoming against alleged extravagance he must not forget that he considers $10,000 for a "convenience station" as modest, and that $3,500 for a "convenience station" will build nothing but a "miserable little shack."

I see gentlemen sitting before me who have clapped blisters upon their hands as big as walnuts in applauding Republican reference to Democratic extravagance, while not one of them has ever been known to vote against a bill which took money out of the Treasury.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] in a speech made to-day said that the imports under the Underwood tariff bill had increased, but that the tax from that source had decreased. That statement is true; and, to me, it is a matter of real congratulation. That means nothing more nor less than that the rate of taxation upon the necessaries of life which were imported from other countries was decreased by the Underwood bill.

The first day that the Underwood bill went into effect the tax paid at the New York customhouse alone upon clothing, blankets, and other such necessaries of life amounted to $10,000,000 less than if that tax had been paid the day before under the Payne-Aldrich bill. That means nothing more and nothing less than that those goods were distributed among the people of the United States at a decrease in price to them of $10,000,000. In other words, if the Payne-Aldrich law had continued in force that amount of $10,000,000 would have been imposed as a tax upon the people of the United States.

During this debate it has been stated several times that the tax upon goods imported from other countries is constantly falling off, and it is predicted that the tax upon goods which, under ordinary circumstances, would come from the European countries which are now at war will fall off a hundred and twenty-five million dollars during the next year.

There is one piece of consolation about that matter, and it is this: The people will still have the hundred and twenty-five million dollars, which, if the tax had been gathered, they would not now have.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has stated, and many times reiterated, that the Payne-Aldrich bill would have realized more money than the Underwood bill produces. That is true; and because it is true the Payne bill has been repealed and a bill imposing less tax has been passed in its stead.

The people of this country must remember that every dollar which the Payne-Aldrich bill would have taken from them, and which the Underwood bill does not take from them, is a dollar left in their hands. The argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is that his bill taxes the people more than does the Underwood bill. I admit that to be true; and, in consequence, I am an advocate of the Underwood bill. In other words, I am for the Underwood bill as against the Payne bill because the Underwood bill levies the lesser tax upon the people.

The Federal Government is now in need of money. It is claimed that if the Payne law were in force ample money would now be in the Treasury without levying this special war tax. But it would have been derived from taxes collected at the customhouses upon the necessaries of life; while, as I have said, the bill which is now before us will collect the needed amount from beer, wine, gasoline, brokers who deal in stocks and bonds, pawnbrokers who charge usurious rates of interest, commercial brokers who may be termed the "middlemen" between the producer and the consumer, customhouse brokers, theaters and other places of idle amusement, circuses, billiard rooms, and tobacco dealers other than the grower.

Every Republican speech made during yesterday and to-day says that if the Payne-Aldrich bill were still in force there would now be plenty of money in the Treasury, but they must admit that it would have been derived from taxes upon articles such as clothing, blankets, shoes, and other articles of necessity.

No one can say that the present bill proposes to raise revenue by a tax upon any of the necessaries of life. I believe that the general masses of the people of this country have self-interest and sense enough to prefer that a tax be imposed upon luxuries rather than upon the necessaries of life.

Every fair man is bound to admit that the revenues at our customhouses have fallen off materially because of the war in Europe. Several Republicans have said in the course of this debate that that was not true, because the seas are still open to commerce. Last year nearly $120,000,000 was gathered in tax upon articles which came from Germany alone. Is there a man upon the floor of this Chamber who is reckless enough to say that the seas are now open for German vessels between Germany and the United States? Does not every man here know that Germany can not afford to send out a valuable cargo from that country to this, for fear that that cargo will be captured either by French or English vessels? It is well known to every school child in this country that France and England are now masters of the Atlantic Ocean, through which German products must come to this country if they come at all. Besides this, their mills and factories are closed. All the men have gone to the war. In addition, what goods they have for export can not be gotten to the coast for shipment.

There are seven countries which are now at war in Europe. From the imports from those countries last year we collected, in round figures, $386,000,000. That amount is falling off every day. No man living can say to what extent it will fall off, because no man can tell how long the war will last or what other complications will arise. It is, however, conservatively estimated that during next year our revenues upon imports from those seven countries will fall off $125,000,000.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] only a few moments ago stated that this bill is the result of hysterics and fright. He said that when the first gun was fired in Europe, during the early part of August, Woodrow Wilson and the Democratic Party took fright, although that shot was 4,000 miles away.

I wish to admit that we and our President did take "fright," and that "fright" has grown since we have learned of the terrible carnage and the destruction to commerce which has followed that shot. It is well for us that our President so fully appreciates the situation that he stands in dread and fear for the welfare of the American people just at a time when there is waging the most extensive and the bloodiest war the world has ever known.

Woodrow Wilson's "fear" in this uncertain situation is but simple love for the American people. With him "fear" and "solicitude" are synonymous. If he, in these perilous days, did not "fear" for, was not solicitous and apprehensive about, the continued peace of our country and the safety of our people, we, too, would be engaged in war—first with Mexico and then with some great power in Europe.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITZHENRY].

[Mr. FITZHENRY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

[Mr. CLINE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

[Mr. BLACKMON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, If this were a bill to increase taxes, it would be difficult for me to support it. But it is not a bill to increase taxes. It is a bill to shift taxes from a failing and uncertain source to a source at once certain and unfailing.

The pretense of the critics of this emergency proposition that it is made necessary by the failure of the Underwood revenue bill to supply the Treasury is as false as the other pretense that this bill involves an addition to the burden of taxation. We are here providing for a deficit occasioned by a decline in customs receipts. This deficit is estimated at about $100,000,000 for the current fiscal year. That is the estimated loss due to failing import receipts. The paralysis of commerce following on the heels of European war has brought about this result, and it could not be otherwise, even were the Payne-Aldrich tariff in operation at this hour.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Is it not a fact that if the Payne-Aldrich law was in force the deficit would be very much greater?

Mr. BAILEY. Very much greater, indeed.

The imports from which a revenue has been derived at the customhouses have very largely ceased, and we can not expect a return to normal while war continues to rage and industry abroad in consequence languishes. In all probability it will be months, if not years, before we can reasonably hope for the return of normal conditions in our foreign commerce.

Meanwhile the Government must go on. Its needs must be met. Its functions must be discharged. Its obligations must be observed. Its credit must remain unchallenged. All its myriad activities must be sustained and its vast machinery kept in order. How can this be done if its revenues be inadequate? How shall it preserve its standing and maintain its dignity if it shall be reduced through failing customs receipts to a state of indigence?

I do not say nor would I have it understood that this measure is my ideal, even for the emergency we are facing. Personally, I would prefer more direct methods than those embodied in the bill under consideration. In fact, when the need for funds to compensate the losses due to failing customs receipts began seriously to be discussed I prepared and introduced a bill providing for a supertax on incomes of $20,000 and over, but when President Wilson came before us with the statement that the situation was so acute that to wait on relief would be imprudent I decided to forego any effort to press my own measure and to allow expediency to determine my course.

And the expedient thing at this juncture is not so far removed from the right thing as might at first appear. At the worst, the taxes provided for in this bill are an improvement on the tariff taxes which they are intended to replace. They fall upon the people less obliquely. They will be less capable of concealment. Few of them will accumulate in volume between the point of assessment and the point of liquidation. They will come more nearly staying where put than most indirect taxes; and for this reason they are less odious from an economic standpoint than those indirect taxes on commodities which our Republican friends lament.

Mr. Speaker, let me digress for a moment to note that gentlemen on the other side have scoffed at the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] with reference to his miscalculation of the money-raising quality of his income tax. He thought it would bring in $70,000,000. It has actually yielded something less than $35,000,000. But it does not seem to have occurred to his critics on the other side of the aisle that the mistake of the brilliant Tennesseean was in underestimating the capacity to falsify their returns of those malefactors of great wealth who are chiefly supporters of Republicanism. The incomes were there to yield the $70,000,000, but they happened, in considerable part, to belong to men of extremely flexible conscience.

No one more than myself can deplore the circumstances which have conspired to make this tax bill necessary. The war in Europe was not of our making. It is true that we may in a degree have promoted it by our stupid and mischievous policy of preparedness, which gave stimulus to a similar policy in Europe. But in no proper sense can we be charged with immediate responsibility for the monstrous tragedy now being enacted on the blood-soaked soil of the Continent. Yet we must suffer some of its horrible penalties. We can not escape paying part of the price. We are paying it in ruined markets, in vanishing trade, in paralyzed industry, in unsettled credits, in disturbed finance, in decreased customs receipts, in hundreds of direct and indirect ways which make for unrest and uneasiness.

Should we add to this unrest and this uneasiness at this time by calling in the funds distributed among the national banks for crop-moving purposes? This has been suggested and urged by our Republican friends. But would they themselves resort to that were the responsibility theirs? Think of the possible results. These deposits are now absorbed in loans which it would be necessary to call were the Treasury to draw back the funds held by the banks. What would this mean to your constituents and mine? Might it not very well mean sacrifices of a most serious and far-reaching sort? Might it not mean keen distress in some quarters and possible ruin in others? Might it not indeed bring us to the very verge of a great financial disaster, which we may readily avert by resorting to another means of meeting a most unfortunate emergency?

In this business, as in other matters with which we have been called upon to deal, I stand with Woodrow Wilson rather than with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I stand with him in this as I stood with him in the fight for an equalization of tax burdens, for a curb on Wall Street cupidity, for international good faith in the matter of canal tolls, and for all the other big things with which his name is indissolubly associated; and I think in thus standing with him I am doing what the emergency calls for and what my people would have me do. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is not a bill to increase the rate of taxation; it is a bill designed to change the source of taxation to meet the emergency for which we are not responsible, but which was forced upon us by the European war, the effect of which is world-wide on trade and commerce, thereby affecting one source of our revenue, namely, the customs revenue. We have three sources of revenue from which we derive the funds to support and maintain the Federal Government. One of these sources is customs revenue or tariff taxes, levied on goods shipped into our country from foreign countries and collected at the United States customhouses. Another source is what is known as internal-revenue taxes, which is a certain tax levied upon goods manufactured or articles produced or sold, or on legal or commercial transactions in our own country and collected by the collectors of internal revenue throughout the country. The third and last source is an income tax, which was written into law and put into operation by the present Congress, which levies a tax upon incomes above a certain fixed amount, and by and through these channels the funds are collected to meet the expenses of running the Government of the United States.

The first two sources named levies a tax on goods consumed by the people, which, of course, added to the price of the goods, will ultimately be paid by the people who consume them, and it matters not whether the tax is levied on goods coming from foreign countries or goods which are manufactured in this country, it must be paid by the people who consume the goods, and means the same to them in dollars and cents regardless of whether the goods are produced at home or abroad. The third and last source, the income tax, does not levy a tax upon goods consumed by the people, but upon the incomes of the wealthier classes of the people, and I will say here that the Democratic Party advocating, as it always has, that the wealth of the country should bear its just proportion of the burden of taxation, fought for many years to secure the passage of an income-tax law, which it succeeded in enacting into law early in the present Congress and which contributes many millions of dollars per year to our Federal Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, the question of taxation is a delicate question with which to deal. A tax in any form is usually unpopular and regarded as a necessary evil; and if this were a bill to increase taxes, it, too, would be an unpopular bill. But it is not the purpose of this bill to increase taxes, but to shift the tax temporarily from customs receipts to internal receipts. This necessity is brought about by reason of the fact that the countries of the world from which we secure our imports in the main are now engaged in the bloodiest and most far-reaching war known to civilized man—a war of such magnitude and horror that it has staggered humanity, pauperized industries, and caused rivers to run red with human blood. On the one side are engaged Austria and Germany and on the other side are engaged Servia, Belgium, France, England, Russia, and Japan. Ten million soldiers face each other in deadly conflict, fighting with the greatest implements of war that the world has ever produced; fighting on the land, on the seas, under the seas, and in the air, raining terror from the skies upon even the noncombatants; and the able-bodied men of each country are rapidly enlisted or being drafted into the military service by their respective Governments to supplement the daily losses in the lines of battle. With this state of affairs existing the business of these countries is paralyzed. Their farms are deserted and their factories are closed. The exportation of their manufactured products to foreign markets is rapidly depleting to such an extent that other countries which have collected a portion of their revenues from customs levied on goods coming from these countries now engaged in war must collect same from other sources, for to the extent that the importation of dutiable goods decreases to that extent our revenue decreases.

During the last fiscal year we imported from Austria-Hungary, $15,232,645; Belgium, $21,324,417; France, $95,445,062; Germany, $119,383,978; Russia, $2,420,602; Servia, $9,627; United Kingdom (Great Britain), $132,173,220; making a total of $385,989,551 on which we collected approximately $125,811,000 customs revenue.

With present conditions in the warring countries and the present falling off in our imports from them, due to conditions there, it is reasonable to assume that our customs revenue for the next 12 months will decrease $100,000,000. We must therefore turn to some other source to raise revenue sufficient to supply the deficit until the emergency shall have passed and normal trade conditions are restored; at which time this measure will be dispensed with. And, Mr. Speaker, in the face of this situation the question presents itself as to what sources shall we turn. Shall we issue and sell bonds? No; we should not resort to that course, for it would ultimately add an increased burden of taxation to the American people to the extent of the accrued interest on the bonds. Nor can we meet the present emergency by an increase in the income-tax rate, for the reason that the revenues derived from the income tax is not available until June 30 of each year, and the deficit caused by our diminishing customs duties must be met before that time. Then if we do not issue bonds we must shift our collection of customs taxes to internal-revenue taxes, and in shifting to internal-revenue taxes we should do what this bill proposes to do and will do, so far as it applies to goods and wares, we should tax the luxuries of life and leave free from taxation the necessaries of life that are consumed daily by the toiling men and women of the land.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not a new proposition nor a departure from long-established precedent. Our country and other countries have always adjusted their revenues to meet conditions in time of war. In 1898 Congress passed a similar bill to meet conditions incident to the Spanish-American War, identical in part with this bill. But some gentleman on the other side of the aisle said a moment ago that conditions at this time do not compare with conditions at that time; that that bill was passed for the reason that we, ourselves, were then engaged in war, and are now at peace with the world. Why, Mr. Speaker, that contention is preposterous and absurd, and the gentleman knows it. Conditions are worse now than they were during the Spanish-American War, so far as our customs revenues are concerned, for the reason that during the Spanish-American War the importation of foreign goods to our country was not disturbed. They continued to come to our customhouses, and we continued to collect the revenue from them. But to-day the importation of dutiable goods has practically ceased, thereby cutting off our customs revenue. Yes; we are at peace with the world, and glad that we are. But while that is true, gentlemen should not be so blind to reason as to contend that the European war does not affect our revenue and our trade and commerce.

Mr. Speaker, I have followed this debate with a great deal of interest, and I must say with some degree of amusement at the arguments advanced on the other side; and I must confess that I am unable to decide from the speeches which have been delivered on that side, whether there is a division in the party across the aisle on this question or whether its members are engaged in an organized effort to create Republican campaign literature suitable for each congressional district of the United States, so divided and constructed that it will serve the purpose in the various localities of the country and meet the peculiar demands of each candidate of their party in his district. I am, however, inclined to believe that the latter is the correct conclusion to draw. Some of the speakers on that side contend that there is no need of this legislation, that the Underwood tariff law is producing sufficient revenue to meet the demands of the Government, and will continue to do so, regardless of the war, and that this bill is unwarranted and indefensible. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that that is the kind of speeches they will frank out into districts where all the Democrats and most of the Republicans are satisfied with the Underwood tariff law, in the hope that they may create the impression that this bill means an additional tax. Then, others say that additional revenue is necessary, and that the necessity is wholly chargeable to the Underwood tariff law and that this law has proven its insufficiency to raise revenues to meet the running expenses of the Government. I assume that that character of speeches will be franked out by the Republican national committee to the districts that advocate a protective tariff, in an effort to rekindle and arouse the spirit of tariff protection to a sufficient degree to divert the attention of the voter from the achievements of the present administration. So there are two distinct lines of contradictory argument on that side. Then comes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and says that this measure is Republican doctrine, and that as soon as the storm clouds arose that the administration was forced to take shelter under a Republican law, for this bill is in the main a reenactment of the Republican war tax bill of 1898. Then following close upon his heels comes the never-tiring orator from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and vociferously avers that the bill is not in any degree a Republican policy, but that it is the newest thing under the sun; and I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. GREEN'S speech will be franked out to those sections of the country where the Republican revenue law of 1898 was unpopular, and that the speech so eloquently delivered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will go to the stand-pat districts where new ideas are looked upon with disfavor.

Mr. Speaker, my opinion that these gentlemen are playing partisan politics is based first upon a statement that I heard from a very reliable source a few days ago and, second, upon the performances in evidence. I was advised a few days ago by a reliable gentleman that the Republican Party would not get out a campaign textbook this year, but would make its fight by franking out to the different districts of the country such campaign documents as are most suitable in each particular section. So, from the statement received and the widely diversified speeches that are coming from even the leaders of that side, I think it morally certain that they in their desperation are exerting their efforts to manufacture campaign dope to meet their strenuous needs throughout the length and breadth of the land. But in this enlightened age, when the world reads, when 60 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD go into each congressional district and the weekly and daily papers and magazines go into almost every home, the people can not and will not be deceived by such acrobatic performances. We are frank to admit that some of these gentlemen are first-rate political acrobats, but we are unwilling to concede that they can ride two different horses in opposite directions at the same time and convince the people that both horses are going in the same direction. But inasmuch as they realize how scarce they are of campaign material at the present time I do not wonder at their efforts to manufacture same to meet the emergency which the splendid and wonderful achievements of the present administration have thrust upon them. But I want to serve notice upon them now that their efforts will be in vain, for the people have not forgotten the failure of that party to keep its platform promises in 1908, which led to its utter disorganization in 1912. Neither are the people in harmony with their opposition to the President's policies through which we are to-day at peace with the world. Nor are they overlooking the achievements of the present administration and its faithful performance of its campaign promises in 1912, upon which I desire to make a few brief observations.

We promised the country in 1912 that if we were returned to power we would repeal the Payne-Aldrich tariff law which placed the heavy burdens of taxation upon the necessaries of life and the cheaper commodities which are consumed by the poor. We have kept that promise. We passed the Underwood tariff bill which places upon the free list the prime necessities of life, including the principal food products, shoes, farming implements of every description with which the farmer must till his soil, and barbed wire with which he fences his fields.

We have also placed upon the statute books a banking and currency law which takes the control of the finances of the country out of the hands of Wall Street and places it under the supervision and control of the Federal Government, thereby depriving the powerful Money Trust of its power to create a financial panic such as the country suffered in 1907. We have passed antitrust measures, which will soon become laws, to prevent the capitalization of watered stock in great corporations, on which the people heretofore have paid enormous profits to the favored few, and by the same laws we have provided for Federal regulation and control of monopolies, to the end that they can no longer monopolize the sale of commodities and the prices at which they sell, to the detriment and everlasting burden of the consuming public. These laws have been demanded by the country for many years, but previous attempts to enact them have been defeated by the great special interests, who have for a half century played a potent part in national legislation, but who have been driven from the halls of legislation by the present administration. We have enacted many other valuable laws since the beginning of this administration, but I shall not take the time to refer to them here.

But I can not close without making some reference to the foreign policies of President Wilson, which have received the unanimous support of the Democratic Members of Congress. These policies led to a satisfactory settlement of the differences between the United States and Japan incident to the California land laws. These policies averted armed conflict with Mexico, which would have cost us millions of money and possibly incalculable toll of human lives. In brief, it can be truly said that had it not been for the wisdom, patriotism, forbearance, and peace-loving principles of Woodrow Wilson and the loyal and unswerving manner in which the Democratic Members of Congress have held up his hands in handling the Mexican situation your sons and my sons might to-day be numbered with the countless dead on a Mexican battle field; and further still, while the horrors of war, the shedding of blood, and the bankrupting of the treasuries of the leading countries of Europe are going on, our President, supported by a Congress in harmony with his policies, continues to steer our ship of state in the channels of peace, to the credit and the glory and the honor of the Nation.

But while the President was working out a solution to those delicate questions which threatened to involve our country in war gentlemen on the other side of the aisle continued to do as they are doing now—assault him from every quarter and urge intervention in Mexico. But the President, supported by the Democratic Members and the less partisan Republican Members of both branches of Congress, stood like the rock of Gibraltar in advocacy of peace, and as a result of same he is to-day recognized throughout the civilized world as the earth's greatest champion of peace. His course is approved by a grateful people, who are in sympathy with his policies, and the wisdom, the judgment, and the patriotism of the American people will not permit a change in the National Congress at this critical time, but they will show their appreciation of Woodrow Wilson and his efforts for peace, his championship of the people's rights, his untiring efforts to have written into law the legislation for which they had contended for many years by going to the polls on the 3d day of November and returning a Democratic Congress to hold up his hands. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express first my gratitude to the gentleman from Alabama for giving me time even though I am opposed to the bill. I thought I had time from the other side, but my understanding proved to be a mistake.

I desire to state that my opposition to the bill is based on its containing sections 1 and 2, which place taxes on intoxicating liquors.

The temperance and prohibition forces of the country are opposed to this Government's further embroiling itself with the liquor interests. I will place in the RECORD telegrams of protest:

PITTSBURGH, PA., September 24, 1914.

Hon. R. P. HOBSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Presbyterian board of temperance, representing 9,500 ministers and 1,500,000 members, asks that the Federal Government shall not compromise itself by accepting revenue from the vices of its citizens, as is the case when it takes toll from the liquor traffic, thus further intrenching said traffic. We therefore ask that the revenue bill be so amended as to eliminate this objectionable feature.

CHAS. SCANLON, General Secretary.

NEW YORK, September 23, 1914.

Hon. R. P. HOBSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The board of managers of the National Temperance Society desires you to present its emphatic protest against the proposition to increase the national revenue by any tax upon fermented and spirituous liquors which would further commit this Government to dependence for income upon the vices of its people.

JOHN W. CUMMINGS, Secretary.

PITTSBURGH, PA., September 23, 1914.

Hon. RICHMOND P. HOBSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

At a civic mass meeting held in the First Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, this evening, attended by more than 1,000 persons, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas there is a measure now before Congress to increase the national revenues; and

"Whereas it is proposed to raise a portion of said revenue by placing an additional tax upon alcoholic liquors; and

"Whereas the effect of such taxation would be further to intrench the liquor traffic by making the Federal Government more dependent upon said traffic and give the traffic more influence in national affairs; and

"Whereas the patriotic people of the United States are able and willing to support their Government without allowing it to traffic in the weaknesses and vices of her citizens: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this meeting expresses its earnest convictions that the Federal Government ought not to compromise itself by accepting revenues from the sins of its citizens, and we request that said measure be so amended as to eliminate all revenue from this objectionable source."

Minnesota Methodist Episcopal Conference of 160 ministers, representing 20,000 members, earnestly protests against Underwood bill increasing revenue on beer and domestic wines.

Bishop WM. O. SHEPHERD, President.
H. O. LEACHOUT, Secretary.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., September 24, 1914.

Hon. RICHMOND PEARSON HOBSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Hudson County Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey, in convention, representing 500 members, send protest against increased taxation on wines, beer, and whisky for revenue, and urge amendment of bill so that revenue will not be raised from the vices of the people.

HUDSON COUNTY WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

This bill is called an emergency bill—to raise revenue.

Abroad the emergency for revenue among the belligerents is far greater than it is in America, and yet not a belligerent nation has adopted taxes upon intoxicating liquors to increase their revenues and intrench the liquor interests. Instead of seeking more tax from liquor they are foregoing sorely needed revenue and seizing the opportunity to suppress the liquor traffic. In Russia they are stopping the sale of vodka. In France absinthe has been suppressed. Paris has the lid on. Germany is suppressing even beer. England has forbidden liquor to be sent to its soldiers. In the light of modern science these Governments have come to recognize that there can be no emergency that would justify any action whose effect tends to undermine the public health, to undermine the public morals, tends to undermine the national efficiency and the national vitality. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman from New York will get me some more time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I only want to ask one question. Is the gentleman in favor of taxing some other article than beer and wine?

Mr. HOBSON. I certainly am since the administration reports the need of additional revenue and the Democratic caucus has decided on that action. I hope before the bill comes back from the Senate that sections 1 and 2 will be stricken out and our party will not be put in the position of offering an affront to the temperance and prohibition forces of the Nation. The moral standing of our party is largely involved. While some individual interests may be affected for a while, the great organized liquor interests of America are gloating over the action of our party in framing this bill. Our party was long in eclipse largely because of its intimacy with slavery. We should free it from the threat of a similar intimacy now with liquor.

I do not believe that it is generally known by Members of Congress that the temperance and prohibition forces of the country do not wish this tax imposed and that they regard it as an affront. These temperance forces know that the beginning of the alliance of the National Government with the liquor interests, the beginning of the sinister power of liquor in politics, date from the internal-revenue bill of 1862, adopted in a war emergency against the protest of Abraham Lincoln. They believe that this Government ought to begin to free itself from any dependence upon a revenue raised in this way.

At the close of my very brief remarks I will print a statement on "Big facts and big conclusions about rum," setting forth the reasons for their opposition to liquor. Three facts have been definitely established about alcohol: First, that liquor is a protoplasmic poison; second, that alcohol is a habit-forming drug. There are 4,000,000 heavy drinkers in this country and 1,000,000 confirmed drunkards—5,000,000 abject slaves; more abject than any black man ever driven by a slave driver. Third, that alcohol is a universal specific cause of degeneracy. It makes a deadly attack upon the line of any creature's evolution. Whatever that line is, wherever the species is building, there is where the tearing-down effect of alcohol is deadliest. In the human species the line is in the top part of the brain, the seat of the will power, the seat of the moral sense, the consciousness of right and wrong, the consciousness of God, of duty, the impulses of good will, of charity, of love, of self-sacrifice, the test of character. Drink lowers fully 20 per cent the economic efficiency of our Nation; it must lower much more the average standard of character, thus undermining the foundation of our institutions and threatening the life of the Nation itself. Here in America 2,000 American citizens die prematurely every day between sunrise and sunrise as the result of liquor. In all the fields of war operations abroad there is not as large an average of killed. The soldier that falls on the field of battle with a bullet through his heart has no blow struck at his spiritual nature, no blow at his character, but every one of these victims of alcohol has been assaulted more in character than he has been in physical vitality. Just imagine a devilish weapon being invented that when fired at a man would not only tear the flesh, but would make a deadly wound in the character, in the soul. Then think of 2,000 American citizens falling by such weapons every day. What do you think of a party or a government joining in this slaughter of its own citizens and sharing the spoils and blood money, forsooth, because we have an emergency?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. I will print here, under the general permission, my statement on "Big facts and big conclusions about rum."

The statement is as follows:

"BIG FACTS AND BIG CONCLUSIONS ABOUT RUM.

"BIG FACT NO. 1. ALCOHOL IS A PROTOPLASMIC POISON.

"Alcohol is the waste product, the excretion, of the great scavenger, the ferment germ, and as such is a toxic poison, a poison to the ferment germs themselves, which accounts for fermentation decreasing as the alcohol increases, stopping altogether when the alcohol exceeds 12 per cent solution, and a poison to all forms of life of a higher order than the ferment germ. Since the ferment germ is practically at the foot of the scale of life, its waste product, alcohol, is a 'protoplasmic' poison, a poison to all living organisms. An organic substance in alcohol is 'preserved,' because no organisms of decomposition can penetrate the alcohol, not even the ferment germs themselves.

"This big fact, which is an undebatable finding of science, undermines the whole popular conception of 'food value' in alcohol and the idea of virtue in its 'moderate' use. This big fact is the true foundation for the up-to-date, scientific education of the public mind on this great subject. Especially should the periodical literature of the day emphasize before the reading public the fact that no matter in what quantity it is administered alcohol in proportion to the quantity is a poison to all living tissues of plants, of animals, of man.

"This is why drink affects fundamentally the health of the individual and the public.

"BIG FACT NO. 2. ALCOHOL IS A SPECIFIC CAUSE OF DEGENERACY.

"The severest attack of this poison is on protoplasm that is tender and unstable. This is why drinking is doubly harmful in children and in youth. The tenderest, most unstable tissues of a living organism are those most recently evolved in the life history of the species. In the human species the latest tissues evolved are those of the nervous system, especially the tissues of the brain, the cortex of the cerebrum. These tissues of the cortex are the seat of the center of inhibition, the seat of self-control, and the seat of those activities associated with the moral sense—in a word, the seat of character. Nature is trying to evolve a race of men of ever nobler character. Alcohol's deadliest attack is upon this seat of character. Careful observation of a sober man of high character, who takes one drink, then another, and another, will show how his self-control is affected early, his consideration for others, his delicate sense of right, his moral conceptions, the transformation being a progressive brutalization. Though restoration to the normal may seem to gradually follow when the alcohol is eliminated, yet the process oft repeated makes the effect more and more permanent, till the man passes down to a lower plane, that of the semicivilized or even the savage. This process is what causes most of the deeds of violence to be committed 'in drink,' most of the lapses from virtue in man and woman to be preceded and attended by drinking.

"This is why drink affects fundamentally the morals of the individual and of the public. As stated above, tissue in the line of evolution is the tenderest; this tissue is at the tenderest stage in the prenatal and embryonic period. Drinking, then, has an appalling effect upon the heredity of the offspring, especially the nervous system. The investigations of Dr. Laitinin, of Helsingfors, show that of children born of total-abstaining parents nine out of ten are normal, while of children born of alcoholic parents only one out of six is normal, one out of five becoming insane, one out of three epileptic, idiotic, or feeble-minded.

"BIG FACT NO. 3. ALCOHOL IS A HABIT-FORMING DRUG.

"Alcohol has the property of ether and chloroform of quickly penetrating the fatty substance that protects the nerve fibers, and by deadening these fibers prevents the messages of pain that would otherwise be sent to the brain from the poisoning. Alcohol is thus its own anesthetic, and the sensations attending drinking, instead of being those of pain, to warn the drinker, are rather pleasurable sensations of exhilaration. This is why Solomon called wine a 'mocker.'

"This big fact undermines the popular conception of alcohol's being a stimulant and removes it entirely from its old position of a general medicinal remedy. The periodical literature of the day should emphasize this fact, that, instead of being a medicine, alcohol, in poisoning the tissues of the body and the corpuscles of the blood, lowers their vitality and opens the system to the attack of diseases.

"When the tissues come out from under alcoholic anesthesia their discomfort causes a yearning to be relieved by being put again under the anesthetic. Thus the appetite for drink grows with the drinking. The will power weakens as the appetite grows; hence the drink habit. The person is no longer a normal free-will being, but is only a slave to labor for those who sell the liquor.

"Beverages of this drug are easily made and served in attractive forms and lend themselves readily to social intercourse. Thus the traffic in this attractive, deceptive, habit-forming drug is the easiest means of drawing on the substance of the people, and for generations has been exploited by a powerful trade and by the revenue policies of all the Governments of the world.

"SCOPE AND MAGNITUDE OF THE RUM PROBLEM.

"The rum problem is the biggest problem of the Nation and of humanity. It strikes deep at the root of national efficiency and prosperity. The poisoning effects of even moderate amounts of alcohol lower to a marked degree the efficiency of all kinds of labor. German experiments indicate for temperate regular drinkers a loss averaging from 25 per cent to 40 per cent. Reliable estimates place the number of drunkards in the United States at 1,000,000, the number of heavy drinkers at 4,000,000, and the number of temperate regular drinkers at 20,000,000, while unestimated millions are occasional drinkers.

"The lowered efficiency of these millions of producers represents a huge loss of productiveness to the Nation. Remembering that the retail cash liquor bill of the Nation is over $2,500,000,000 yearly, spent on a poisonous beverage, remembering rum's share of the cost of crime, pauperism, insanity, and untimely death, we see that in spite of so many railroads and industries banishing rum from their employees the economic loss from rum overshadows the losses from all other causes combined.

"Rum strikes an equally heavy blow at the national health. French investigations have demonstrated that the mortality from tuberculosis is proportional to the amount of alcohol consumed per capita, and that in France alcohol is responsible for considerably over half of all deaths from consumption. Similar investigations show that alcohol shares a serious part of the responsibility in the mortality for other diseases. A general average of life insurance records show that a young man at the age of 20 as a total abstainer will live to the average age of 65, as a temperate drinker will live to the average age of 51, and as a heavy drinker will die at the average age of 35.

"The investigations of the British interdepartmental committee on physical deterioration, of the registrar general of England, and life insurance companies' records show in general that between the ages of 25 and 65 the mortality of the people at large is 1,000 deaths every year for each 61,000, while for total abstainers it is only 560 per 61,000. This astounding difference confirms the conclusions from the disease mortality investigations that rum strikes a deadlier blow than all other causes combined at the public health. Mr. Gladstone was right when he declared drink was more destructive than war, pestilence, and famine combined.

"Rum menaces our liberties and institutions as seen above. The attack of alcohol is more severe upon character than upon economic efficiency. The consumption of about 25 gallons of alcoholic beverage per capita for every man, woman, and child means an appalling lowering of the average standard of character of the Nation. History and reason alike demonstrate that free institutions and self-government demand a relatively high average standard of character of the citizenship.

"The facilities and profits of the traffic increase with the density of population, causing degeneracy in general to grow in proportion to the growth of city life. The growing venal degenerate vote in our great cities already constitutes a grave menace, not only in municipal but also in State and National elections. With the present rate of growth of city life over country life we can not wait long; we must solve the rum problem in our generation, or else our posterity will see the degeneracy of city life overthrow the liberties of America as it overthrew the liberties of Greece and the liberties of Rome. The same degeneracy that overthrows the liberties of a free people will ultimately entail the decline and the downfall of the Nation itself.

"The rum problem for America thus involves the very law of self-preservation itself. It also involves the evolutionary law that nature imposes on a nation as on every living thing, the law of improvement. It is the degeneracy from rum more than all other causes combined that interferes with nature's efforts to insure that each generation shall rise higher and nobler than the previous. Thus from the deepest law of nature we draw our first big conclusion, that—

"IN OUR GENERATION, WE MUST SOLVE THE RUM PROBLEM.

"Before nature and nature's god, every child has a right to be well born, without any taint of degeneracy in its blood. Rum, more than all other causes, taints the heredity of the Nation and violates the rights of citizens before they are born.

"Every child has a right to be born in a home with parental love for its tender years. Rum more than all other causes combined disrupts the homes of the Nation and violates the rights of citizens in childhood.

"Every child has a right to a real education and to protection from physical and moral harm during youth.

"Rum, more than all other causes combined, drives the girls and boys into the factories and mines and upon the streets, where rum in turn will capture them as easy prey. The investigations at Bellevue Hospital of the antecedents of their thousands of drunkard patients indicate that more than two-thirds of all the drunkards had contracted their drinking habits before they were 21 years old; that 30 per cent had contracted their habits before they were 16; that 7 per cent had contracted their habits before they were 12. What a slaughter of the innocents! Investigations show that few men begin to drink after they are grown.

"A man may drink, himself, but if he is a good man he does not want his boy to grow up drinking, or his neighbor's boy. There are very few men who would debase themselves by teaching a boy to drink. Who is it that thus debauches the boys and youth in the years when they are entitled to protection? Those who profit by the practice—the liquor interests themselves—who develop and maintain their business by a systematic debauching of the youth. Evidence before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate shows that they send liquor free to boys through the mail. Therefore we have the second big conclusion, that if we can kill the liquor interests the systematic debauching of the youth will cease and the next generation will grow up sober.

"This is in accord with nature's method of curing an organic disease, not so much by curing the old diseased tissue as by the building up of young tissue kept free from contracting the disease.

"The rum problem, then, is not a question of stopping old drinkers from drinking; it is not a problem of rescue work, but a question of insuring that the young shall grow up sober. This can be insured by destroying the organized liquor interests. So the question is, How can we destroy the liquor interests of America? Evidently license and regulation do not suffice. They have been tried in practically all lands with the same result. It is under these that the debauching of the youth now goes on. The quasi partnership of Government gives protection and respectability under which the traffic flourishes. Indeed, a comparison of the number of saloons in our cities with the number of United States tax receipts or licenses shows that illicit sale flourishes unregulated in the midst of regulation.

"Evidently prohibition by small areas can not suffice. It is better to have a county dry than wet, but if wet counties adjoin the virus will go over and infect the dry. It is better to have a State dry than wet, but in spite of the interstate-shipment law, if wet States remain the virus will go over and infect the dry. The disease in its very nature is not only organic but contagious—treatment in spots will not suffice. To realize a cure it must be put out of the whole body. National prohibition is the remedy. In what form? Not simply by a Federal statute, for what one Congress does another can undo. There could be no rest. Every national election would be torn and rent with this issue. The policy would shift back and forth from wet to dry. The time elements necessary in the treatment of organic diseases would be lacking; the young generation would not have time to grow up during the dry intervals. No; statutory prohibition is only superficial treatment. This is an organic disease and must have organic treatment. Prohibition must be placed in the organic law of the land, the people's law, where it would rest during a generation and permit a new generation to grow up sober. So our big 'conclusion No. 3' is that 'We must put prohibition in the Constitution of the United States.'

"In September, 1911, on the eve of the last election in Maine, the late Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, national president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, issued a proclamation calling upon all friends of temperance and all patriotic and uplift organizations to join in a united movement for national constitutional prohibition. Upon the convening of Congress that year I introduced a joint resolution in Congress submitting to the States for ratification an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to forever prohibit in the United States and the territory under its jurisdiction the sale, manufacture for sale, importation for sale of all beverages containing alcohol. To this original resolution I added later the words 'exportation for sale,' and 'transportation for sale.' In a speech published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 2, 1911, called 'The Great Destroyer,' I set forth the results of investigations that I had made with the cooperation of the Library of Congress. These investigations were disinterested and scientific and lead to the clear, inevitable conclusion that for a real cure we must have the organic treatment of placing prohibition in the Constitution of the United States. With the aid of friends I have sent out more than 2,000,000 copies of this speech, chiefly to the colleges, schools, and those who mold the thought of the young, and have written about a million and a half of letters to the youth of the land. During the last three years I have delivered lectures in all parts of the country and spoken on the subject to conventions, national, State, and local, of prohibition, temperance, religious, civic, uplift organizations.

"The second week in November last the greatest convention ever held in the world was held in Columbus, Ohio, at which were assembled official representatives of 97 national uplift organizations, including the churches and Sunday schools of all denominations, Christian Endeavor, Epworth League, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Antisaloon League—practically all of the national uplift organizations of the Nation. For the first time the moral forces of a whole nation were assembled in a single convention. This convention unanimously adopted the proposition for nation-wide constitutional prohibition and for a nation-wide campaign of education on the whole question of rum to be carried forward together. The National Antisaloon League, in convention at the same time, unanimously adopted a similar proposition and authorized a committee of 1,000 men to be sent to Washington to memorialize Congress. On the 10th of December this committee, numbering nearly 3,000 men, coming from every State and Territory in the Union, met at Washington jointly with a similar committee of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and memorialized both Houses of Congress to pass a joint resolution submitting to the States for ratification an amendment for national constitutional prohibition. The form of the resolution finally decided on is given in House joint resolution 277, which in substance is the same as my original resolution.

"In both Houses the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives has completed its hearings and has made a report without recommendation. So the resolution is on the calendar, and will probably be voted on before Christmas.

"The Judiciary Committee of the Senate has concluded its hearings, which were conducted through a subcommittee. The general opinion is that their report will be favorable.

"The prospects are that before the end of the present Congress, March 4 next, both Houses will vote on the resolution.

"The resolution will require for passage a two-thirds vote of both Houses, and for ratification will require ratification by the legislatures of three-quarters of all the States—36 out of the 48 States.

"About 55 per cent of all the people of the United States now live under prohibition law, and about 71½ per cent of all the area of continental United States is now under prohibition law. This majority of American people, as far as they could do so, practically have in regular form requested Congress to be allowed to pass on this great question. Under the spirit of our institutions they have a right to pass on it. Remembering that it deals only with the sale, and does not have the Federal Government touch the question of use, manufacture for use, transportation for use, and so forth, and thus does not invade the sanctity of the home or the rights of the individual; remembering that it is a referendum to the States to accept or reject, and is not, therefore, an encroachment upon the rights of the States; remembering that its great object is to stop the debauching of the youth, with which object all good men must be in accord, except those financially interested; remembering that practically all the organized moral forces of the Nation have unanimously resolved to make the question the paramount issue, irrespective of party affiliation, in every congressional and senatorial campaign; and remembering that Congress by passing the resolution would relieve itself of all responsibility and transfer the whole question to the States—remembering all of these considerations, we are led to big conclusion No. 4, that at a comparatively early date both Houses of Congress will pass the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for national prohibition.

"When the proposed amendment goes before the States the opposition to ratification will be centered chiefly about the interests directly affected.

"The overwhelming consensus of experience shows such marked increase in general prosperity when prohibition has been adopted in cities, counties, and States, even with imperfect enforcement, that there will be but partial opposition on the part of interests affected only indirectly.

"Heretofore the advocates of prorum policies have prided themselves in the claim that 'prohibition does not prohibit.' This is not only a confession that the traffic is inherently lawless, but is also an admission that the wishes and rights of prohibition communities and States are ruthlessly invaded. Therefore the staunch advocates of State rights and local self-government will ultimately rally to the support of the amendment, recognizing in it not an encroachment upon the States, but a referendum to the States, which, when the will of three-fourths of them all is expressed, will create in the Federal Government simply an additional effective agent to carry out the will of the States.

"Drinkers who are not yet degenerates will quickly come to recognize that the amendment deals only with the question of sale, founded upon the public principle of contract, does not invade the home, does not infringe the rights of individuals or individual liberty, but in prohibiting the sale simply stops one citizen from gaining profit by harming a fellow citizen, thus simply destroying the organized rum traffic and putting an end to the systematic debauching of the youth; therefore the bulk of the drinkers and even some good men among the rum dealers themselves will ultimately support the measure as a means to insure that the next generation and future generations of Americans shall grow up sober.

"Extreme prohibitionists, who at first blush may be inclined to think that the measure does not go far enough, will soon realize that it does not prevent the States and smaller subdivisions from going further.

"Thus the opposition will center chiefly about the big cities, where the rum interests are controlled and the degenerate vote is gathered. Now, the big cities are located in a few States. Eleven States could be spared and yet ratification be completed. The fact that 71½ per cent of the area of Continental United States is now under prohibition law and that before the year is over the Pacific Coast States will almost certainly fall in line with Virginia in voting state-wide prohibition, shows how great will be the initial strength of the ratification campaign. Indeed, there are 36 States in the Union, the number necessary for ratification, within whose combined borders there are fewer saloons than in the one city of New York.

"When we realize that the vast bulk of the uplift forces of the Nation, practically all of the organized moral forces, are united and fast becoming unanimous in support of this measure and are marching forward, over 4,000,000 of petitioners having already petitioned Congress; when we remember that in the campaign for ratification these forces can adopt the strategy of concentrating their full efforts upon each State in turn, defeating the enemy in detail; when we remember that a State having once ratified remains always on the side of ratification, while an effort for ratification in any State failing at one time can be repeated as often as may be found necessary; when we remember that the whole process is educational and will steadily take home to the great body of our people the big facts about rum—when we remember these things we must come to big conclusion No. 5, that the joint resolution will not only be passed by the necessary two-thirds majority in both Houses of Congress, but will also be ratified by the necessary three-quarters of the States, making this prohibition amendment part of the supreme law of the land, part of the Constitution of the United States, where it will remain forever.

"With the destruction of the organized rum traffic the systematic debauching of the youth will end. Old drinkers in many cases will continue to drink, making for personal use their own distilled or fermented liquor, except as stopped or regulated by local-option laws of their individual States or counties or municipalities. But as the old drinkers die off, their places will not be filled by new drinkers, and America will in time become in scientific reality a sober nation.

"The big facts about rum are now known and are being disseminated with governmental aid in all civilized lands. Big conclusions, like the ones above, will be arrived at inevitably in other lands. America's leadership will be followed by the other nations. It is not simply a prayer rising from the heart of humanity, but a scientific demonstration, that leads to big conclusion No. 6, that the age-long reign of rum is doomed.

"With the overthrow of rum a millstone will be cut from around the neck of humanity. The great evolutionary laws of nature can then work their beneficent results with the human species. Applying a new energy and a new efficiency to industry, the world will groan with the bounty of production and prosperity. Sordid and selfish purposes will gradually vanish in industrial, political, and social activities. Wonderful reforms, insuring industrial and social as well as political justice for all, will soon follow. The germs of decay will gradually vanish from even city life. Nations will flourish for thousands of years and then be but in the vigor of youth. The human race, instead of being sloughed off as it rises, will produce wonderful thoroughbred types of intellectual and moral beauty. The great struggles will no longer be between good men fighting other good men, but between all good men fighting the powers of darkness as they are driven farther and farther back.

"Moral and spiritual forces will assume the ascendancy in individuals, in communities, in nations, and will permeate the relations of nations to each other. All the nations will be organized into a world body and bring about world peace and world justice; altruistic forces will develop a great brotherhood of man for complete and effective cooperation with nature, to cause a maximum of evolutionary development, a maximum of uplift of humanity, to fulfill the will of God in the world.

"RICHMOND PEARSON HOBSON."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New York to use the balance of his time.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the present distress of the country is not the result of President Wilson's psychology; it is the pathological sequence of democracy. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I am opposed to this bill, not because of its Democratic parentage, but because it is unwise and unnecessary, although the two propositions are very frequently synonymous. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; I can not yield.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I only want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, no; I am sorry, but I have not the time.

Eighteen months ago this country, in a healthy condition and prosperous, fell into the hands of the Democratic Party.

Two years ago a war in the Republican Party forced the Democrats into power, and now the Democratic Party is hoping and praying that the great war in Europe will keep them in.

Two years ago the Democrats promised not to disturb prosperity, and ever since then they have promised to bring prosperity back. When and how did prosperity take wings?

Two years ago mills were running, trains were running, candidates were running. To-day only the candidates are running.

Two years ago men were busy, money was busy. To-day the taxgatherer is busy.

The country has been fed on "wishes, hopes, and promises, the currency of idiots," and now in its impoverished condition, weakened and industrially and financially anemic, debilitated almost beyond the power to resist further unskillful treatment by the quack doctors of the Democratic Party, it is about to be given another dose of Democratic medicine labeled "War taxes in time of peace."

This is not a war-revenue bill. It is a Democratic revenue bill, for notwithstanding the war in Europe we would have been able, with proper management, under the policy of protection and economy to have met the unusual conditions and passed any crisis without resort to additional taxation of our own people.

Business men have acted—said President Wilson to the Virginia editors June 25, 1914—as some men do who fear they will have to undergo an operation and who are not sure that when they get on the table the operation will not be a capital operation. But—the treatment is to be constitutional rather than surgical.

The President added—

The treatment certainly has been constitutional, and who blames the business man for fearing he will have to undergo an operation?

First, this quack clinic of Democratic doctors made a wrong diagnosis. The patient was healthy and strong, but a good subject upon which to experiment with quack theories.

They then administered a dose of free trade, which was entirely foreign to the patient's system and unknown to modern political materia medica, which at once debilitated the patient and impoverished his blood, reducing his weight and his resisting power. The Democratic doctors, failing to note the change for the worse, proceeded further to carry out the course of treatment prescribed by the quack clinic by next injecting a hypodermic of currency into the patient's financial arteries, which, though slow in taking effect, threatens obesity.

The patient's condition growing still worse, and his financial pulse becoming quite irregular, the doctors in desperation injected a magnum of old-time Republican emergency currency, according to the formula of the eminent authority, Dr. Vreeland-Aldrich. This somewhat restored the patient's confidence and his hope of recovery, but other and more violent symptoms developed as a result of the foreign free-trade treatment, clearly indicating marasmus, or wasting disease, and although dieted upon the "New feed 'em," consisting of one part whole cereals from Argentina and Canada, one part noncompetitive raw materials, duty on, and two parts finished articles, free listed, the patient could not assimilate this food, and his ad valorem and internal-revenue canals failed to perform their functions.

To reassure his patient, Dr. Wilson told him that "as the diagnosis has progressed it has become more and more evident that no capital operation is necessary." In fact, the patient's constitution by this time was too enfeebled to withstand an operation.

The quack clinic now declares that after all there is nothing the matter with the patient, that his condition is "psychological," a state of mind altogether.

Then they proceed to administer the old-time Democratic remedy of cupping and leeching. He must be bled. He must have his spinal income trephined, his corporation surplus siphoned, his table of contents X-rayed, and his interlocking system separated.

This treatment, they declared, will be absolutely painless under the influence of an antitrust anæsthetic, which produces first wakeful watching and then "twilight sleep." While in this condition of helpless inertia the patient, like a good and trustful patient, is divested of what little he has left of mind, body, and estate through an alleged war-revenue tax, which is only a subterfuge with which to cover the incompetency of doctors of the old Democratic school who never learn anything by experience.

To revive the patient and restore him to normal will require the "Republican Red Cross Society" and the protection pulmotor.

Mr. Speaker, the war in Europe, absorbing in interest as it is, and affecting us as it undoubtedly does and will, can not divert the attention of the American people from the consequences to themselves that this Democratic administration's policies have inflicted upon them. Before the war's effects could be felt here in diminished imports and exports and loss of customs revenue our people were aware of the fact that the Democratic tariff law was a failure; that it did not do anything that its Democratic friends promised for it, but did do everything its Republican opponents said it would do.

The one great thing promised for it was that it would reduce the cost of living. This it did not do; but it reduced the chance to make a living. It increased importations of competitive goods by lowering or altogether abolishing duties thereon, and created a free list such as to put this country on practically a free-trade basis.

On this free list are finished manufactured goods, while the raw materials which go into them are in many instances made dutiable. The American producer is thus whipsawed. He is injured both ways, coming and going. At the same time the Treasury of the United States is deprived of revenue from customs duties and the consumer buys, if able to buy at all, at no less cost.

In July last, before the war in Europe commenced, our imports of foreign goods were valued at $160,078,133, on which were collected $22,988,465. In the month of July, 1913, under the Republican tariff law the imports were $139,061,770 worth, or $21,016,363 less than under the Democratic law; yet the revenue collected in July, 1913, was $27,806,654, or $4,818,189 more than in July of this year.

These figures alone illustrate the difference between a free-trade law, that lets in foreign goods to displace American goods without compensation either to the consumer or the Treasury for the privilege, and a protective-tariff law, that safeguards both the American market from foreign invasion and the United States Treasury from a deficit.

This happened before the European war. This happened also in each and every month, save one, since the Underwood tariff has been in effect. At the same time our exports fell off alarmingly. As imports increased, exports decreased. In this respect, as in others, the American people were made to burn their candle at both ends.

For the first time in 20 years the balance of trade in April, May, June, and July was against us. Imports for those months were greater than exports. We were buying more from foreigners than we were sending to them. Here are the figures:

	Excess of imports.
April	$11,339,544
May	2,476,896
June	653,522
July	6,462,233
Total	20,932,195

The President, in his address to Congress asking for $100,000,000 more revenue by taxing our own people, said there was a falling off in August last in revenues collected from customs of nearly $11,000,000. The President might also have stated that there was a falling off of revenues collected from customs in July of $4,818,189, in June of $115,151, in April of $1,461,200.19, in March of $1,530,276.30, in February of $9,995,512.13, and in January of $5,806,044.26, or a total decrease for the first seven months of 1914 of $23,360,549.39.

But the President saw fit not to refer to these facts.

The President, however, also stated in his address that the people "know and understand, and will be intolerant only of those who dodge responsibility or are not frank with them."

Absolute frankness, I submit, would have dictated a revelation by the President of our economic conditions during the months prior to the war in Europe, and not alone the conditions for the first month of the war, which were not due entirely to the war, but to the unfavorable operation of the Democratic tariff law.

It is true, as the President said, that the people "will be intolerant only of those who dodge responsibility." Yes. "The people know and understand" where the responsibility rests for the destruction of industries which the Democratic Party promised not to injure, for the lack of employment to American workingmen, for reduced wages, for curtailment of production, for general business distress and failures, for the arrest of development, for diminished revenues, for extravagance, and for the high and increasing cost of living.

The people knew and understood all these things before the foreign war began, and their minds will not be diverted from the facts of hard experience by any untoward circumstances. The people are not easily fooled. The Democratic Party already was weighed in the inexorable balances of public opinion before this war came on, and it can not now use that war successfully as a cloak with which to cover its own deception, its own broken promises, and its own incompetency.

The Democratic Party, ostrich-like, may hide its head in the shifting sands tossed upon our shores by the terrible undercurrents and billows of a great foreign war; nevertheless, its misdeeds are in plain sight of the American people.

No, Mr. Speaker, in ascribing wholly to the terrible conflict abroad the cause of our fast diminishing revenues the President did not deal frankly with us, and did not state all of the facts. Nor was the President altogether frank or happy in referring to the condition of the Treasury.

We have to-day a working balance of about $118,000,000, thanks to the revenue-producing quality of a protective-tariff law. This is $50,000,000 less than was the balance in the general fund at the end of the fiscal year 1913. Of the $118,000,000 balance at the prseent time the President stated that about $75,000,000 is on deposit with the national banks on call. "We ought not to draw this money out to help tide over the shortage," said the President, "because of probable inconvenience to the banks. Neither ought we to borrow," he said, "for to do so would be a most untimely and unjustifiable demand on the money market. But," he said, "we must resort to taxation and put burdens on the people."

In effect, the President says we must not think of drawing out of banks our own money for our own needs; the country is not able to stand a loan, but we will reach down and take what we need out of the people's pockets.

Mr. Speaker, this is strange reasoning, and to the American people who will feel the burden of additional taxation it will remain inexplicable. The people will want to know why they must be taxed in time of domestic peace to the extent of another $100,000,000 to run the Government when the Government has $75,000,000 of its own in the banks.

The people will want to know why they are to be taxed to meet a prospective deficit when, if necessary, the Government could as easily float a popular bond issue as did the city of New York a few days ago, which was cheerfully subscribed for by foreign investors as well as by our own people. Small capital, unable to find employment in the development of industries, appears eager to be invested in municipal securities. Why not, then, in the bonds of the United States? Has the administration itself lost confidence in the ability of our people or does it think the people have lost confidence in the administration?

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not advocate either the borrowing of money in time of domestic peace nor placing additional burdens of taxation upon an already overtaxed people. I believe this exigency, so far as one really exists, is due chiefly to Democratic fiscal policies and that it can be met in other ways than by borrowing from or taxing the people.

In the first place, I would economize. That is what the prudent and careful business man would do. But, Mr. Speaker, the President in his address recommending additional taxation of the people did not once suggest economy. In fact he has never once in any official paper since he has been President touched upon the subject of expenditures or economy, although elected on a platform which pretended to cry aloud for retrenchment. In this one respect alone, if in no other, he has allowed Congress to have its own sweet will. And Congress has piled up one extravagance upon another without a word of dissent from the White House.

Moreover, the Democratic caucus, when it had a chance to adopt a sensible and economical budget system as recommended by a Republican President, deliberately voted it down.

There is ample room for economy without unduly hampering the public service or its efficiency.

Even now it is not too late for legislative action that will save to the Government the $100,000,000 which President Wilson wants to take from the people's pockets.

If the Democratic Party really stands for economy, as it fooled the people into believing, it will throw this taxing bill into the discard and set about saving the people from the burden this bill imposes upon them by saving some of the people's money from wasteful and useless expenditure.

I would also restore protective rates of duty on foreign importations. Not all of the ocean lanes of commerce are closed. Most of them are open. Even with diminished imports a protective tariff, as in the past, would insure against a deficit in the Treasury and at the same time revive and protect our industries, which have languished or been displaced by the workings of the Democratic tariff law. Put back the duty on sugar, or even a reasonably protective duty. This would yield about $25,000,000 alone. Reducing the duty 25 per cent has enriched the Sugar Trust. The Treasury since March 1 has been losing sugar revenue at the rate of over $2,000,000 a month. The consumers have not benefited in the least. The Sugar Trust absorbed the tariff reduction, and then had the audacity arbitrarily and criminally to put up the price of sugar and blame it on the war in Europe. The Sugar Trust pays only 2½ cents a pound for Cuban raw sugar, the cost of refining is but one-third of a cent, yet it has sold the refined granulated from 6 to 9 cents a pound, and the fancy grades, such as cube and crystal domino, at much higher prices. This is the same crowd who were caught red-handed by the Republican administration and made to disgorge about $4,000,000 in duties withheld through frauds in weighing. Why should this Democratic administration play into the hands of the Sugar Trust at the expense of the Treasury? Can anybody explain it? Why should the Secretary of the Treasury, the President's son-in-law, deny to the State of Louisiana, whose sugar industry lies prostrate, the scant privilege of going into court to determine whether or not the Sugar Trust ought to pay the higher duty under the Cuban reciprocity treaty or the lower duty which it has been paying since March 1 under the Secretary's own construction of the Underwood law? The State of Louisiana can not have this legal question determined without authority of Congress, and the Secretary of the Treasury, jealous of his ministerial act in fixing the lower rate for the benefit of the Sugar Trust, declined to recommend favorable action upon the request pending before the House Judiciary Committee in the form of a joint resolution introduced and urged by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD].

What possible harm can come, except perhaps to the Sugar Trust, from having the matter judicially determined? If the Secretary of the Treasury had fixed the higher rate of duty, the Government would already have been the richer by $14,000,000, and the Sugar Trust, if it felt aggrieved, could have appealed to the board of appraisers and to the customs court.

But the Secretary having fixed the lower rate under the Democratic tariff, the State of Louisiana can not appeal and must look to Congress for authority to go into court. This administration tore up its platform promise of free tolls for our ships at the Panama Canal on the hypocritical pretense of national honor, and secured the repeal of the free-tolls law because Great Britain, an old and powerful nation, had demanded it. Yet, when it came to keeping faith and upholding our national honor with Cuba, a young and weak nation, for which we stand sponsor before the world, a Cabinet officer, the Secretary of the Treasury, utterly disregarded our solemn obligations to that country and by his own dictum threw our reciprocity treaty with Cuba to the winds.

It seems to me that this needs an explanation and a very good reason why the Secretary of the Treasury should act as a buffer for the Sugar Trust.

If the revenue, about $14,000,000, which has gone into the pockets of the Sugar Trust is possible of recovery, as appears, it would help out at this time. Then why not go after it?

The local Federal attorneys uncovered some little fellows here in Washington not long ago who were indicted under the antitrust laws for conspiracy in restraint of trade by price fixing, and the Department of Justice made a loud noise about it. But what of the great and mighty Sugar Trust, against which the State of Louisiana and several hundred of her citizens have suits pending under the antitrust laws and can get no satisfaction?

The State of Louisiana, becoming weary of watchful waiting for the Department of Justice of this Democratic administration to prosecute the suits against the Sugar Trust filed by Republican Attorney General Wickersham, itself last week instituted ouster proceedings against the trust in the United States district court in that State.

The patience of Louisiana was exhausted by the procrastination, indifference, and dilatoriness of and the apparent friendliness for the Sugar Trust on the part of the present administration, and will try its own hand as prosecutor, using the testimony unearthed by a Republican administration, by which the Sugar Trust was brought to book for its wholesale frauds upon the Government revenues.

Is the Department of Justice, as well as the Treasury Department, afraid to tackle the Sugar Trust? If so, why?

Perhaps the paid agent of the Sugar Trust who wrote the sugar chapter in the Democratic campaign textbook, promising the people $125,000,000 saving if sugar were free listed, can explain.

Mr. Speaker, if it were not for such instances of unwise fiscal policy and administration as are presented in the Underwood tariff law and the friendly treatment of the Sugar Trust, and if it were not for the extravagance of this Democratic Congress, I might feel myself bound, as a public duty, to support this bill. But I can not delude myself or be deluded into the belief that it is necessary to impose these additional taxes on our own people. The argument or plea advanced by the President and by the Committee on Ways and Means in its report is untenable, in my judgment, if not disingenuous.

That it is ingenuous there can be no doubt. The war in Europe is the one adventitious thing that Democratic Congressmen needed as a blind with which to hoodwink the people into forgetting and forgiving them for wrongs inflicted and blessings withheld. They seized upon it at once and are working it overtime.

The committee says blandly and without regard for facts that if it had not been for the war in Europe the tariff act of October, 1913, and the other sources of revenue would have yielded sufficient revenue to meet the demands of the Government.

They show that the revenue collected for the fiscal year from July 1, 1913, to June 30, 1914, amounted to $292,000,000, which is true. But they do not show, and studiously avoid showing, that of that amount $105,794,498 was collected under the Republican tariff law.

They do not state what is a fact, that the 25 per cent sugar reduction did not take effect until March 1, 1914, and that between October 3, 1913, and March 1, 1914, about $42,000,000 were collected under the Republican law.

Nor did they state that the free raw wool provisions of the new law did not go into effect until December 1, 1913, and the provisions relating to the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and so forth, until January 1, 1914, and that between those dates and October 3, 1913, there was collected under the Republican law $8,397,000.

Nor did the committee state that for three months and three days, from July 1, 1913, to October 4, 1913, there was collected under the old law $55,550,119, or a grand total of $105,794,498, while the Republican law was wholly and in part effective during the fiscal year 1914. In other words, 36.19 per cent of all the customs revenue collected during that year was based upon Republican rates.

The committee does say that $85,500,000 was collected before the present law went into effect, but it does not state the whole amount that was collected, nor does it give the old law any credit for having helped to supply more than one-third of the total customs revenue for that year. Deduct this amount from the total for the year and apply the rates of the Underwood law and its big free list and then see how much revenue the Treasury would have from customs. It would have less than the amount collected under the old law, or a deficit of $105,000,000, which by coincidence is exactly the amount that the committee estimates will be collected as additional taxes from the pockets of the people under this Democratic revenue bill.

The Underwood law was deficient as a revenue producer before the European war began. It failed to collect enough money both from customs and from income taxes. And yet the committee, disregarding the facts of recent history, has the nerve to say that if it had not been for the war in Europe the Underwood law would have yielded sufficient revenue. Why, at the average rate of loss of revenue per month of $1,511,000 for the five months from March to July, when the Underwood bill stood alone without Republican aid, as compared with the corresponding period of last year; with the prospect of diminishing customs revenue each month as the law with its big free list becomes better known abroad; large withdrawals of imported merchandise from bonded warehouses that came in under the old law and awaited lower rates of duty under the present law before withdrawal; the failure of the income tax to meet the shortage in customs revenue and the further prospect of its failure owing to shrinkage of incomes by reason of the general business slump produced by a tariff law in favor of foreigners, it can be seen clearly, even by a man with but one eye, that a deficit in the Treasury was inevitable within this fiscal year without the aid of a foreign war.

And be it remembered that at the end of another short year sugar, that greatest of all revenue producers, goes absolutely on the free list. That will mean $60,000,000 approximately lopped off altogether which the Treasury will not get. How will it be made up? It is not to be expected that foreign nations will again be so obliging as to constitute themselves a relief corps and get into another scrap or prolong this one for the benefit of the Democratic Party, so that it can levy more taxes on our own people and then say: "The war did it." But says the committee: "The new law provides an income tax to make up for the reduction in customs revenue."

But will it? What assurance have we that it will do better than it already has done. So far it has failed to meet expectations. But what if it does become more of a revenue producer? That will mean that we have abandoned the policy of collecting from the foreigner for the privilege of coming into our splendid home market with his goods; that we expect to make up the difference from the pockets of our own people, and at the same time expect our own business men successfully to cope with foreign competitors. And if they do not, and are compelled to go to the wall and blame it on the Democratic tariff, then they are to be hung on a gibbet as high as Haman's, in accordance with the President's announced policy.

I do not share fully the feeling of most of my party colleagues regarding this so-called gag rule, although I voted against the rule because it cut off the privilege of amendment and I wanted to offer some amendments to the bill. As a result of Republican division, you of Democracy, although representing the minority of the voters, have been vested with the legislative and executive power of the Nation, and are temporarily in control of its destiny. You are responsible to the country for what is done while that power continues. You have framed this bill through your party leaders the way you want it, and days of argument, criticism, and denunciation would not change it in the slightest. We Republicans who have been pleading in vain for economy in our finances can show our good faith by practicing economy of time. So far as I am concerned, I am ready for the vote, and have been since the bill was taken up, and really feel it a waste of time to talk at all. There is sometimes mercy in expedition. Please jam this nauseous dose down our throats as quickly as possible and let us be done with it. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I shall avail myself of the privilege granted by the House to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I said a moment ago that there would be but one more speech on our side, but I had forgotten one promise that I had made, and if the gentleman from Michigan will yield, I would like to yield for a short speech on this side.

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY]. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, while all must regret the prostration of the world's commerce by reason of the European war, and the consequent falling off of imports upon which our tariff taxes are levied, and the resulting loss of revenue to the Government, it should be realized that the loss, which this bill is being enacted to make up to the Treasury, will be trivial in comparison to the burdens of a great war debt to hang over the people for a generation, to say nothing of the appalling sacrifice of human life, the wounded, the mangled and the dead, the widows and orphans, and the anguish of bereavement in the thousands of homes, which we will suffer if we fail to preserve peace, if we fail to maintain neutrality, if we fail to avert war.

In this world-war crisis through which we are passing it should be realized that our first and highest duty is to preserve peace; that every citizen and every public official, as well as the acting head of the Government, is chargeable with the grave responsibility of maintaining neutrality and averting war. A single spark of fire may start a conflagration and consume a great city, and the word or act of a single individual or official of the Government may serve to inflame the public mind, precipitate a conflict among men involving nations. [Applause.]

In this crisis it should be realized that men of different races and nationalities are in all things too apprehensive as to wrongs and injuries committed against them. They are too ready to assume and take to themselves words and acts as indignities and encroachments not intended or directed toward them. They are too ready to involve themselves and their governments in hostilities to avenge imaginary wrongs and injuries existing only in apprehension. In this crisis it should be realized that we are brought face to face with an intensely practical side of human life; that we must take the world as it is and not as we may think it ought to be; that we must deal with men as they are constituted and not as we may think they should be constituted. In this crisis the question is not what we have a legal right to do under international law, nor what it is possible for us to do, nor what we have power to do, nor what we have the force to do, nor the might to do. But the one supreme question of the hour is what it is policy for us to do, what we can do that will best preserve peace, best maintain neutrality and best avert war.

Mr. Speaker, I believe all the world to-day honors the flag of this Nation. I believe all the world to-day respects the citizenship of this Republic. I believe all the world to-day is actuated by motives of good will and friendship toward us, and desires only to continue in such honor, respect, and cordial relations. But a great world war is being waged around us. The nations are engaged in mortal strife and deadly combat about us, and in the frenzied haste of battle, in the feverish throes of life against life and the death struggle, belligerents are not always careful, cautious, and considerate of the welfare of their neutral neighbors. In this crisis it should be realized that a wise and prudent course requires that we should not see all that there is to be seen, that we should not hear all there is to be heard, that we should not know all there is to be known, and that we should not understand all that there is to be understood [applause], and that we should act only with caution, deliberation, and considerate judgment upon that which we are compelled to see and hear and know and understand.

In this crisis it should be realized that policy, discretion, diplomacy, and a close and good faith adherence to the principles of justice, equity, and right between nations and their people will be of far greater avail in preserving peace, maintaining neutrality, and averting war than all the force and might which armies and navies could bring to bear; that a parade of our Army or a review of our Navy or a display of our military power or naval strength would serve only to jeopardize our peace, impair our neutrality, and invite hostilities; and that such policy, discretion, diplomacy, international equity, justice, and right is our only assurance of peace, our only safeguard of neutrality, our only security against war.

In this crisis it is no time for the display of an exacting honor, a captious dignity, or a false national pride, but a time for a broad, charitable view of human affairs, a comprehensive consideration of the welfare of humanity at large, and the subordination of selfish motives, prejudice, impulse, and all the animosities dividing men and arraying them against each other. This is a time for the realization of our responsibilities as citizens of a great Republic exercising sovereign power, directing the affairs of state, shaping world-wide policies and the destinies of the human race.

Whether acting as private citizens or public officials, we can not absolve ourselves from the responsibilities we have assumed as such citizens and public officials. Our obligations are more than to preserve our own peace, more than to maintain our own neutrality, more than to avert war with our own country. We can not perform our full duty without extending our good offices to restore peace abroad and bring a termination of the cruel and devastative war now drenching the earth in human gore and strewing its valleys with the mangled bodies of the dead.

And in this crisis no quest of profit in trade should be allowed to swerve us from our course of duty and service to mankind; no hope of selfish gain should be suffered to impair the good faith and confidence we hold of all nations of the world to-day; no act of selfish aggrandizement should be permitted to prejudice the powers now at war from accepting the tender of our good offices to terminate hostilities and restore peace.

In this crisis a great opportunity awaits this Nation—the one great power remaining neutral—to serve mankind; an opportunity for mediation and to bring peace to the wounded and bleeding nations of the world at war; an opportunity to become a world power. Not a world power of brutal force, of savage might, of human carnage, or of death, desolation, devastation, and war, but a world power for peace, for human happiness, for the cultivation of all the arts and graces of civil life, and all the charities that soothe and heal and bless; a world power of true fame, true glory, and true renown to endure through all the ages. [Applause.]

EMERGENCY REVENUE LEGISLATION.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely opposed to all features of the so-called war revenue bill. In the first place, the name itself is a misnomer. This country is at peace with all the world. We are neither at war nor are we in need of war revenue. Comparisons are made between this bill and the act of 1898. At that time we were engaged in war and needed the revenue to support the Army and Navy of the United States. The speeches of the gentlemen advocating this bill to-day, made at that time, make pleasing reading now. The present Speaker of the House and the able leader of the minority both made speeches against the enactment of what was at that time necessary legislation. Let the Democrats cover up and make such explanations as they can, the people during the next month will learn, if they do not already know, the real cause of the enactment of this bill.

There are two plain and simple reasons for this enactment. These reasons are the failure of the Underwood tariff law as a revenue producer and the extravagance of the Democratic Congress. The convincing figures already submitted by the various gentlemen during the progress of this debate and in the minority report show conclusively the correctness of this statement.

It is the plainest form of subterfuge to claim that this new burden of taxation upon the people is caused by the foreign war. These figures alone show a loss of commerce of $182,000,000 for the year. Not only has this loss been sustained by our business, but the increased loss to the people of our country through decrease of trade and wages can not be estimated. Notwithstanding this loss of occupation, it is to-day proposed by the Democracy to tax our people to make up the deficiency caused by Democratic failure to construct a suitable revenue-producing measure.

The other great cause is Democratic extravagance in appropriations. I need only to call the attention of the House to the able speech of my colleague [Mr. GILLETT] for convincing proof of this statement. The Democratic platform condemns Republican extravagance, but the appropriations of this Congress exceed those of the last Republican Congress by over $100,000,000. Most emphatically have our Democratic brethren strained at the gnat and swallowed the camel.

An editorial from the New York Sun of September 7, based upon the figures made by the Committee on Appropriations, is illuminating, and from it I quote as follows:

THE RECORD OF WASTE.

The subjoined table, giving the amounts appropriated by Congress for the support of the Government for the years 1913–14 and 1914–15, is compiled from the chronological history of appropriation bills, second session of the Sixty-third Congress, prepared by the clerks to the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate, cents being disregarded:

Title.	Law 1914–15.	Law 1913–14.
Agriculture	$19,865,872	$17,986,945
Army	101,019,212	94,266,145
Diplomatic	4,309,856	3,730,642
District of Columbia	12,172,539	11,383,739
Fortifications	5,627,700	5,218,250
Indian	9,771,902	9,486,819
Legislative	37,630,229	35,172,434
Military Academy	997,899	1,049,302
Navy	144,868,716	140,800,643
Pension	169,150,000	180,300,000
Post Office	313,364,667	285,376,271
River and harbor		41,073,094
Sundry civil	110,070,227	116,795,327
Total	928,848,783	901,616,520
Deficiencies	23,363,587	28,074,912
Total	952,212,370	929,691,433
Miscellaneous	6,000,000	388,597
Annual total	958,212,370	930,080,030
Permanent	131,196,407	127,525,664
Grand total	1,089,408,777	1,057,605,694

* * * * * * *

The comparison of total appropriations, excluding river and harbor appropriations, for a series of years shows this disturbing record:

Year.	Amount.
1911	$978,521,087
1912	995,799,462
1913	988,353,340
1914	1,057,605,694
1915	1,089,408,777

The appropriations which are given in detail above were made by a party in full control of the legislative and executive departments, which won power on a platform denouncing Republican extravagance and pledging its candidates to frugal administration.

* * * * * * *

Neither denunciation nor protest need be added to this record. It carries with it a lesson no thoughtful man can escape.

Economy in appropriations is the proper method of securing necessary funds to transact the Government's business, not the levying of additional taxes upon the people.

The newspaper cartoonist, daily in search of bright ideas to place before the people, must keep his ear close to the ground. The present situation is aptly covered in the cartoon in last Sunday's Washington Star, and I am glad to see that one of the papers in Massachusetts copied it on Tuesday. The wider publicity of this cartoon the better. The poor, shivering lamb of a taxpayer, the wool already removed and even the hide penetrated in many places, is tied to a stake, while Miss Democracy, with the shears of extravagance levying a war tax, faces the cringing lamb and says, "I hate to do it—with winter coming on, too."

After November 3 Miss Democracy will feel still worse about it, for the taxpayer, grown to his full strength as a voter, in a mighty army of his comrades will dig a deep pit for Miss Democracy and will place over her grave a monument with the epitaph:

Here lies the body of Miss Democracy, the victim of broken promises to the people, of extravagance and incompetency in governmental management.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party has been in full power for more than 18 months. With the Chief Executive and both branches of Congress Democratic, that party has had full opportunity to redeem its pledges to the American people. Parties, like men, are to be measured by their performance and not by their promises. To-day the Democratic Party has many apologists, less defenders, and few champions. The Underwood tariff law has not accomplished a single thing its advocates claimed would follow its enactment. The Democratic Party has not redeemed a single pledge nor performed a single promise made to the American people in 1912.

Fortunately for the Democratic Party the terrible war in which all the great powers of Europe are now engaged has befogged the issue in the forthcoming campaign. The secret hope of Democracy is that this terrible war will be cruel enough and deadly enough and protracted long enough to distract the voter's mind from the broken promises, the unredeemed pledges, the stupendous blunders, and the unparalleled extravagance of this Democratic Congress.

DEMOCRATIC PROMISES.

In 1912 the Democratic Party was very prolific in promises. It had a sure cure for every ill and an unfailing remedy for every imaginary wrong.

It promised the consumer to reduce the cost of living.

It promised the farmer cheaper farm implements.

It condemned the Republican Party for extravagance in the administration of governmental affairs and promised the people an economical administration. It denounced display by Government officials, and pledged the party to return to that "simplicity which befits a democratic government." These are but samples of the many promises which the Democratic Party made in 1912, but they are typical of them all.

Wonderful were the Democratic claims of the great benefits that would flow as the direct result of a Democratic tariff law. Beautiful, indeed, were the theories advanced which contemplated that the consumer would be able to buy the necessaries of life cheaper, and that the farmer and the producer would be able to sell these same necessities of life for a higher price. Everything the consumer had to buy was to be cheap, and everything the farmer and producer had to sell would be high. These were some of the benefits that would follow as the direct result of the enactment of a Democratic tariff law. Useless offices, "the salaries of which drain the substance of the people," were to be abolished and $300,000,000 annually saved to the people by Democratic economy.

In their delirium millions of voters thought they saw the dawning of a new millennium. Bright and cheerful and optimistic were these Democratic promises in 1912. To many voters they seemed almost irresistible. This promise to make everyone's lot easier, without making anyone's lot harder, was accepted by many American voters in all seriousness.

UNFULFILLED.

But how has the Democratic Party kept its pledges? How has it performed these promises? Let our Democratic friends give an account of their stewardship. Let them explain to the American consumer wherein they reduced the cost of a single necessary of life. Let them explain to the farmer wherein they reduced the price of a single tool or machine. Let them explain wherein they economized in a single department of the Government. Let them explain wherein they kept a single material promise. No one can truthfully claim that they have accomplished any of these things. On the question of the performance of these solemn pledges, made in 1912, our Democratic friends are as silent as the voice from the tomb. How that party roared in its promises then and how it whispers in its performances now. History will record that it completely failed to keep a single promise or redeem a single pledge made to the American people.

THE BURDEN OF TWO UNDERWOOD BILLS.

The Underwood tariff law, designed to raise revenue for running the Government, has been in force for 11 months. That it became a law too soon and has remained on the statute books too long most people now admit. We have before us now a second Underwood revenue bill, designed to replenish a Treasury rapidly being depleted by the first Underwood law and extravagant appropriations of a Democratic Congress. The first Underwood tariff law relieved importers, who are contributing under assumed names to Democratic campaigns, from the payment of import duties. The second Underwood tariff bill levies a heavy tax on honest American industry to replenish a Treasury which is being looted by unjustifiable extravagance.

Keeping in mind the platform declarations of the Democratic Party, it is not strange that it should single out agriculture for its principal attack in tariff legislation.

THE DEMOCRATIC TARIFF AND THE FARMER.

The attention of the farmer is called to some of the provisions of the Underwood tariff law in so far as they relate directly to farm products. I particularly desire to call the farmer's attention to certain reductions which that law made in tariff duties on agricultural products. The following is illustrative of the agriculture schedule:

	Duty under Payne law.	Duty under Underwood law.
Animals, domestic, for human food	20 per cent	Free of duty.
Bacon and hams	4 cents pound	Do.
Beef, fresh	1½ cents pound	Do.
Buckwheat	15 cents bushel	Do.
Buckwheat flour	25 per cent	Do.
Cattle, domestic, for human food, less than 1 year old	$2 per head	Do.
One year or over:
Valued at not over $14 each	$3.75 per head	Do.
Valued at over $14 per head	27½ per cent	Do.
Corn	15 cents bushel	Do.
Corn meal	40 cents 100 pounds	Do.
Cream, fresh	5 cents gallon	Do.
Eggs	5 cents dozen	Do.
Fresh beef, lamb, mutton, pork, and veal	1½ cents pound	Do.
Oats	15 cents bushel	6 cents bushel.
Poultry	3 cents pound	1 cent pound.
Sheep, domestic, for human food:
Less than 1 year old	75 cents per head	Free of duty.
One year old or over	$1.50 per head	Do.
Rice, flour, meal, and broken	½ cent pound	½ cent pound.
Wheat	25 cents bushel	Free of duty.
Wheat flour	25 per cent	Do.

It is to the credit of the Republican Party that in all tariff legislation the farmer was given the same degree of protection that was given to other American industries. Not so with the Underwood tariff law. Search any other schedule contained in the law and you will find no such sweeping reductions as these. Why was the agriculture schedule singled out for attack? Why was the American farmer and the products of the American farm made the subject of this unjustifiable and un-American onslaught? Was it because the farmer's occupation was considered less honorable by the Democratic Party? Was it because that party did not understand his industry? Was it that Congress did not comprehend the farmer's real need for protection that caused the Democratic Party to write into its tariff law a discrimination against a farm population in the United States of 30,000,000 people? Of course, one not in the confidence of the Democratic administration can not state authoritatively what its real object was. As for myself, I am satisfied that these unjustifiable reductions were written in the law as a deliberate, unsympathetic, and un-American plan to reduce the price which the American farmer received for his product by completely surrendering his home market in agricultural products to the farmers and stockraisers of the world.

In the elections of 1910 and 1912 the Democratic Party was committed to free trade in agricultural products grown in the North. In the election campaign of those years the Democratic national congressional committee circulated in the cities of every northern and western State a campaign circular entitled "The High Cost of Living." This circular was not sent to the farmer. It was sent only to voters in the cities. I have a copy of this circular before me. It contains a list of 15 articles the prices of which it claimed were too high. That circular bitterly assails the Republican Party for its tariff legislation, and charges that the high prices of those 15 articles are the direct result of the protection under the Republican tariff law. It pledges the Democratic Party to a return to the prices that prevailed on those articles in 1896. Think of it! The Democratic Party pledging to the voters of the cities a return to the bankrupt prices of farm produce of 1896! Here is the list of these articles the prices of which the Democratic Party claimed were too high, together with the prices which it claimed the retail dealer should receive for them:

Salt pork, 5 cents per pound.
Pork chops, 10 cents per pound.
Pork ribs, 6 cents per pound.
Smoked shoulder, 7½ cents per pound.
Sausage, 7½ cents per pound.
Lard, 7 cents per pound.
Corned beef, 5 cents per pound.
Butter, 10 cents per pound.
Eggs, 10 cents per dozen
Cheese, 13 cents per pound.
Flour, $3.50 per barrel.
Chickens, 4 cents per pound.
Sugar, 21 pounds for $1.
Steak, 10 cents per pound.
Roast beef, 10 cents per pound.

This Democratic circular points to the prices that prevailed in 1896 for farm products as ideal prices. If the present tariff law does not fully restore those bankrupt prices it is not the fault of the party in power, for that was its promise to the consumer. It is because of conditions over which it had no control. That it promised the voter in the cities to restore those prices all must admit. To-day that party is saying to the voters in the city that high prices are due to the war in Europe, while to the American farmer it is saying that it is due to a Democratic administration.

I have before me a bulletin of the Department of Agriculture, being No. 41, entitled "A Farm Management Survey of Three Representative Areas in Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa." This bulletin gives the actual financial results which obtain on the farms to-day. It disproves the statement so often made that men are becoming enormously wealthy by agricultural pursuits. From page 10 of this bulletin I quote:

> The assertion that farmers are making large profits is erroneous. They are living on the earnings of their investment and not on the real profits of the farm. * * * The average investment from the farms in Illinois is 3.6 per cent, in Iowa 3.2 per cent, and in Indiana 3.5 per cent.

It is to be regretted that this great industry, which pays the farmer less than 3½ per cent on the investment, should have been singled out for this unjustifiable onslaught, and the protection which our farmers have enjoyed taken from them. It is not strange that the circulation of this bulletin, first published on January 14, 1914, should be discontinued, in view of Democratic legislation, designed to reduce still lower the return to the farmer on his investment and his toil. It was in keeping with the Democratic administration to immediately suppress the circulation of this one of their own publications, because it published facts inconsistent with Democratic theories.

To-day the principal powers of Europe are at war. Men ordinarily engaged in gainful pursuits have left the plow and the reaper and answered their country's call to arms. War prices for farm products is the inevitable result. When conditions again become normal, as they will, when peace shall have been declared in Europe, as it will, the millions of men now engaged in that terrible war will again take up the avocations of peace, and prices will again seek their level. Then the farmers of this country will realize the baleful effects of an un-American policy of surrendering our home markets in farm products to the farmers and stock raisers of the world.

PROMISE OF CHEAP FARM MACHINERY A FAILURE.

But what has become of the Democratic promise to reduce the price of farm machinery? How about the great saving the farmer was to enjoy in the purchase of his tools and machines? The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] told us that the "placing on the free list all kinds of farm implements will without question save the farmers of the country millions of dollars annually." It remained, however, for the eloquent gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], now a Senator of the United States, to picture the glories that would be realized by the farmer through free trade in farm machinery. In support of that bill he said:

I want to appeal to both sides of this House for the passage of this bill. I appeal irrespective of politics in behalf of the American farmer, and I beg this House to pass this bill giving to the farmers of our Republic free farming implements—tools of trade, implements to till the earth—free from any tariff taxation. In the name of millions of honest hearts which beat in the bosoms of these Americans behind the plow, upon the harrow, at the drill, those who make the harvesters sing in fields of golden grain, I beg you in their name to take the heavy hand of taxation off of the tools with which they woo from the earth the food which feeds the millions of this world. * * * The farmer stands, under your Republican policies, bowed by the weight of your oppressive tariff, even upon the implements with which he farms.

He leans upon his hoe and gazes upon the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face and on his back the burden of the world.

Can you, will you, deny him this relief? God grant that you will pass this bill. [Loud and continued applause.]

Farm implements were placed on the free list. Almost a year has passed since the Democratic Party took the alleged "hard hand of taxation off of the tools with which they woo from the earth the food which feeds the millions of this world." What has been the result? Can the farmer buy his tools and machinery cheaper? No. That law has not reduced the price of a single tool or lowered the cost of a single machine. Being obliged to purchase some farm machinery this year, I wrote to an implement dealer in my home city, asking for prices and calling his attention to the promise of reduction made by the Democratic Party. Here is his reply:

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA, February 27, 1914.

In reply to your favor of the 24th instant, will say the Underwood tariff has not lowered the price of farm machinery yet. We are paying higher prices for the same than last year. The farmer seems to be getting the worst of it, as his produce is on the decline.

J. W. EMERSON.

Yes, you traded the farmer's home market in all he produces in the North for free farm machinery. You put him in open competition with the farmers and stock raisers of Canada, Mexico, and Argentina, and when war prices cease to prevail that competition will bring down on your heads the righteous indignation of the farmer in the North. Yes, your promises to the farmer have absolutely failed. You now propose to lay on him a heavy tax to pay for your folly and your extravagance. Still—

He leans upon his hoe and gazes upon the ground.
The emptiness of ages in his face and on his back the burdens of the world.

LOSSES IN REVENUE BY FREE FARM PRODUCTS.

But these are not the only losses occasioned by the removal of the duty from agriculture products. Under the Payne law the agriculture schedule was third in importance as a revenue producer. The following table will show the loss in revenue by the removal of the duty on cattle, beef, veal, prepared meats, sheep, mutton and lamb, corn and oats, for eight months ending July 31, 1914:

Loss in revenue from October 1913, to July 31, 1914.

	Imported.	Duty.	Loss in revenue.
Cattle	$17,326,435	Free	$4,678,137.45
Beef and veal	17,967,668	.....do	2,856,859.21
Prepared meats	2,136,158	.....do	534,039.50
Loss in revenue			8,069,036.16
Sheep	423,208	Free	69,448.43
Mutton and lamb	1,305,025	.....do	207,498.97
Loss in revenue			276,947.40
Corn	[1] 13,607,741	Free	2,041,161.15
Oats	[1] 22,522,096	6 cents per bushel.	2,026,988.64
			4,068,149.79
Total loss in revenue on above articles.			12,414,133.35

[1] Bushels.

BEEF TRUST BENEFICIARY.

Who got the benefit from these reductions? The Government lost the revenue, that is certain. Did the consumer buy these articles for a less price? No; there has not been a single reduction in the price to the ultimate consumer. The Beef Trust and the Corn Products Co are the beneficiaries of this legislation, and the consumer is now called upon to make good the shortage in revenue. The total loss in revenue through the removal and reduction of the duties on articles in the agriculture schedule will approximate $40,000,000 annually.

Under normal conditions our farmers can not compete on even terms with the cheap land of Canada or the still cheaper land and low wages paid for labor in Argentina. Our farm land in the corn belt sells at from $100 to $250 per acre, and good farm labor is usually scarce at $30 per month with board. Corn land in Argentina can be had all the way from $20 to $100 per acre, while farm labor commands only from $12.50 to $15 per month. Freight rates on corn from Argentina to New York is from 3 to 7 cents per bushel, while freight rates from Omaha to New York is 17 cents per bushel. If a protective tariff is not to equalize this difference in the cost of production, what will equalize it? Without protection the difference will not be equalized at all. Argentina will take our home markets and control the price.

We have recently been called upon to vote on a bill appropriating $5,000,000 to insure American cargoes of corn, wheat, and cotton for the war zone. At least we were told by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that these were the products which it was desired to ship abroad. It appears that during the very week the House was considering that bill more wheat was exported from the United States than was exported for the corresponding week in 1913. We had a short corn crop in 1913, and of that crop we will export this year less than 9,000,000 bushels. Hence it is not wheat or corn for which we must make this extraordinary provision to export. That appropriation of $5,000,000 was made to send cotton abroad in the interest of the cotton farmers and not in the interest of the raiser of wheat and corn.

On that question our Democratic friends find themselves in a most ludicrous position. A year ago, according to them, the price of corn and of wheat was too high, and they removed the tariff on these articles in order to lower the price. Now, while the price of wheat and corn is 25 per cent higher than it was then, they would make enormous appropriations in order to export our surplus of wheat and corn, which would result in sending the price of foodstuffs at home still higher. And all the time we are receiving Argentine corn and Canadian wheat free of duty. Democratic stupidity is accomplishing for Argentina and Canada what the statesmen of those countries can not secure for themselves, namely, the exportation to the war zone of their surplus of corn and of wheat at the expense of the United States. But the appropriation of $5,000,000 for insurance and $30,000,000 for the purchase of ships is not the greatest hazard we assume or the greatest liability we may incur. All foodstuffs are conditional contraband of war, and the shipment of them in American bottoms with the safe delivery insured by the Government of the United States is not the wise policy of a neutral power. Such action may yet involve this country in that terrible war that threatens the annihilation of a large part of the Old World. Whatever our domestic policy may be, our foreign policy must be to observe strict neutrality.

"WAR" TAX IN TIME OF PEACE.

This is the first time the country has been called upon to pay a "war" tax in time of peace. It is not the first time, however, the country has witnessed a surplus in the Treasury dwindle into a threatened deficit as the result of Democratic free-trade legislation. History is only repeating itself. Twenty years ago Republicans turned the affairs of the Government completely over to the Democratic Party. Then the Treasury was full to overflowing. Times were good and labor was well employed. In less than a year times were hard, labor was begging for bread, and a bond sale was necessary to prevent national bankruptcy.

So, under the Underwood law, before the war in Europe was declared, times were hard, workingmen were losing their positions and shipments of our gold to Europe to pay for excessive importation of goods that came in free of duty was rapidly depleting our Treasury. The United States was losing at both ends in the transaction. The reduction of the duty brought in increased importation, which called for gold in settlement. The goods coming in free of duty or by greatly reduced duty reduced the revenue to the United States. The balance of trade, which for 16 years had been in our favor, now, under the Underwood law, turned against us for the first time since the Cleveland administration.

THE VANISHING TRADE BALANCE.

In November, 1912, when the American electorate was voting the Democratic Party in power, we purchased foreign-made merchandise valued at $153,094,191 and sold our merchandise abroad valued at $279,244,191, leaving a balance of trade in our favor, for that month, of $126,149,293. During the month of April, 1914, we purchased foreign-made goods valued at $175,896,476 and exported our goods valued at $162,550,870, leaving a balance of trade against us of $11,345,606. Under the Republican policy we received in a single month over $126,000,000 in excess of what we paid in the exchange for foreign goods. Under this Democratic administration we paid out in a single month for foreign goods $11,345,606 more than we received for our merchandise exported abroad. How long could such a condition exist without producing hard times and a shortage of money, even in times of peace in Europe?

WAR ON AMERICAN INDUSTRY.

War in Europe is the excuse for levying these taxes, but it is not the cause. That may satisfy you in your plea for votes as a justification for levying this heavy tax, but the verdict of the American people will be that it is the result of Democratic extravagance and un-American tariff legislation.

We are told that this is a "war" tax. This is a "war" tax of $105,000,000 a year on our people when we are at peace with all the world. This "war" tax is not because of the war in Europe. This "war" tax is because of the war declared by the Democratic Party against honest American industry and honest American labor. It is a "war" tax to pay for Democratic extravagance. It is a "war" tax to pay for Democratic "pork-barrel" appropriations.

A CONTRAST.

Mr. Speaker, under the policy of protection the Republican Party was able to pay all the expenses of the Government from revenues received and in 10 years to pay more than $200,000,000 toward the construction of the Panama Canal, and to turn over to this administration a Treasury full to overflowing; and now, in less than 18 months of Democratic rule, we are asked to resort to the drastic practice of taxation to pay the expenses of the Government as administered by the Democratic Party. What has become of the much-heralded promise of economy?

The Underwood law levied a tax on incomes to take the place of the loss in revenue through reduced duties. That tax has produced a large income. No large expenditure of money, such as building the Panama Canal, is making a draft on the Government. Is there any real reason why the administration should at this time increase the burdens of our people by laying on them the heavy hand of taxation? There is one reason always present when the Democratic Party is in power, and that is extravagance and inefficiency. If this administration would voluntarily practice the same rigid economy that individuals and families are compelled to practice, taxation at this time would be unnecessary. A strange commentary on Democratic economy is that while one branch of Congress is considering a bill to lay a heavy tax on our people, claimed as necessary to run the Government, in another branch of Congress Republican Senators were compelled to speak continuously for days to strike out useless items of the worst "pork-barrel" rivers and harbors bill ever considered by Congress. Less pork-barrel legislation in Congress and the practice of a little economy would make additional taxation unnecessary. Promising economy, the administration has practiced wholesale extravagance. Protestations of a return to simplicity "which befits a democratic Government" have been followed by notorious practices of outward gorgeous displays hitherto exhibited only in royalty.

EXTRAVAGANT IN PROMISES AND APPROPRIATIONS.

This Democratic administration was elected on a platform which provides:

> We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

How faithfully it has kept this promise is revealed by a comparison of appropriations for several years, leaving out of consideration river and harbor appropriations for the entire period, as no appropriation has yet been agreed upon for this year:

Total appropriations, excluding rivers and harbors act.

1911	$978,521,087.68
1912	995,799,462.72
1913	988,353,340.41
1914	1,057,605,694.40
1915	1,089,408,777.26

Elected on a platform of economy, this Congress has appropriated more than $100,000,000 in excess of the appropriations made for 1913, the last year of the Taft administration. Why?

So indefensible was this Democratic record of extravagance and waste that the Democratic chairman of the Appropriation Committee roundly condemned it on the floor of the House. Here is his admission of Democratic inefficiency and extravagance:

> Mr. Chairman, it may seem somewhat strange, but I hope it is not out of place to remind Members on this side of the House that the Democratic platform pledged us in favor of economy and to the abolishment of useless offices; but it did not declare, Mr. Chairman, that the party favored economy at the expense of the Republicans and the abolition of useless offices in territory represented in this House by Republicans while favoring a different doctrine wherever a Democratic Representative would be affected. In a few months I shall be called upon, in the discharge of my official duties, to review the record that this Democratic House shall have made in its authorization of the expenditure of the public money. Whenever I think of the horrible mess I shall be called upon to present to the country on behalf of the Democratic Party I am tempted to quit my place. I am looking now at Democrats who seem to take amusement in soliciting votes on the floor of this House to overturn the Committee on Appropriations in its efforts to carry out the pledges of the Democratic platform. They seem to take it to be a huge joke not to obey their platform and to make ridiculous the efforts of the members of our party who do try to live up to the promises they made to the people.

But this was to be expected. No one familiar with the history of Democratic legislation expected an economical administration. Heedless of the advice of Chairman FITZGERALD, his Democratic colleagues continued to vote lavish appropriations for the establishment of new offices and for extravagant expenditures of money in Democratic districts. While much has been said about abolishing "useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people," this Congress not only refused to reduce the number of offices, but it has increased them all along the line.

For instance, when this administration came into power there were 3,183 employed in the Treasury Department at Washington. Instead of reducing the number, this administration increased it to 3,541. This administration found a field force under the Secretary of the Treasury of 1,407 persons, mostly civil-service employees. A Democratic Congress removed these positions from the classified service, destroyed the merit system in the field force to make place for Democratic spoilsmen, and increased that field force to 2,085 persons. Instead of a reduction, as promised, we find that in a single year there is an increase of 1,036 officers and agents in a single department of the Government. Democratic economy in this instance alone cost the taxpayers $1,750,000 annually.

You absolutely failed to reduce the number of officials, but, on the contrary, you increased them all along the line. Here are a few of the many increases:

The new banking law creates five new offices with salaries of $12,000 each and increases the salary of the Comptroller of the Currency from $5,000, at which sum it had remained for 50 years, to $12,000 per annum.

The new trade-commission act creates five commissioners at $10,000 each and a secretary at $5,000.

A new board of appeals, consisting of three members at $4,000 each, is created in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

For commercial attachés, to be appointed by and compensated at such salaries as the Secretary of Commerce may fix, and a clerk each, at $1,500; and for traveling expenses, the sum of $100,000 is appropriated for a year.

The salary of the private secretary to the Secretary of the Treasury is increased from $2,500 to $3,000.

A chief of division, created less than a year ago under the income-tax law, is increased from $2,500 to $3,500.

Six Assistant Attorneys General in the Department of Justice have their salaries increased from $5,000 to $7,500.

The salary of the assistant to the Attorney General was increased during the extra session on an urgent deficiency bill from $7,000 to $9,000.

The salaries of our diplomatic representatives to Argentina, Chile, and Spain are raised from $12,000 to $17,500 each per annum, and the three secretaries of the legations to these countries are increased from $2,625 to $3,000 each.

The mission to Paraguay and Uruguay is divided and a new minister authorized, with a new salary of $10,000.

The Democratic House of the last Congress insisted upon and did abolish three internal-revenue collectors of the Republican administration, at $4,500 each. At this session one of them is re-created, the place to be filled by a Democrat. If the office was not necessary to collect revenues then, how can it be needed now with less revenue to collect, except to meet some political exigency?

"WILD ASSES" AND SOME "GREEN CORN."

Senator TILLMAN proved himself a prophet, for at the very beginning of this administration he said:

> The Biblical quotation I used a few days ago will become historical: "The wild asses of the desert, athirst and hungry, have broken into the green corn." That applies all along the line from top to bottom. The Democrats have been out in the cold so long * * * that they are simply wild.

They are becoming quite tame now. They have all the old jobs and thousands of new ones, and the people are now about to be taxed to pay their salaries.

DEMOCRATIC SIMPLICITY.

This is a sample of real Democratic economy. But how about a return to the Democratic simplicity? The Secretary of Labor asked for an appropriation of $9,500 for the purchase of automobiles for his use, a seven-passenger limosine car and an electric runabout. In support of this estimate he urged that if the automobiles were not purchased it would be necessary for the Secretary to have six horses—to employ coachman and footman for the Secretary. It was claimed that each of the Cabinet officials have at least two span of horses, and all of them have footmen in addition to the coachmen.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in violation of the law which provides that "revenue cutters shall be used exclusively for public service and in no way for private purposes," has turned large vessels of the service into luxurious steam yachts to be used by Democratic politicians for ocean cruising at Government expense. At the same time a Democratic Congress appropriated $475,000 to build two new boats to be added to this pleasure craft, "for the good of the service."

Even the great commoner, the present Secretary of State, who is credited with having written the last Democratic platform, has ceased to lead the simple life. Finding his salary of $12,000 inadequate to meet his living expenses, he has been obliged to neglect his official duties in order to supplement it by lectures. The manner in which Mr. Bryan would enforce the simplicity plank of the Democratic platform is best told by a great Democrat, Col. George Harvey, editor of the North American Review:

I would direct your attention to the fact that only the other day the Secretary of State appeared before the Senate Committee on Appropriations and announced with pardonable pride that, while he had been conducting the affairs of his department with all the fire and dash of an angleworm, he had reduced the estimated expenditures of his department from $354,160 to $354,040, thus effecting a net saving of $120 per annum. He achieved this reduction, moreover, without impairing the so-called efficiency of his force. Acting under the inspiration of his financial astuteness, by the simple method of dropping a clerk who had been drawing $900 a year, he was enabled to employ a footman, and added, somewhat pathetically, "You gentlemen, of course, know that you can not get along with a driver alone when engaged in the matter of returning cards." The Senators addressed nodded understandingly, and, probably to show their own familiarity with the conventions, granted the allowance. So, too, finally did the House, though with less grace, because Representative GOOD, of Iowa, disliked the appellation "footman" and wished to substitute "messenger who shall act," etc. After Mr. GOOD'S motion had succumbed to a point of order, Representative MURDOCK, of Kansas, objected to the appropriation for "equipment for drivers," which he insisted meant "livery and nothing else," and said emphatically, "I know the Secretary of State; I protest for him; I know the country from which he hails and its customs; we do not believe in that sort of thing out there." Nevertheless, since nobody seemed to know what is considered a suitable costume for a footman where footmen are unheard of and the only cards known are euchre decks, the protest passed unheeded and the appropriation was made with one condition, that "equipment" should not comprise "skintight pants," thus completely demolishing the theory of the Peacham philosopher that "it's not the coat that makes the man, it's the pants."

OBJECTIONS TO PROPOSED TAX.

Mr. Speaker, it is proposed by this bill to raise, by taxing the American people, $105,000,000 annually. In his message to Congress urging this legislation the President says:

Approximately $75,000,000, a large part of the Treasury balance, is now on deposit with national banks distributed throughout the country. It is deposited, of course, on call. I need not point out to you what the probable consequence of inconvenience and distress and confusion would be if the diminishing income in the Treasury should make it necessary rapidly to withdraw these deposits.

And we ought not to borrow. We ought to resort to taxation, however we may regret the necessity of putting additional temporary burdens on our people. To sell bonds would be to make a most untimely and unjustifiable demand on the money market; untimely, because this is manifestly not the time to withdraw working capital from other uses to pay the Government's bills; unjustifiable, because unnecessary. The country is able to pay any just and reasonable taxes without distress. And to every other form of borrowing, whether for long periods or for short, there is the same objection.

I can not agree with the President in this. Where is the money now which will be required to pay this tax? Is it not in the banks? It will be withdrawn from the banks to pay this tax. Every reason assigned by the President against a bond sale can also be urged against this tax.

Government funds on deposit with certain national banks, if gradually withdrawn to pay current bills, would soon find its way back to the banks in the usual course of business. By taxing the people $105,000,000 annually does not create a single dollar of currency. If it is a hardship on the banks to pay the Government what they owe it, how much more will be the hardship on the American people to require them to pay what they do not now owe? By this bill we add to their obligations; we create new debts for them; we add to their burdens by this heavy tax.

The final result is that in order for the Government to loan $75,000,000 to the banks at 2 per cent the people will be taxed $105,000,000, which they will have to borrow to pay the tax from the same banks at 7 per cent interest. Since when have we become a Government of the banks, by the banks, and for the banks?

The Washington Post of to-day contains the following statement issued yesterday by Secretary McAdoo:

Senator LEA of Tennessee informs me that the State of Tennessee has $1,600,000 of short-term notes, maturing October 1; that the State desires to renew or extend $1,400,000 of these notes; that a commission representing the State has been in New York for some time trying to effect this loan, but without success.

It is preposterous that one of the great States of the Union should find it impossible to procure from the banks such a comparatively small amount of money. Senator LEA informed me that he was going to New York last night for the purpose of joining the commission in its efforts to secure the needed loan.

If Senator LEA and his associates are unable to procure from banks in the city of New York or elsewhere, and upon reasonable terms, the desired loan, I will myself see if banks can not be found to take up this loan for the State of Tennessee on October 1 next, upon reasonable terms and at a reasonable rate of interest.

If it will inconvenience the banks of the country to repay gradually to the Government what they owe it, how much more will it inconvenience the banks to be compelled to make a new loan to a State of $1,600,000? If banks are to be coerced to make this loan to the State of Tennessee, shall they not likewise be compelled to make new loans to all the other States or to municipalities needing funds? If it is necessary for the National Government to tax our people $105,000,000 in this emergency, why should not the State of Tennessee resort to taxation to pay its maturing obligations? If the Government is to lay a tax on our people in order for the Government to loan money to banks, should not the State of Tennessee by taxation raise money to pay her debts to the same banks?

FRUGALITY TAXED; LUXURIES ESCAPE.

Mr. Speaker, this Democratic Congress has decreed that this bill shall be passed without amendment. The Democratic majority in the House has passed a special rule limiting debate to seven hours and denying the right of Members to offer amendments. Certainly if the American people could vote on this measure it would be defeated by an overwhelming protest. You lay a tax on business and refuse to tax certain articles of commerce because some of that tax would come from the South. You tax the cigar maker and cigar dealer, but refuse to levy a tax upon the luxury itself. You tax frugality while encouraging extravagance. You lay a tax of $8 a year on a man because he protects his wife and little ones with a $10,000 life insurance policy, but you leave untaxed the Kentucky whisky, for which his fellow laborer spends his wages to become intoxicated, only to abuse his wife and children. The fact that the Democratic caucus refused to increase the tax on whisky gives credence to the report that the Whisky Trust from Kentucky and Tennessee was maintaining a lobby in Washington to prevent any increase in the tax on whisky.

If we should place the same tax on cigars, tobacco, snuff, and cigarettes that is levied by Great Britain, the annual revenue, based upon present consumption, would be more than $400,000,000 from that source alone. Great Britain and Ireland levy a tax of $2.99 per gallon on distilled spirits. Canada taxes distilled spirits at $2 per gallon, while the United States taxes distilled spirits at only $1.10 per gallon. We collect from this source at the present rate over $140,000,000 annually. It is not proposed by this bill to increase the tax on whisky. If we strike from this bill the tax on gasoline, which will amount to $20,000,000 annually; the special taxes, which will amount to $16,500,000 annually; and the stamp taxes of $30,000,000 more, and place an additional tax on distilled spirits of 50 cents per gallon, such an increase on whisky alone would yield annually over $70,000,000 in revenue; add to this the increase on beer and wine carried in this bill and a total annual revenue of $108,500,000 would be the result.

If we must raise money by taxation in order to loan certain national banks $75,000,000 at 2 per cent, and to make extravagant appropriations, let the tax be on the luxuries and not on the necessities of life. In support of the gag rule under which we are considering this bill, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] said:

This bill will be unpopular. Taxes are always unpopular. Everybody says "tax the other fellow."

That is what this Democratic Congress, dominated by the South, proposed to do, "tax the other fellow."

Before long our people will discover the real reason for this tax. Charles S. Barrett, of Union City, Ga., president of the National Farmers' Union, at joint conference of the Texas District Union at Fort Worth, Monday, August 31, gave one reason for it, and he said:

There is only one thing to do, and it is this:
That the United States must buy three or four million bales of cotton at not less than 10 cents a pound from the farmers of the South. Three or four hundred million dollars is all that will be required.

The South is in the saddle at Washington and the South can do whatever it wants. The boys at Washington will do whatever you tell them to do if you give them to understand you mean business.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

Yes; this Democratic Congress has been doing what "the boys" were told to do. Individual responsibility has been made subservient to the demands of the political boss. Real statesmanship has given way to a policy of political expediency. Truly, history repeats itself, and what Senator GORE said of the Fifty-second Congress applies in every particular to this, the Sixty-third Congress. In a speech delivered at Dallas, Tex., in 1896, he said:

The trouble with the Democratic Party is it is a party of statesmen without statesmanship, patriots without patriotism, heroes without heroism. Their policy begets farmers without farming, laborers without labor, freemen without freedom. * * *

The Fifty-second Congress had a Democratic majority of 148, and if it redeemed a single pledge, observed a single promise, kept a single command, or discharged a single obligation made to the people of the United States, I will quit the stump and retire from the canvass. * * *

The Fifty-second Congress was elected on retrenchment and economy, the free coinage of silver, and the repeal of the McKinley law. In the matter of economy that Congress exceeded the Republican $1,000,000,000 Congress by $40,000,000.

BETRAYAL OF TRUST.

I shall vote against this bill as an unwarranted and unjustifiable tax on the American people to replenish a Treasury becoming depleted by Democratic extravagance. This Congress was elected on a platform to reduce the burdens of the people; absolutely failing to do that, it would by the enactment of this law add to their burdens by direct taxes $105,000,000 every year. To the constituents of Members who vote for it I commend the splendid advice of the present Secretary of State, in his speech to the Pennsylvania Legislature a year ago:

The Representative who secures office on a platform and then betrays the people who elected him is a criminal worse than he who embezzles money.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under a gag rule which limits debate and prevents the offering of any amendment the Democrats in the House are imposing an additional tax burden of over $100,000,000 upon the American people.

The Democrats acknowledge that this tax will not be popular. They know why. They know that the reasons put forth for the necessity of it are not correct. It is called a war tax. In reality it is a tax to cover a deficiency caused by the failure of the Underwood tariff. That such a deficiency would occur before the year 1914 ended was apparent the 1st of last May—90 days before war broke out in Europe.

In a letter written the last of May and read at the Washington State Republican convention in Tacoma, June 7 of this year, I made two predictions—one was that in a short time a quorum of this overwhelmingly Democratic House could only be kept here by force; the other was that a deficit would occur. Both predictions have come true, and I say frankly that one did not have to be much of a prophet to make the forecast. I thought the Democratic administration would be forced to issue bonds, as Grover Cleveland was obliged to do at the time of the last low-tariff experiment.

But the war in Europe furnished an excuse to get away from an issue of bonds and furnished an opportunity for the levying of a direct tax, wrongly called a "war tax."

The designation of "war tax" is absolutely inaccurate. There was a war tax in 1898, when the Nation, through the constitutional exercise of congressional power, declared war upon Spain and brought about a happier condition of affairs in distressed Cuba. There is no need now for such a tax. The United States is at peace with all the world and even the expense of the naval crusade to Mexico, the capture of an unoffending seaport, and the maintenance of an army at Vera Cruz did not add enough millions to the national expense to create trouble. It is absurd to talk of a war tax in time of peace.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONTENTION.

The Democratic contention, plainly set forth by Mr. UNDERWOOD, the Democratic leader, is that there is a deficiency in the revenues due to the decrease in importations. His estimate is that the falling off in revenues during the next 12 months from the countries which are at war will be $125,000,000. He admits that the total imports, free and dutiable, in August, 1913, aggregated in value $137,000,000, while in August, 1914, they were $129,000,000, a difference of only $8,000,000, but asserts that a very large quantity of undutiable material came from countries which are not at war. He defends, also, the various methods by which the tax is to be raised, calling especial attention to the fact that as to almost every item the scheme of the Republican levy of 1898 had been followed.

This position is peculiarly interesting, in view of the fact that Mr. UNDERWOOD opposed and voted against the war tax of 1898, because, as he then said in debate, it would "fall almost entirely on the hard-working and industrious artisans, merchants, mechanics, farmers, and professional men of the country, but not on idle wealth that is protected but never made to pay for benefits received."

This characterization is appropriate to the tax legislation which the Democrats are now seeking to enact.

REPUBLICAN POSITION.

The Republican position, voiced by Representative MANN and others, is that the deficiency in the revenues is not due to the European war, but to the failure of the tariff law to produce income, besides which the Democratic Congress has, by extravagant appropriations, involved the Government in expenses which can not be met except by additional taxation. It is shown, for instance, that last January the falling off in customs revenues was $5,800,000, and in February the decrease was $9,995,000, with a steady decline up to August 1, when the war began.

As to the appropriations, the figures show that this Congress has already contracted to expend $70,000,000 more than the last Republican Congress, with $20,000,000 to be added by the river and harbor bill; $25,000,000 asked for Colombia, $3,000,000 for Nicaragua, and $30,000,000 for creating a merchant marine. The Republicans assert that if the Democrats had practiced what they preached in the matter of economy, or if the revenues had not been depleted by a free-trade law, the present emergency would not have arisen.

In addition to this, the administration is criticized for refusing to take out of the national banks the Government deposits of $75,000,000, it being claimed that it would have been better to have taken the money out of the banks than out of the pockets of the people.

If the Senate passes the bill—and debate in the Senate will not be shut off, as it was in the House—the people will pay the increased taxes.

The American people can not allow the Government to fail in meeting its obligations. They must go down in their pockets to meet the deficiency and leave the question of responsibility to be settled at the polls.

MONEY LOANED TO BANKS.

The Treasury is admittedly in a bad way. Why? Because $75,000,000 has been loaned to the big national banks, which banks are even now accused by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo with hoarding money. The United States money is out on call. Why not call it in—not all at once, but just fast enough not to cripple the banks?

The President, in his address which he read to the House on September 4, said:

The Treasury itself could get along for a considerable period, no doubt, without immediate resort to new sources of taxation. But at what cost to the business of the community? Approximately $75,000,000, a large part of the present Treasury balance, is now on deposit with national banks distributed throughout the country. It is deposited, of course, on call. I need not point out to you what the probable consequences of inconvenience and distress and confusion would be if the diminishing income of the Treasury should make it necessary rapidly to withdraw these deposits.

The President practically admits that there is no necessity of increasing the revenues of the Government at this time if the Government could make use of the $75,000,000 which it now has on deposit with the national banks.

Think of the proposition for a moment. Is it not rather odd that the Government should collect money by taxation, deposit it in the national banks of the country as a matter of convenience, or otherwise, and then, when money is needed, instead of drawing the deposits out of the banks, increase the taxes in order to raise more money, a portion of which will likely be again deposited in the banks?

WHERE DOES THE MONEY COME FROM?

Also, what do you think of the proposition that it would be an injury to the country for the Government to withdraw its deposits from the banks, but is no injury to draw additional taxation from the pockets of the people or their bank accounts?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has put the case clearly in the following words:

If the Government draws its deposits out of the banks with which to pay its bills, that does not take the money out of circulation. It will go right back into trade and commerce and probably back into the banks. It certainly will be no more distressing for the banks to pay out the deposits which have been made with them, and which they clearly have taken with the idea of paying out, than it will be to take from the pockets of the people permanently increased taxation which they can never recover and which will be taken from them only that we may deal more kindly with the banks which owe the Government the deposits.

Mr. MANN says further:

The President seems to think that it will not withdraw working capital from other uses if the people pay the money as taxes, and that it will not make any demand on the money market for the people to pay the money in the form of taxes.

Here is another novel theory. Why does it not make just as much of a demand on the money market and just as much withdraw working capital from other uses for people to pay money to the Treasury in the form of taxes as it would for them to pay money to the Treasury in the purchase of bonds? The bonds would only have to be issued as needed, and no more would need to be issued than were necessary. On the other hand, the additional taxes may and probably will raise much more money than is needed, and is much more likely to withdraw the money from the market and from working uses than would be the issuance of bonds or temporary certificates of indebtedness.

ORDINARY REVENUES SAME AS LAST YEAR.

Our imports for August, 1913, were $137,651,553 in value of goods, while for August, 1914, they were $129,767,890, a falling off of less than $8,000,000 during the first month of the war, when shipping conditions were at their worst, and these conditions have greatly improved since.

The following figures were obtained this morning from the Department of Commerce, showing the imports of merchandise at New York City for the weeks of August and September of this year:

Week ending Aug. 1	$18,966,086
Week ending Aug. 8	15,817,093
Week ending Aug. 15	16,211,393
Week ending Aug. 22	12,162,397
Week ending Aug. 29	11,716,317
Week ending Sept. 5	12,212,002
Week ending Sept. 12	16,930,567

These figures show that while there was some falling off in August, owing to the deranged shipping conditions on the sea, that these conditions have become almost normal again and the importations are now almost back to normal.

As appears by the daily Treasury statement issued at the close of business Wednesday of this week, September 23, 1914, the ordinary revenues of the Government for the first 23 days of September of this year were $42,319,728.53, and for the same period in 1913 were $44,050,174.72, a decrease in this year from last year for the 23 days of $1,730,446.19.

From July 1 to September 23, inclusive, the revenues this year were $166,616,800.38, and for the corresponding period last year were $165,881,896, or an increase over last year of $734,904.13.

For the same period, from July 1 to September 23, this year the ordinary disbursements of the Government were $184,708,150.11, and for last year for the same period the ordinary disbursements were $176,856,929.77, or an increase in disbursements for that period this year over last year of $7,851,220.34.

While the ordinary revenues so far this year have been about the same that they were for the same period last year, the ordinary disbursements this year have amounted to nearly $8,000,000 more than they were last year.

All we need to do is to economize in Government expenditures, and there is not the slightest necessity at this time for levying new taxes to increase the revenues.

IMPORTS INCREASE; EXPORTS FALL OFF.

The following figures show clearly how imports increased and exports fell off this year, up to August 1, when the war began. The figures all relate to the period prior to the commencement of the European war and represent no effect of the war, but of the normal conditions caused by the Democratic tariff law:

For July, 1914:
Imports increased	$20,615,521
Exports fell off	6,851,831
Change against us	27,467,352
For seventh months ending July 31, 1914:
Imports increased	$121,944,698
Exports fell off	126,290,975
Change against us	248,235,673
Balance of trade in our favor first seven months, 1913	308,624,462
Same, 1914	60,388,789
Loss to United States by falling off of balance of trade	248,235,673
In July, 1914, the balance of trade against us was	5,538,344
In July, 1913, the balance of trade in our favor was	21,929,008
Increase in imports of manufactures ready for consumption	39,261,672
Decrease in imports of manufactures for further use in manufacturing	26,950,647
Decrease in exports of manufactures ready for consumption	74,151,381
Increase in exports of crude materials for use in manufacturing	19,818,421

These figures show that during the period named while our imports of manufactures for further use in manufacturing, which means practically crude materials imported to be manufactured here into the finished products, were reduced by nearly $27,000,000 for the seven months, we increased our imports of manufactures ready for consumption by over $39,000,000.

The Underwood tariff did that—not the war.

That tariff decreased the duties on the finished products and in many cases increased the duties on the crude materials. This means that the labor to turn the crude materials into the finished products was furnished in foreign lands instead of giving employment to labor in the United States.

BALANCE OF TRADE FALLS OFF $248,000,000.

In seven months we increased our exports of crude materials for use in manufacturing abroad by nearly $20,000,000. During the seven months we decreased our exports of manufactures ready for consumption, or the finished products, by over $74,000,000.

Instead of finishing the products here with American labor, we were sending abroad the crude materials that they might be manufactured by foreign labor.

The balance of trade in merchandise in our favor in 1914 for the seven months was $60,000,000, while for the same period in 1913 this balance of trade in our favor was $308,000,000. In other words, under the Underwood tariff our balance of trade on merchandise for the seven months fell off $248,000,000, and that balance of trade we are called upon to make up by shipments of gold abroad, or the equivalent of that.

Did the war have anything to do with it? Nothing.

Further, while for the seven months of 1914 we had increased our importations over the corresponding period of last year by nearly $122,000,000, the customs duties arising on the importations fell off by over $23,000,000. The Government was losing the revenue, and at the same time the foreigner was manufacturing the goods with foreign labor.

The House is bound and gagged by a rule. It will pass its so-called war-tax measure. Should the Senate pass the bill as it now stands, it is estimated that the revenues derived during the coming 12 months will amount to $105,000,000, distributed as follows:

Fermented liquors	$32,500,000
Wines	6,000,000
Gasoline	20,000,000
Special taxes	16,500,000
Stamp taxes	30,000,000
Total	105,000,000

It will also give new jobs to a lot of tax collectors.

The Democratic revision of the tariff is a failure as a revenue producer. Democratic appropriations are record breakers.

PEOPLE WILL UNDERSTAND.

These are parlous times the world over. Conditions are upset, but we can not blame the war for what the Underwood tariff had already done to us. The war has cost many a man in the United States his job, and it is costing many a citizen his business and his income. Let us blame the war for what it has done, but do not make it carry the blame for what the Underwood tariff did to the finances of the United States three months of last year and seven months of this year.

Information spreads rapidly in this country, and it will not take long for the people, who have not found the cost of living reduced, to understand the question which has been presented to them.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MOSS].

[Mr. MOSS of West Virginia addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 32 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, it is claimed by the friends of this measure that the war in Europe is the cause. That is exceedingly misleading, in my opinion. The war is not the cause of this burdensome tax; it is the excuse. War is causing slight losses in revenues, it is true; but the war is about 10 per cent cause and about 90 per cent excuse. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] Yesterday we were called upon to vote for a very drastic rule. Some call it a gag rule. I do not know just what constitutes a gag rule, but I do know if there ever was a gag rule that was one, unadulterated. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], for whom I have the highest regard—I love him as I do a brother—said in a speech before this House in 1909, when the Payne tariff bill was under consideration:

The rules of this House for a hundred years have recognized that when you come to consider a great appropriation bill or a great revenue bill the only way the House can express the sentiments of the country and the Members can express the sentiments of their constituencies is to consider the items contained in the bill item by item. It is impossible to get a consensus of this House or an expression of the opinion of the country by voting en bloc for a tariff bill, as much so as if it was a general appropriation bill.

How materially the gentleman from Alabama has changed his opinion on that subject since 1909. [Applause on the Republican side.] Much has been said by our Democratic friends before and after the passage of the Underwood tariff law that it was their purpose to pass a tariff law that would increase our exports. No one will deny that. What can be put into a tariff law that will aid our export trade? There is no export tax upon goods going from this country. A tax of that kind would be contrary to the Constitution of the United States. The only one thing that can be placed in a tariff law, in my opinion, that can in any way aid our export trade is an import duty on competitive products so high that our own factories will furnish constant employment for our labor and capital, and our industries will run at their fullest capacity, full time, and if necessary overtime, and by so doing products can be made in this country at the lowest possible cost, and our surplus may compete in a measure with the cheap-made products of foreign lands. [Applause on the Republican side.] You failed to put such provisions in your tariff law. On the other hand, you have torn down the tariff wall built by the Republican Party, that brought such great prosperity to this country for so many years, and you have bid welcome to the cheaply made products of every country in the world to come and capture our markets and take away from honest American labor and capital of this country their right to produce these things at home. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Alabama yesterday said that he did not like this law, that it was a hardship placed upon him and his party at this time to impose additional taxes upon the people of this country. Why, we Republicans do not like your bill any better than you do. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Regarding your bill and your style and kind of legislation, gentlemen, we are like two Irishmen who stayed overnight at a cheap lodging house in Toledo. The next morning Pat asked his friend how he had rested, and he said that he had not rested at all. "Why, what was the reason?" said he. "Well, there was a little red bug that bothered me all night, and I did not rest well." "Well, you evidently did not like the little red bug, then?" "Oh," he said, "I did not care much about the bug, but the thing I do not like is the way he gets his living." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] We do not like the manner of legislation because we do not like the way that it takes employment away from American labor and American capital and brings hard times to the people of this country. [Applause on the

The gentleman from Alabama yesterday stated that about $60,000,000 of this $75,000,000 now out in national banks was placed there by a Republican administration. God knows it was a good thing for the banks and the people that at that time somebody was in power that had $60,000,000 to put in the banks. [Applause on the Republican side.] You do not have it. [Laughter on the Republican side.] You have a bill now upon the calendar which, if enacted into law, appropriates $10,000,000 for the purchase of ships to establish a merchant marine for us on the high seas that will carry the American flag. There is a provision in that bill also that authorizes the officials of this Government to dispose of $30,000,000 worth of Panama Canal bonds, the proceeds of which are to be used together with the $10,000,000 you propose to appropriate in cash to purchase ships.

Where are you going to buy those ships? There is not a boat for sale by any nation in the world except Germany, and England and France have served notice upon us that if the Government of the United States purchases German ships now hiding in harbors of the United States and sends them outside of the 3-mile limit they will capture them or send them to the bottom of the sea. Why, they claim such purchase would be a violation of our neutrality laws. And if that is done, my friends, serious complications will be brought about between this Government and foreign countries. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And again, my friends, you propose to establish a merchant marine at a time when if there is a boat for sale by any country in the world it will to-day demand double the price that it would bring in normal times or when conditions in the country are normal. But what a glorious time it is to advance our merchant marine! Put foreign ships under the American flag, purchased at twice their normal value, place upon those ships American seamen who will receive the American scale of wages, which is more than twice the scale of wages paid by any other country of the world, and you are going out upon the high seas under such adverse conditions to compete with cheaply built vessels from abroad and with cheap foreign labor, and capture the markets of the world. You would establish a merchant marine now, at a time when you know it is impossible, if you are sane! [Applause on the Republican side.]

On the 4th day of September the President of the United States came in person to the House of Representatives and called Congress together in order to deliver to them a message upon this war-tax matter. Ever since President Wilson delivered his first message in person to this House Theodore Roosevelt has never cracked a smile. [Laughter and applause.]

You say you do not like to pass this law now, but that it is a matter of necessity, and that you are brave and patriotic, and are going to face the enemy, the masses of the people. You remind me of the boy referred to by our dear, beloved, deceased friend Francis W. Cushman, when speaking on a bill in this House. He said, "I am placed in the position"—and you are in that position—"of the boy who was digging potatoes in a field, when a man came along and said, 'Young man, what are you getting for doing this?' The boy replied, 'I do not get anything for doing it, but I will get hell if I don't do it.'" [Laughter and applause.]

The fellow that would give you "hell if you don't" is only a little way down Pennsylvania Avenue. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The President in his message delivered on the 4th day of September referred to the customs receipts for August, 1914, and claimed that was the cause for his coming here and calling for additional revenue. Let us see whether he is right about that. He said that revenues from customs receipts—and he referred to August, as I assume, although he does not make himself quite clear, because perhaps he did not want the masses of the people to fully understand just what he meant [applause on the Republican side]—had fallen off $10,629,000. The President is in a position to get absolutely correct information from this Government, but the fact is, gentlemen, in customs receipts there was a falling off in August of $11,503,000, but on the total revenues collected from imports—customs receipts and from all other sources—there was a falling off of about the amount named by the President. Did he mean August or did he mean for the 11 months during the life of the Underwood tariff law?

The imports into this country for the month of August fell off $8,252,000 below the value of imports for the month of August, 1913, and yet he calls your attention to the fact that the customs receipts for August this year were about $10,600,000 below August last year—in fact, it was $11,500,000. Can you conceive how there could be a falling off of $11,500,000 in customs receipts on such a slight falling off in value of imports? Why, my friends, the loss of revenue from customs receipts for August this year was 37 per cent below the amount of customs receipts collected during the month of August, 1913, and our imports fell off but 6 per cent. Where would you imagine you could lay the blame? On the Underwood tariff law, of course, which law has been an absolute failure, as far as furnishing revenue for this Government is concerned. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The revenue from customs receipts for the month of February this year was $10,000,000 less than the customs receipts for February, 1913. Why, gentlemen, did the President not say something about February? Why did he not say that there had been a falling off of customs receipts month by month from the very adoption of the Underwood tariff law down to the day he delivered his message in this House? He evidently did not want to tell you all. The customs receipts for the month of February fell off 36 per cent below the customs receipts for February, 1913, although the imports for the month of February this year were but 1.6 per cent below imports for February, 1913.

My Democratic friends, you reduced the duty on imported sugar in the Underwood tariff law from $1.348 to $1 per 100 pounds, and the loss of revenue from sugar alone since the 1st day of March to the 1st day of September, this year, is $12,727,000. And what have you done for the consumers? Have you lowered the price of sugar to them? Oh, in what a sorrowful position you have put yourselves in this matter! Last March, February, and January sugar was selling wholesale in New York, free on board cars, for $4.21 per 100 pounds, and the domestic beet-sugar producers in the State of Michigan were selling their sugar at the same time for $3.90 per 100 pounds, 2 per cent off for cash in 10 days. Beet sugar went off the market before the 1st day of June—all the sugar in the State of Michigan, except that possibly one concern, the German-American Sugar Co., had a little left, as was said by the press.

Where is the price of sugar to-day? Oh, but you say the war is responsible for the high price of sugar to-day. There was no war in 1911 I know of, except the war you Democrats declared on domestic producers, that could have affected the price of sugar, and yet the American Sugar Refining Co., the Federal Sugar Refining Co., and the Arbuckle Bros. Sugar Refining Co., in New York, put sugar up to 7½ cents a pound, where they have it to-day. In other words, gentlemen, sugar is 3½ cents per pound higher to-day than in March last.

Mr. GORDON. Mr Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have such a limited time that I can not yield now, but I will yield at the end of my speech if I have the time.

Mr. GORDON. There was just one point there that I wanted to ask you about.

Mr. FORDNEY. Three and one-half cents a pound on a barrel of 350 pounds of sugar is $12.25 per barrel, and the people of the United States are consuming on the average about 70,000 barrels of sugar a day. Twelve dollars and twenty-five cents a barrel on 70,000 barrels is $857,700 a day that you, by the enactment of your paragraph in the Underwood tariff law on sugar, are wringing from the consumers of this country and putting into the pockets of the Sugar Trust. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You have robbed the Government of $12,727,000 revenue from sugar during that time, and $857,500 a day, or $25,725,000 a month, is what the people are paying. Oh, what a glorious, charitable act you have performed for the Sugar Trust! [Applause on the Republican side.]

As I said, you will say, "The war is the cause of this abnormal increase in the price of sugar." I am going to be fair with you. I am going to admit that war is responsible for a portion of that increase in price. But there was no cause on earth in 1911, no warrant whatever, that justified the Sugar Trust of this country in advancing the price of sugar to 7½ cents except that the power to do so was in the refining companies. And the only competition they have, the only thorn in the side of the great refining trust of this country, is the domestic sugar industry. While that domestic sugar is upon the market, you know and I know and everybody knows that the price of sugar to the consumer is way below the price the consumer pays in the summer months, during the canning season, when there is no domestic sugar upon the market in competition with trust-made sugar.

THE LOUISIANA SUIT SHOULD BE TRIED.

I offered an amendment to this bill in the Committee on Ways and Means. I asked that permission by Congress be given to the Supreme Court of the United States to hear the State of Louisiana in a case that State presented to the Supreme Court wherein it asked the Supreme Court to determine whether or not the paragraph in the Underwood tariff law affecting sugar is constitutional. The State of Louisiana holds that that paragraph is unconstitutional, because it is a violation of the treaty entered into between this Government and the Government of Cuba in 1903, because the treaty itself says that no change shall be made in the treaty until one or the other of the contracting parties has given 12 months' notice in advance of their intention to change or abrogate the treaty. No notice was given to Cuba, and you lawyers know if that question were submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States they would hold that paragraph in the Underwood tariff law to be unconstitutional; and all the State of Louisiana asked was that in case the Supreme Court of the United States should so hold the Treasurer of the United States should be directed to collect the back taxes on sugar now held by the Sugar Trust and cover that money into the general fund in the Treasury of the United States. But my amendment was voted down by your unanimous vote.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Just for an explanation?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. How much money would be covered into the Treasury if the State of Louisiana were permitted to bring this suit and were successful in carrying it out?

Mr. FORDNEY. It would be $12,727,166.96 to the 1st of September.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Just another question, for information.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Would the Government of the United States suffer one cent of expense if the State of Louisiana were successful in that suit?

Mr. FORDNEY. Absolutely none; but if the Supreme Court should so hold, they would gain $12,727,000 to put into the Treasury of the United States, and it would make it unnecessary to raise that much under this nefarious war-tax measure, so called. [Applause on the Republican side.]

My friends, to show you how you have aided the Sugar Trust, here are some circulars sent out last winter by Sears, Roebuck & Co. and Montgomery Ward & Co., in which they offered 100 pounds of sugar for $2.75, first-class granulated, produced by the American Sugar Refining Co., Arbuckle Bros., or the Federal Sugar Co. On the cover of Montgomery Ward & Co.'s March and April, 1914, grocery list the following is printed in large letters: "Thirty-five pounds granulated sugar, $1." The second page of their list is devoted to their sugar advertising, and they print the following:

We do not handle beet sugar. We will fill your order with one of the following well-known eastern refiners' brands: Arbuckle's, Havemeyer & Elder's, McCahan's, Franklin, or Mollenhauer's.

The last two named are refiners of the American Sugar Refining Co. On another printed list I have here they advertise:

One hundred pounds sugar, $2.75. Of course, your local store at home can't meet our prices, but the owner of it is doing the best he can, and it may be a source of satisfaction to you to know just how much he has to charge you over our price.

Sears, Roebuck & Co. devote several pages of their May and June, 1914, grocery list to sugar advertising. On page 2 is the following:

Forty pounds sugar, $1. This gives you sugar at 2½ cents a pound.

There is every evidence this kind of advertising is made possible and encouraged by the Sugar Trust with the one aim of crushing the domestic industry. It has unmistakable earmarks of the cunning of Frank C. Lowry, the hireling of the Sugar Trust, who boasts of dictating Democratic sugar legislation. Oh, what a lovely kind of competition you have brought about at a time when the domestic sugar is on the market; and the moment it is off the market war is declared in Europe and up goes the price to 7 or 8 cents a pound wholesale.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield for a short question.

Mr. GORDON. Just on the point the gentleman is making, that the reduction of the tariff had not lowered the price of sugar, will the gentleman tell us how it has put the sugar producers out of business, if that is true?

Mr. FORDNEY. My friend, the sugar manufacturers of this country must contract for beets in December and January. They had to make their contracts in December and January last for this fall's grind. It takes all summer to grow beets, and the contracts are made with the farmers several months in advance of planting, and there was no indication given out by you or your President that there was going to be a war. [Laughter on the Republican side.] And finding sugar for sale in Chicago at $2.75 a hundred pounds last winter, just about the sum the beet-sugar manufacturer pays to the farmer for the sugar in the beets delivered at the factory, they knew that kind of ruinous competition would put them out of business. They have made a great mistake, however, if the war lasts and the trust holds up the price.

UNDERWOOD BILL HAS DESTROYED DOMESTIC INDUSTRY.

You closed out 12 of the 73 beet-sugar factories in the United States and will lessen the production of beet sugar this year by 125,000 tons, and you have closed from 20 to 30 per cent of the production of cane sugar in the State of Louisiana. The President has said he would injure no legitimate industry. Therefore your sugar industry must not have been legitimate or President Wilson never would have signed a bill placing sugar on the free list, to take effect May 1, 1916. He has taken off a little piece at a time, as the Irishman did with his dog's ears, so that it would not hurt so much. [Laughter.]

The amendment offered by me provided for an additional paragraph, as follows:

Be it further enacted, etc., That in order that paragraph 177 of Schedule E and paragraph B of section 4 of the act of October 3, 1913, may be interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States in the light of the Cuban reciprocity treaty of December 11, 1902, and in pursuance of the decree of said United States Supreme Court of June 22, 1914, the authority of Congress is hereby granted that the State of Louisiana may institute suit against the United States for the purpose of determining the legal rate of duty to be assessed on sugar imported from Cuba and other countries: Provided, That if the Supreme Court finds that the duty assessed against Cuban sugar since March 1, 1914, has been insufficient the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to institute proceedings to recover the balance due the United States, and upon recovery to cover it into the Treasury to the credit of the general fund.

The substitute does not contemplate any new tariff legislation. It merely provides for an interpretation by the United States Supreme Court of the law already on the statute books. It does not carry one cent of appropriation out of the Public Treasury. It is so clearly in the interest of the public welfare that, when understood, official opposition to it amounts to nothing less than a public scandal.

If the authority is granted by Congess to have this question settled by the Supreme Court and that tribunal should decide that the sugar duties are being improperly construed and enforced, it will result in a recovery of more than $25,000,000 a year by the Public Treasury, which sum is now being wrongfully diverted into the treasury of the Sugar Refining Trust. This amount is equivalent to one-fourth of the sum which the revenue legislation under consideration is intended to wring from the American people in the shape of war taxes.

What honest opposition can be interposed to having the highest court of the land pass upon this question? From the very beginning of this Government all disputed issues affecting the revenues have been prosecuted with relentless vigor. One of the cherished traditions of the American people has been that those charged with the administration of our fiscal affairs could be depended upon to show unbending zeal in this regard. The Government has never permitted the slightest paltering in such matters, but has ever pursued relentlessly transactions of a questionable interpretation affecting the Public Treasury. Even the humblest moonshiner in the remotest mountain fastness, whose evasions of our internal-revenue laws could result in only an inappreciable loss to the Government, has been hunted down without mercy or remorse.

It has remained for the present administration to reverse that policy. Instead of seizing upon this opportunity to possibly recover $25,000,000 to the Public Treasury, we find it attempting to frustrate the plan to even have the matter passed upon by the Supreme Court, yet at the same time urging Congress to burden the people with $100,000,000 of internal taxes.

This course of the administration is all the more astounding because the identical interests that are charged with improperly profiting by the loss of this $25,000,000 to the United States Treasury were the chief culprits referred to by the last Attorney General of the United States when he stated in his annual report, in discussing "frauds upon the revenues," that "they had been guilty of a long-continued system of defrauding the Government of unparalleled depravity." They are the same interests that under the last administration were convicted by the Department of Justice of bribing and corrupting United States employees upon the sugar docks; the same interests that placed secret springs in the Government scales on which the cargoes of imported sugar were weighed, so that they could steal a pound or two on each sack; the same interests that the Department of Justice, under the last administration, compelled to return to the United States Treasury more than $4,000,000 of their stealings.

In contrast with that splendid record we find the Department of Justice to-day apparently in league with these interests. When the European war broke out and these same interests increased the price of sugar to an enormous figure, the Department of Justice as at present conducted, instead of instituting proceedings against them under the Sherman anti-trust law, issued an outrageous innuendo against the American farmer.

RIDICULOUS ANNOUNCEMENT BY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

That department gave out to the public press a statement that one of its agents in Kansas City has reported that this year's crop of beet sugar had mysteriously disappeared, which was held in that community to be responsible for the high price of sugar. The stupidity of this story, which attempted to fasten one of the machinations of the Refining Trust on the domestic sugar producers, was only equaled by the stupidity of the department in selecting the place to make public such a silly story.

It so happened that when that canard was given out the ink was hardly dry on a decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission granting cheaper rates on Hawaiian sugar into Chicago over the protest of the refining combine. The Louisiana sugar interests, while having no direct interest in this case, secured through Senator RANSDELL the publication of the testimony in order that the action of the sugar refiners in opposing cheaper sugar could be exposed. It was printed a few weeks ago as Senate Document 493, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and on page 128 we find an interesting statement by Mr. J. R. Koontz, general freight agent of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway. He says:

I consider Kansas City as a great dumping point; it is a storage point. We have our storage arrangements on sugar, and there are hundreds and hundreds of tons of sugar stored there * * * This sugar moves into Kansas City from California and New Orleans and from the Colorado and Utah factories in immense quantities.

Instead of looking into the mammoth railroad warehouses at Kansas City for this immense supply of sugar held for the refiners by the roads free of storage, the agent of the Department of Justice sent out the silly story about the disappearance of the beet-sugar crop that had not yet been harvested, much less manufactured. In this same Senate document evidence is printed that the railroads, in violation of the law, store immense quantities of sugar for the refiners at Chicago, as well as Kansas City, and while this practice has been called to the attention of the Department of Justice, it has apparently taken no action.

This indifference to the unlawful practices of the sugar refiners and their allies has resulted in a serious menace to American business. Having conspired with the present administration to destroy the domestic sugar producers, the refiners are now working, apparently through the connivance of the powers that are, to eliminate the small merchants and thus to further increase their immense profits. They have struck hands will the mail-order houses, and the significance of this connivance on the part of the Department of Justice to their free storage on the outskirts of Chicago is understood when we read the announcements of these latest of the allies of the refiners.

In one of their alluring circulars intended to eliminate the retail grocers from the sugar trade this statement is made:

In our March-April grocery catalogue we listed sugar at $4.19 for 100 pounds. This was less than the "wholesale market price." That is, less than the price at which wholesale grocery houses were selling sugar to the retail grocers at the time we issued our March-April list. * * * The reason we can afford this price is that we are among the largest distributers of sugar, retail or wholesale, in the world. We sell annually over 35,000,000 pounds. * * * It comes direct from the refinery in those bags and goes direct to our customers in the same bags. We furnish the bags, and the refinery fills them by automatic machinery as the sugar comes out of the drier. It is never touched by anyone's hands until our customers open the bags in their homes. * * * In spite of this exceptional handling, we sell the sugar at retail to our customers for less than the jobber sells to the retail grocer at wholesale. We guarantee our price to be always as low as the wholesale price and often it is lower. We can do this because we sell over 35,000,000 pounds of sugar a year and have only one handling.

Washington was recently flooded with red circulars sent on by another one of these agencies of the refining ring that is escaping the warehousing and other fixed charges that the wholesalers and jobbers have to pay. It said:

One hundred pounds sugar, $2.75. This is fine, white, granulated sugar. Same quality sells in stores everywhere at about $6 per 100 pounds. Of course your local store at home can't meet our prices, but the owner of it is probably doing the best he can, and it may be a source of satisfaction to you to know just how much he has to charge you over our price. While his charge will seem exorbitant, compared to ours, he has probably bought his goods in small quantities, on credit, from a high-salaried drummer; his sales are small compared with his expenses, and he is therefore obliged to sell at high prices.

DAMAGING LETTERS OF SUGAR TRUST.

But the most culpable inaction by the Department of Justice in failing to prosecute the Sugar Refining Trust is to be found in Louisiana. During the last administration a raid was made on the headquarters of the Sugar Trust. It resulted in the capture of correspondence between the officials and their subordinates in various parts of the United States. Among the letters captured were two written by the manager of the trust properties in Louisiana, which are as flagrant a violation of the anti-trust law as has ever been discovered. Here they are:

[Extract from letter of J. T. Witherspoon, manager of the New Orleans plant of the American Sugar Refining Co., to H. C. Mott.]

NEW ORLEANS, October 27, 1904.

Mr. H. C. MOTT,
No. 117 Wall Street, New York.

DEAR SIR: It was mentioned yesterday that some of the parties here who have sold us large lots of sugar at a fixed price under the New York price day of arrival would probably enter into an arrangement with the Federal Refinery, of New York, whereby this concern throughout November and December would buy small lots on the New York market at not less than 4¼ for 96° test, and thereby fix the New York quotations at this figure, which in turn would be the supposed figure for settlement of sugars arriving here.

While this would be a most contemptuous plan, still there are some people here not too good to make the attempt, and if the Federal is willing, I am satisfied some of the large buyers here would reimburse them for any loss they might sustain.

I only mention this to show you what might possibly take place, and for you to be on your guard. * * *

Commencing with the latter part of next week the daily arrivals here on account of contracts already made will be large. These contracts, as you know will be settled at a differential under the New York price day of arrival. Hence it behooves you to depress the New York market as much as possible, for the lower the New York quotation is the less these sugars will cost us.

Yours, very truly,

J. T. WITHERSPOON.

[Extract from letter of J. T. Witherspoon, manager of the New Orleans branch of the American Sugar Refining Co., to President Thomas.]

NEW ORLEANS, October 28, 1908.

Mr. W. B. THOMAS,
President the American Sugar Refining Co.,
New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. THOMAS: I want to bring to your attention the competition in the way of refined sugars that we will have in New Orleans during the coming winter. * * *

What I particularly desire to call your attention to is that the higher we hold our prices for granulated sugar here during the next three months naturally the more profit these plantations will make on their product, and if the information once gets abroad that it is more profitable for the different plantations to produce granulated sugar than to turn out raws or clarified, I am afraid next season many others will commence doing likewise; consequently it might be well for you to consider the proposition of permitting New Orleans during the next three months to maintain a difference in price below New York of at least 10 cents, and at periods of extreme dullness, when these outsiders here are quoting low prices and selling their product, of even 20 cents per hundred pounds.

What I am particularly interested in is seeing the little outside competition develop as little as possible.

Yours, very truly, J. T. WITHERSPOON.

I have explained at some length the attitude of the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice as at present administered toward the sugar-refining combine. That combine is the only interest that could possibly suffer should the United States Supreme Court decide the suit proposed by my amendment on behalf of the Government.

The object sought to be accomplished by this amendment is to secure the consent of Congress to permit the State of Louisiana to file suit in the Supreme Court of the United States with a view to having two sections of the Underwood bill pertaining to the sugar schedule interpreted by that court.

The tariff act of October 3, 1913, has this provision in it:

SCHEDULE E—SUGAR, MOLASSES, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

177. Sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 75°, seventy-one one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound; and for every additional degree shown by the polariscope test, twenty-six one-thousandths of 1 cent per pound additional; and fractions of a degree in proportion.

Later on, in the same bill, under section 4 of the administrative features of the bill, paragraph b reads as follows:

b. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and the Republic of Cuba on the 11th day of December, 1902, or the provisions of the act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same, except as to the proviso of article 8 of said treaty, which proviso is hereby abrogated and repealed.

The first of these provisions, paragraph 177 of Schedule E, provides for an average decrease in the duty on sugar of 25 per cent—a horizontal cut on all grades of sugar. In other words, the Payne law, as it had been under prior law, the Dingley Act, showing the duty was ninety-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound for sugar showing 75° by the polariscopic test and thirty-five one-thousandths of 1 cent per pound for each additional degree. That rate under the Underwood Act was cut down to seventy-one one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound for sugar testing 75°, with an increase of twenty-six one-thousandths of 1 cent per pound for each additional degree of purity. That reduction under this bill was not to take effect at the time the bill became law, but on the 1st day of March of the following year, 1914. And that reduction as it appears in the first provision, under Schedule E, was to last only until the 1st day of May, 1916, after which the provision itself was to disappear, as sugar would then be automatically placed on the free list.

On the other hand, in the administrative feature of the Underwood law under section 4 the statement is made that nothing in the act itself shall be construed as altering, amending, or in any wise changing the treaty with Cuba, except the proviso of section 8, which is repealed by the act; and nothing therein contained shall be construed as changing, altering, or modifying in any wise the law under which that treaty was put into effect. That law, the law upon which rests this Cuban reciprocity agreement, was reenacted.

The Cuban treaty was sent to Congress by President Roosevelt on December 16, 1902. It was discussed at considerable length, and the Senate made several amendments of minor features, but placed two important amendments into the treaty before ratifying it. One of these was article 11. This reads as follows:

This treaty shall not take effect until the same shall have been approved by the Congress.

The other and most important amendment which the Senate placed in the treaty was the proviso of section 8, referred to in paragraph B of section 4 of the Underwood bill, and reads:

Provided, That while this convention is in force no sugar imported from the Republic of Cuba, and being the product of the soil or industry of the Republic of Cuba, shall be admitted into the United States at a reduction of duty greater than 20 per cent of the rates of duty thereon as provided by the tariff act of the United States, approved July 24, 1897 (the Dingley bill), and no sugar the product of any other foreign country shall be admitted by treaty or convention into the United States while this convention is in force at a lower rate of duty than that provided by the tariff act of the United States approved July 24, 1897 (the Dingley bill).

In other words, the treaty not only was to affect Cuba and the duty on sugar coming from Cuba, but made it obligatory never to give Cuba more than 20 per cent reduction, while at the same time agreeing to give any other country a less rate of duty than that existing at the time the treaty was enacted; that is, the Dingley tariff rate.

When the bill to carry the Cuban treaty into effect was introduced in the House in 1903 the identical provision contained in article 8 of the treaty was incorporated verbatim in the bill. It reads as follows:

Provided, That while said convention is in force no sugar imported from the Republic of Cuba, and being the product of the soil or industry of the Republic of Cuba, shall be admitted into the United States at a reduction of duty greater than 20 per cent of the rates of duty thereon as provided by the tariff act of the United States, approved July 24, 1897, and no sugar the product of any other foreign country shall be admitted by treaty or convention into the United States while this convention is in force at a lower rate of duty than that provided by the tariff act of the United States approved July 24, 1897.

So we find this provision both in the enabling law and in the treaty itself, a provision by which this Government binds itself by a solemn treaty with the Republic of Cuba that so long as that treaty is in existence there shall be no change in the duty imposed upon the importation of sugar into this country.

If there was no law forming the basis of this treaty it would be a question of honor on the part of this Government toward the people of Cuba, whether this obligation should be carried out or not, or whether Congress, having reduced the rate of duty by 25 per cent, the loss incurred by the Republic of Cuba should not be met by a corresponding reduction of the reciprocal trade advantages allowed this country as recited in the treaty.

But this treaty could not exist except through the enabling act of Congress. The Senate itself said, "We will not ratify it until Congress has given the authority for this treaty," and the United States Supreme Court has held that this Cuban treaty was effective from the date of the passage of the enabling act of Congress. In the case of the United States v. the American Sugar Refining Co. (202 U. S., p. 563), the Supreme Court held that—where there is discrepancy between the treaty and the act enabling the treaty to be concluded, the courts will not look to the treaty, but will look to the enabling act itself, for guidance.

It will therefore be seen that when Congress reduced the duty 25 per cent on sugar imported from every country in the world, and reenacted at the same time the law of 1903, in which it is provided that so long as that treaty continues to exist there shall not be any change in the duty on sugar imported into this country, that two contrary and opposite provisions were written in the Underwood act. Here we have an anomaly presented, where in one clause of an act of Congress it provided that the duty shall be reduced 25 per cent, and following that, in the same act, we have a provision which says that nothing in this act shall change the duty provided in tariff act of 1897.

The language of the last tariff act plainly says that there has been no repeal of the enabling act of the treaty—the act of Congress which gave the treaty its very life, and without which it could not exist. There has been a repeal of the proviso of section 8 of the convention itself, but there was a reenactment of the enabling act, which is the basis of that convention, and we must look in such cases, says the United States Supreme Court, to the enabling law and not to the treaty where such discrepancies exist.

There is obviously a conflict of meaning, and therefore the United States Supreme Court should decide whether in that conflict the legislative intent was really to repeal what, in effect, has been reenacted by paragraph b, section 4. It is upon this question that the State of Louisiana seeks to have the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States.

SUGAR VOTES SELECTED DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE.

Mr. Speaker, when I addressed the House some weeks ago upon the ungrateful treatment meted out to the domestic-sugar industry by this administration I pointed out the invaluable aid given by the delegates from the sugar-cane growing sections of the South, who actually won the nomination for the successful candidate before the Baltimore convention.

I was an interested observer of that contest. The Democrats had just passed the so-called popgun free-sugar bill in this House. It was pending in the Senate while the Baltimore convention was in session, but was destined to be denounced by the Democratic members of the Finance Committee as un-Democratic and violative alike of the traditions and platforms of that party, and they doomed free sugar to defeat before the adjournment of the Sixty-second Congress.

Aside from having taken an active part in the discussion of the popgun free-sugar bill, I was, as I have said, an interested spectator of the fight made within the ranks of the Democratic Party by the sugar-refining interests against the domestic-sugar farmers, because my own State has become one of the principal producers of beet sugar, and I am also a taxpayer in the State of Mississippi, near the neighboring sugar-cane fields of Louisiana, and a taxpayer in Louisiana as well.

I recall, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Mississippi, in a State-wide primary, expressed a preference for their neighbor, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], then, as now, the Democratic leader of this House, for President. At the same time they named the gentleman from Missouri, then, as now, the Speaker of this House, as their second choice. In expressing a choice for either the gentleman from Alabama or the gentleman from Missouri they were only repeating the expressed preferences of practically all of the reliably Democratic States of the South. The candidate from New Jersey, who finally triumphed over them at Baltimore, was receiving very little support or comfort at that time from the solid South.

Mississippi spoke on May 6, and the press agent of Gov. Wilson, on realizing the completeness of the defeat, lost no time in shaking the dust of that State from his heels.

The Times-Democrat of May 8 announced his arrival in New Orleans the previous night from Jackson, Miss., "where he had been active in the preferential primary." The paper quotes him as—

Charging that Gov. Wilson's strongest opponent is Speaker CLARK, and that there is a combination of Democratic Congressmen at Washington which is boosting the candidacy of the Speaker in all of the States where primaries are held to decide the people's preference. He was much interested in the result of the Mississippi primary, and said he did not think the majority for UNDERWOOD would count for much in the convention. He attributed it to the hundreds of letters that were sent out by Senator-elect VARDAMAN in behalf of Mr. UNDERWOOD, and in which the Mississippian expressed his preference for Speaker CLARK for second choice.

Then began, Mr. Speaker, a campaign that has had few parallels in American politics and is not likely to be repeated when the duplicity in all of its details become known to the American people.

As I have said, the popgun free-sugar bill, which struck at the very vitals of Louisiana's chief industry, had passed this House and was then pending in the Senate. But an even greater catastrophe was impending. The greatest flood in history was then sweeping down the Mississippi Valley. The barriers in Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Mississippi had successively given way as the crest of the flood swept south, but the greatest suffering and loss was reserved for the low, fertile fields of Louisiana.

Appalling as the European war has proved, the territory ravished and the loss entailed have been but small compared with the havoc of that flood. Hundreds of thousands of people were made homeless and hundreds of millions of dollars were destroyed. In their hour of trouble the people of Louisiana turned to the Speaker of the House, who dwelt, like they did, near the great Father of Waters. They felt that if elected he would take over the control of the great river and forever protect them from a repetition of its floods.

Accordingly, on May 26, 1912, the Times-Democrat carried a telegram from Baton Rouge stating that Gov. Hall, feeling like most of the other southern executives, had issued a prepared statement announcing that he personally favored the nomination of Speaker CLARK by the Democratic national convention.

Immediately the emissaries of Gov. Wilson began the notorious campaign of promises to the sugar growers of the State. That campaign resulted in the nomination of Gov. Wilson at Baltimore through these same sugar votes, only to be followed by a repudiation of the promises as soon as he came into power and was confronted with the necessity of choosing between the Sugar Refining Trust and its inveterate enemy, the American farmer who produces sugar.

To counteract Gov. Hall's pronouncement in favor of Speaker CLARK, the Wilson people made a public announcement the same day through Hon. Edgar H. Farrar, former president of the American Bar Association and one of the leaders of the American bar. It will be found in the New Orleans Times-Democrat of May 26, 1912:

With regard to Louisiana Democrats, Mr. Farrar said that he could not understand how any one of them could vote for CLARK in the face of the influence that the Speaker had exerted to have sugar placed on the free list.

After reviewing Speaker CLARK'S record in Congress and giving seven reasons why he could not support such a candidate, Mr. Farrar continued:

"I oppose Mr. CLARK as a Louisianian and a tariff-for-revenue Democrat. Mr. CLARK is responsible for the action of the House in placing sugar on the free list, which I regard as a flagrant violation of every principle laid down in any Democratic platform.

"Personally I am a free trader, and I hope to see the time come when we shall have no tariffs in this country and the Government will be supported on an income tax, an excise tax on liquors and tobacco, and an inheritance tax; but that result can only be reached slowly and by degrees.

"This country has swallowed too much tariff poison, and that poison has become too intimately incorporated into its industrial life to be cured by drastic action.

"In my judgment, the putting of sugar on the free list, while leaving everything the sugar producer buys in order to live and produce his crops on the protected list, was an economic crime in general, and an absolutely unjustifiable action in respect to a national industry that grew up in Louisiana before it became a part of the United States.

"I can not conceive how any Louisiana Democrat can support Mr. CLARK."

PRE-ELECTION PROMISES TO SUGAR INDUSTRY.

I hold here, Mr. Speaker, a certified copy of the official journal of the State of Louisiana of May 31, 1912, containing a public statement made to the people of that State at that time by the personal representative of Gov. Wilson in Louisiana to secure the support of the sugar-growing farmers. In it he says:

I can scarcely believe that Gov. Hall has expressed a preference for CHAMP CLARK, as reported in the newspapers. * * *

To all Louisianians, and especially those in the sugar, rice, and lumber sections, I would call attention to the following language of CHAMP CLARK on March 25, 1897, volume 165, page 270, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session:

"Let me tell you, gentlemen, the debate on the tariff question will go on forever unless you come to the doctrine of common sense, the doctrine of free trade."

Again, on January 15, 1894, second session, Fifty-third Congress, page 833, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

"I am in favor of letting woolens come in free. And, what is a good deal more, I am in favor of letting everything else come in free. That is my creed. I propose to support every amendment to this bill (Wilson bill) that puts anything on the free list. You can not have too much of a good thing. I am a free trader from the crown of my head to the sole of my foot. That is the doctrine of nature and of common sense."

On the same occasion he stated that he would tear down the custom-houses of the United States.

I desire to place in juxtaposition with this statement of Mr. CLARK'S the following from Gov. Woodrow Wilson, which was said at the National Democratic Club of New York, January 3, 1912:

"Now, what are we going to do? Are we going to act as free traders? I wish that I might hope that our grandchildren could indulge in free trade, but I am afraid that even they can not, because they have to pay bills of the Federal Government. We have a Federal system of government, and it is wise, it is good housekeeping, it is good management, to leave direct taxes, for the most part, to the State governments, because they have current bills to pay. It is likely that for an indefinite period we will have to pay our national bills by duties collected at the ports. Though I am not for drastic changes, yet I wish I saw some ultimate escape from it. At present I do not. Therefore, what we have to ask ourselves is not the principle upon which we are to act, for that is plain. We are to act upon the fundamental principle of the Democratic Party, not free trade but tariff for revenue, and we have got to approach that by such avenues, by such stages and at such a pace as will be consistent with the stability and safety of the business of the country."

IN NORTH LOUISIANA.

While north Louisiana can, if it will, declare against any protection of Louisiana industries, particularly that of sugar, which antedates statehood, and, as everyone knows, is the least expensive revenue, in the collection by the United States, it can not afford to subscribe to any drastic revolution that would injure any section of the State. What hurts one section hurts all. The man whose land has not overflowed during the recent mad rush of the relentless floods is not so indifferent to his neighbors' loss as to congratulate himself ostentatiously and offensively upon his escape.

I say again and I repeat with all the emphasis of sincere conviction, that Louisiana is essentially a Wilson State, because of his high character, Democracy, availability, and southern birth and education.

You will note that the representative of Gov. Wilson spoke of the devastating flood that had just swept the State. So great was that catastrophe that the United States Government maintained a fleet of boats for months passing over the areas that had been thriving villages and cultivated fields, attempting to give succor to these people; the United States Army was called upon to maintain supply and medical stations among them, and while his emissary was extolling Gov. Wilson's eminence in scholastic circles through expounding half-baked theories and the generalities of government to the students of Princeton the Legislature of Louisiana was considering whether it should relieve its overflowed population by the remission of all taxes for a period of two years, by a reduction of assessments on all property for a longer period, or by an appropriation of money by the general assembly. "The remission of taxes for two years or more," it was said, "might enable the owners of property in the flooded district to rebuild their homes, restock their farms, and get on a producing basis again."

This statement of facts will enable the American people to understand the conditions that confronted the sugar producers of Louisiana when overtures and promises were made them in order to defeat the growing strength of Speaker CLARK at Baltimore. Already overwhelmed by floods that originated beyond their borders and threatened with the reenactment of free-sugar legislation that would complete their ruin, they were told that their only safety lay in sending a delegation to Baltimore that would insure the nomination of Gov. Wilson.

The bargain was struck. The sugar men of Louisiana prevented a Clark delegation being selected. They carried out their part of the compact at Baltimore. When the Louisiana sugar votes were announced during the roll calls of that long struggle it was like a Wilson oasis in a desert of Clark and Underwood votes from the South which bitterly opposed Gov.

Wilson to the end in one of the most protracted fights that has ever characterized a national convention. But in the end the sugar producers won. Their unyielding support secured the nomination for Gov. Wilson.

They returned home conscious of having fulfilled their part of the contract and addressed themselves to retrieving the disaster of the flood. It is true that the chairman of the Republican State committee warned them that they would be tricked, and sent Mr. Wilson an open telegram on October 5, 1912, in which he said:

The last Democratic House passed the Underwood free-sugar bill. The Democratic platform for 1912 approved the legislation of the Democratic House at its last session. The Democratic Campaign Book for 1912 advances extended arguments in favor of free sugar. Notwithstanding these facts, sugar men in Louisiana are being assured that you will not advocate the Underwood free-sugar bill, if elected President, but will be guided by the fourth paragraph of the Democratic platform on the tariff question, which promises downward revision that will not injure or destroy legitimate industry. The Republican campaign opens in Louisiana on the 10th instant. We do not wish to misrepresent your position. May I ask if you are in favor of the Underwood free-sugar bill or not? If not, what duty on sugar will you advocate if elected President? We will publish your answer in full with this telegram.

C. N. HERBERT,
Chairman Republican State Central Committee.

President Wilson's answer was as follows:

PHILLIPSBURG, KANS., October 6, 1912.

C. N. HERBERT,
Chairman Republican State Central Committee,
New Orleans, La.:

Your lettergram of October 5 received. My position on the question mentioned was stated in my speech of acceptance.

WOODROW WILSON.

Remembering the explicit statements made by Mr. Wilson's prenomination representative among them, the Louisiana sugar farmers felt this telegraphic correspondence was conclusive. They were among his most enthusiastic supporters. The Louisiana popular contributions, to which they were large subscribers, headed the list given out at his Chicago headquarters, and when he was elected no section of the entire Union was so much gratified. Their existence seemed secure.

But they had been reckoning without their host. A special session was immediately called to revise the tariff, and they learned to their dismay that, notwithstanding all they had done at Baltimore and afterwards to fill the campaign chest, their claims were as nothing compared with those of the Sugar Refining Trust. As Mr. Henry N. Pharr, who spoke for the sugar farmers, put it when he appeared before the Finance Committee—

The rude awakening to a realization of the fact that the domestic sugar industry had been singled out by the administration for destruction came like a thunderbolt from a clear sky.

We were absolutely staggered by the news flashed over the wires from Washington that we must decide in 24 hours between the acceptance of free sugar at the end of three years, with an immediate reduction of what is in reality nearly 40 per cent, provided no opposition was made to the measure in the Senate, or to take our chance of being sacrificed immediately for the supposed benefit of the ultimate consumer.

In this hour of desperation we could discern nothing save the insatiable greed of the sugar-refining interests of the country and the fact that their hypocritical and pharisaical campaign for free sugar was about to engulf our industry in absolute destruction.

When Mr. Wilson complains about the revenues for the month of August having fallen off $10,500,000 below the customs receipts collected for August, 1913, why did he not tell you all the truth? Why did he not tell you that for the 11 months during the life of the Underwood tariff law, from October last to August this year, there never has been a single month during the life of that law when the customs receipts reached $26,000,000, and never but one month during that time when they were over $24,000,000? He could have told you that for the last eight months the average customs receipts were but $22,000,000, and that the customs receipts collected for February were but $17,000,000 as against $19,500,000 for August; and we did not hear a peep out of you or your general manager down at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue about February receipts. [Laughter on the Republican side.] He watchfully waited for the first gun to be fired in the European war, and before the next shot could be fired was up here appealing to you to replenish the Treasury of the United States because of the war. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] The following tables show the revenue receipts of the Government in detail during the life of the Underwood tariff law compared with a corresponding period under the Payne tariff law one year previous. It must be remembered that the law was not enacted until October 3, 1913, and that some provisions of that law did not go into effect until November 1, December 1, January 1, and March 1. The portion of the month of October under the new law can not be used as a fair comparison, for importers withheld large quantities of goods awaiting the reduced rates.

Revenues of the Government from Oct. 4, 1913, to Sept. 15, 1914, compared with the corresponding period one year previous.

Customs receipts October, 1912, to August, 1913	287,087,179

Underwood tariff law:
Total imports October, 1913, to August, 1914	1,735,040,645
Customs receipts October, 1913, to August, 1914	245,931,258
Average ad valorem duty collected, 14.17 per cent.

If an average duty of 17.45 per cent had been collected on the imports from October, 1913, to August, 1914, customs receipts would amount to $303,285,104. A reduction in the ad valorem rate from 17.48 per cent to 14.17 per cent means that but 81 per cent of former customs receipts are now being collected. Free sugar will deprive the Government of not less than 15 per cent of the present total customs receipts, which will have to be made up by some manner of direct taxation.

The Democrats say it would not be wise at this time to withdraw Government money on deposit from the banks of the country. Action of this kind, they claim, would quite likely cause a money panic of great magnitude. They seem to think, however, by this war tax they can put the administrative hand into the pocket of the people so politely and gently the people will be unconscious of the fact that $100,000,000 is being taken from them.

Taking the money out of the banks, they say, would be withdrawing money from the channels of trade; but taking it from the people would be entirely different—it would simply be raising revenue, nothing more. The Democratic Party seems to be made up of inconsistencies, but they will not be able to blindfold the people as they hope.

WAR TAX LEGISLATION.

President Wilson, in his address to Congress, September 4, 1914, urging additional tax laws, said:

I come to you to-day to discharge a duty which I wish with all my heart I might have been spared but it is a very clear duty, and therefore I perform it without hesitation or apology. I wish to ask very earnestly that additional revenues be provided for the Government.

He then compared the month of August, 1914, with the month of August, 1913, and stated that customs receipts had fallen off some $10,600,000. He added:

It is due in chief part not to the reductions made in the customs duties—and said it was due to the European war.

CONGRESS TOLD ONLY HALF THE FACTS.

When President Wilson delivered that message in the House the war had been declared by Germany against Russia but 31 days, and through the press the question of additional revenues had been discussed from the very beginning of the war, and the agitation was attributed to the administration. However, the President seemed to be especially alarmed on account of the fact that customs receipts for August had fallen off, compared with the corresponding month one year ago, and blamed it entirely on the war. He said:

The occasion is not of our own making. We had no part in making it.

Why was not the President alarmed in February, when the customs receipts were $10,000,000 less than the corresponding month one year ago? He could not blame it on the war then. Why did he not then see his clear duty to ask for additional revenues? The customs receipts in August were about $10,000,000, and this was so alarming it was made the subject of a special message to Congress. Why did not the customs receipts in May—$20,000,000—cause some alarm, or in February, when the receipts were but $17,000,000, or $2,000,000 less than in August? The President says the $10,600,000 loss in customs receipts for August was due almost entirely to the war. Does he not know, as I have stated before, that there has not been a single month since the Democratic tariff law was enacted that customs receipts have amounted to $26,000,000 and but one month that customs receipts exceeded $24,000,000? Yet he tells us that customs receipts for August—$19,400,000—were $10,600,000 below what they should be, and that the war was to blame—not the tariff. The average amount of customs receipts collected in the nine months ending August 1, 1914, were $22,200,000 per month, or but $2,800,000 more than receipts for the month of August. If the month of August showed the Government would require $100,000,000 additional revenue, certainly it must have been evident to the administration long before August that more revenue was needed. Why did the President not see his clear duty long ago and break the news to Congress and ask for more revenue?

The President compares customs receipts under the Republican tariff law with the month of August under the Democratic tariff law, and claims the decrease is due to a war in Europe. Was not the income tax enacted to make up for loss in revenue occasioned by the reduction of tariff duties? If so, why does the President ask for the passage of a new tax measure that will make up for the entire difference in customs receipts for August, 1913, and August, 1914, before and after the tariff reductions? It is a glaring inconsistency.

Democrats blame the war as being the cause for this tax measure. The real cause is Democratic extravagance in office, and they selected this time to impose their added burdens of taxation on the people. I congratulate the Democratic Party on not having a lengthy campaign to face this fall, in which their record could be reviewed. It would be good politics for Democrats to remain in Washington until after the November elections.

The deficit in customs receipts on account of the war, judging from the month of August, is something less than $3,000,000 per month, and the war may last but a few months. What will Democrats do for revenue in 1916, after sugar automatically goes on the free list and customs receipts are thereby reduced $4,000,000 per month? Will they continue their war tax long after the war is over? Why do they not adopt some revenue scheme now that they intend to use in 1916? If they must have a stamp tax and other direct taxes provided in the pending bill, I wish Democratic leaders would admit it, so the people of this country may know. This kind of a bill, together with previous "freedom-from-taxation" campaign powder used by Democrats, would be good food for thought for the voters this fall.

Among some there is an idea that the war has completely removed the necessity of tariff protection against foreign imports, not only now but for some time to come. We hear it said that now is the opportune time for our manufacturers to produce articles heretofore not produced in America; that now is the time to boost American-made goods and the "made in America" slogan. In this connection I quote an extract from a letter by one of America's leading manufacturers. It is as follows:

There seems to be a popular idea that American manufacturers have been buying stuff abroad for amusement. Such is not the case. They have been buying stuff abroad, broadly speaking, that they could not get here, because what they buy abroad that is cheaper than it could be made for in this country naturally results in the extinction or non-introduction of the production of that article in this country; consequently there is no place to get it except abroad.

Next, no manufacturer is going into the business of making a thing, as a broad general principle, simply because there is a temporary war on in Europe, knowing that as soon as the war is over, with the low tariff in force, the cheaper goods from abroad will resume their sway over the American market. I think the American manufacturers are about as clever and keen as politicians in Washington about promoting the welfare and industry and prosperity of the American people, and I for one resent the strictures and comments put forward by the politicians in Washington.

The war has indisputably proved one thing, and that is the great value of industrial independence. This country should not be dependent upon foreign countries for products we must have if such products can with reasonable economy be produced in America. Industrial independence can only be attained by the policy of adequate tariff protection. The policy of the Democratic Party—freedom of trade. I believe they call it; they ought to call it freedom from employment [laughter]—tends to make America dependent on foreigners for every product that can be produced more cheaply abroad than at home.

One point on which all political parties agree, I believe, is the great advantage of having the value of exports exceed the value of imports. It is interesting to review the favorable balance of trade of this country before and after the passage of the Underwood tariff law. What were indications as to the future growth of our balance of trade under the Republican tariff law? What has been the result of Democratic tariff legislation?

Under the Payne tariff law the favorable balance of trade of the United States was steadily increasing. During the last nine months of the life of that law that favorable balance of trade amounted to $419,702,087, and for the corresponding nine months one year previous, $283,129,664. In other words, the last nine months of that law showed an average monthly increase in the favorable balance of trade of the United States amounting to $15,173,713.

Democrats condemned that law, nevertheless, and claimed it stifled our export trade and the prosperity of the Nation. They promised a tariff law that would increase exports and enable Americans to "capture the markets of the world."

During the six months ending September 1, 1914, the favorable balance of trade not only completely vanished but our imports exceeded our exports by $33,872,251, or an unfavorable balance of trade averaging $5,645,375 per month. During the corresponding six months one year previous we had a favorable balance of trade of $250,829,413, or $41,804,902 per month. In other words, the balance of trade of the United States for the past six months shows a loss of $284,701,664, compared with the corresponding six months one year ago, under the Payne law, or a net monthly loss of $47,450,277.

From the above it can be seen that the Democrats have abolished a tariff law that was increasing our favorable balance of trade by $15,173,713 per month and have enacted a tariff law that is decreasing that balance of trade by $47,450,277 per month; a total change in results amounting to no less than $62,623,990 per month—over $2,000,000 per day, which would furnish employment to 1,000,000 American workingmen at $2 a day.

The loss in the balance of trade represents money that has been sent abroad to purchase foreign products, which money should have been retained in America. It means loss of employment to American working men and women and a corresponding loss in the purchasing power of our people.

The following table shows the increase of imports, month by month, and the decrease of exports since the new tariff law was enacted compared with corresponding months one year previous, when a Republican tariff law was in effect. It shows a loss in trade in 10 months of $392,452,214.

How long will the good thinking people of this country endure with patience the glaring inconsistencies of the Democratic Party? During the many years the Democrats were in the minority they made pleasing promises too numerous to mention. Among other things, they promised greater prosperity, low cost of living, and ample employment; they promised freedom from oppressive taxation and the greatest economy in the expenditures of Government money.

What has been their record? Have they kept their pledges to the people? Is this country in a prosperous condition? In regard to the present depression in business and lack of employment there are some who contend the war is to blame. But the fact can not be concealed, and it can not be denied, that there were great numbers of unemployed and that business was suffering a serious depression before the war was anticipated. The Democrats then said the business depression was psychological. They admitted, however, a grave business depression did exist and offered a flimsy excuse for hard times.

During the last campaign the Democrats promised, if placed in power, to enact a tariff law that would enable American manufacturers to increase their export trade and capture the markets of the world. "The future growth of American industry lies across the sea" was their slogan. They scoffed at cheap, foreign labor, and said, "Let us have competition and whet the wits of our business men." They were placed in power; they enacted a tariff law in conformity with their views. What has resulted?

Since November 1, 1913, after the passage of the Democratic tariff law and down to September 1, 1914, American exports have not only failed to increase but have fallen off to the enormous extent of $253,000,000 as compared with the corresponding months of the previous year. Can Democrats quibble about it; can they devise or invent an excuse? That law is not aiding Americans to capture foreign markets, but is materially helping foreigners to capture American markets. It will sharpen the wits of our business men to the disadvantage of the Democratic Party. During the 10 months ending September 1, 1914, that tariff law has enabled foreigners to increase their sales in American markets by $138,000,000 compared with the same 10 months of the previous year.

HOW THE UNDERWOOD TARIFF HAS FAILED.

During the 10 months mentioned the favorable balance of trade of the United States with foreign countries has fallen off more than $390,000,000. This means that $390,000,000 which should have been paid to American producers, employing American labor, has been sent across the seas to purchase goods from foreign producers, employing foreign cheaply paid labor. That tariff law is displacing American labor; it is decreasing the purchasing power of the American people. Is not all this some cause for a business depression? In the face of this, how can Democrats make intelligent people believe in their psychological excuse? The President has said, "Let us have pitiless publicity." I agree with him.

How about Democratic pledges of economy? The Democrats have bitterly accused the Republicans of extravagance in office, and have pledged themselves repeatedly to a policy of strict economy. Their record in office has shown their pledges to be a "comedy of errors."

In the Democratic platform of 1908 they said:

We denounce the needless waste of the people's money * * * as no less than a crime against the millions of working men and women, from whose earnings the great proportion of those colossal sums must be extorted. * * * We demand that a stop must be put to this frightful extravagance, and insist upon the strictest economy in every department compatible with frugal and efficient administration.

Again, in the platform of 1912, they said:

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic Government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

The conclusion of the Democratic platform of 1912 makes the farce complete. They said:

Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign.

Let us turn to the record of economy the Democratic Party has made during the short period they have been in office. Their appropriations at this session of Congress bid well to exceed the greatest appropriations by any Republican Congress by $125,000,000 to $160,000,000, and as a result they are enacting a war tax at a time when this country is at peace with the whole world. In a court room it is most difficult to procure evidence that will overcome an admission against interest. As strong evidence of Democratic waste of public moneys I wish to call attention to an admission against interest by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in a speech on the floor of the House when appropriation bills were under consideration. The following extract from his remarks can be found on page 6553 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 10, 1914:

In a few months I shall be called upon in the discharge of my official duties to review the record which this Democratic House shall have made in its authorization of expenditures of public moneys. Whenever I think of the horrible mess that I shall be called upon to present to the country on behalf of the Democratic Party I am tempted to quit my place.

In that speech Mr. FITZGERALD refers to his colleagues as a "band of Treasury looters." This is what a Democratic leader thinks of his own party and their record of unparalleled extravagance.

In the address of the President, delivered at a joint session of the two Houses of Congress, September 4, 1914, in regard to the necessity of raising additional revenues, he said it was due in chief part to the war in Europe. He said:

The occasion is not of our own making. We had no part in making it.

Considering the great extravagance of the Democratic Party, I contend the Democrats had everything to do in depleting the Treasury and making additional taxation a necessity. In 1900, in their political platform, the Democrats denounced the Spanish war tax, and said:

We favor the reduction and speedy repeal of the war taxes, and a return to the time-honored Democratic policy of strict economy in Government expenditures.

The only loss in revenues the European war could cause is in our customs receipts. The President, in his message showing that loss, compared the month of August, 1914, with the month of August, 1913. He compared a month under a Republican protective tariff with a month under the new Democratic law. Why did he not compare customs receipts during August with the average monthly receipts during the preceding eight months, or since wool was placed on the free list? If he had done so he would have shown the loss of revenue in the month of August was $2,800,000, whereas by taking August, 1913, as a basis for his comparison, he showed a loss of customs receipts of something over $10,000,000 for the month. When the Democrats were preparing their new tariff law and reducing duties they conceded they would have to resort to some other manner of taxation, and adopted the income-tax law, which appears as a part of their new tariff law. That income tax was intended to make up for the loss in customs receipts caused by the passage of the Underwood tariff law, and is answering that purpose. Notwithstanding the existence of the income tax and the new tariff law, the President, as before stated, compares the month of August, 1913, with the month of August, 1914, and says the difference in customs receipts is due to the war in Europe. Will he not admit that a reduction of duties will to some extent reduce customs receipts? If not, why was the income tax enacted? Democratic unparalleled extravagance is the one and only explanation.

At the present time the administration is moving heaven and earth to work out some plan to maintain the price of cotton. They urge the southern planters to hold their cotton for better prices and advise others to buy cotton to hold so prices may not decline. The administration seeks much praise and glory for its course. At the very same time we find the administration ordering an investigation of the beet-sugar producers of the North to find whether or not they are withholding any sugar from the market.

If sugar is withheld, the administration threatens to instigate prosecutions for violations of the trust laws. The administration also seeks much praise and glory for this. I do not seek to condemn the attempt to aid the cotton growers, but what I do criticize is the absolute inconsistency of the Democratic administration. Cotton is as much a necessity of life as sugar, and the domestic sugar industry is as worthy of encouragement as the cotton industry. If it is a violation of law for the sugar manufacturer to hold his product until the canning season, when he will receive a better price, why is it not a violation of law for the cotton planter to hold his cotton? The truth of the matter is that 99 per cent of the beet sugar produced in the 1913–14 campaign was disposed of prior to June, 1914. Democratic legislation has already destroyed a portion of the domestic sugar industry, and the administration is now persecuting that industry and charging the sugar manufacturers as being criminals for doing the very things that are now being advocated in the South. This is an example of Democratic consistency. They seek praise for aiding a southern industry and glory for ruining a northern industry.

Democrats have advocated competition as a means of curbing trusts, but we find that political party aiding the great Sugar Refining Trust by curbing its only competition, the domestic sugar industry. If one will but observe sugar quotations for the past few years, it will be seen that as soon as the domestic beet sugar is off the market the price of sugar is advanced. In March the refiners were selling refined sugar at about 40 cents above the cost of raw sugar. On September 17, 1914, without domestic competition, we find they have increased their differential from 40 cents to $1.36 per 100 pounds. It is evident the only way to insure low-priced sugar to the consumer is to protect the home industry as a thorn in the side of the Sugar Trust. The sugar schedule of the Democratic tariff law will not aid the consumers; it will rob the Treasury of from fifty to sixty million dollars annually of badly needed revenue; it will ruin an American industry and foster and enrich as greedy a trust and monopoly as this country has ever known.

The Democratic Party have made all manner of insincere statements and promises. They resorted to every political tactic to win an election. Their position they will find untenable. They have built upon the sand, and the wind and rain—perhaps next November—will wash them away.

I want to call attention to some statements made on the floor of this House some years ago. When the Spanish War tax was before this House Mr. Dingley, then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, said:

The demand on our resources for new taxation comes upon us at a time when we are just emerging from a long period of deficiency of our revenue.

He was answered by a gentleman by the name of Sayers, from Texas, who said:

Tobacco, snuff, cigars, patent medicines, mineral water, etc.; soldiers at $13 a month must pay a tax on the tobacco they smoke while sitting around the camp fire on the battle field. There is no justice in the measure. There is no patriotism in it. The policy proposed is wrong from beginning to end. It is purely a Republican measure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD on April 28, 1898, also spoke on the bill and said:

This tax will fall almost entirely on the hard-working and industrious artisans, merchants, mechanics, farmers, and professional men of the country, but not on idle wealth that is protected but never made to pay for the benefits received.

I know its features are partisan and unjust; they will oppress the masses of the people; they are unnecessary, and the same amount of revenue could be raised from sources that would equalize the burdens of taxation and not be felt by the people.

Now, there was another gentleman, my dear friend, my beloved friend, the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, whom some of you may know [laughter]. This is what he said on May 3, 1898:

You talk like you brought on this war. This is not a Republican war, but an American war. My Republican friends, we took you by the scruff of the neck and dragged you into it, and that will be the verdict of history. We started the fire among the people, and they heated you so hot that at last you had to go into it or go out of business.

I will tell you what we are going to do, and it is a short-meter story. We will buy no more presidential pigs in poke. Next time we will know what we are getting. We intend to get together in 1900 and not only reaffirm the Chicago platform, but readopt it word for word, without abating one jot or one tittle, and place upon it our brilliant and well-beloved leader, William J. Bryan, and elect him [applause on the Democratic side], thereby ushering in the twentieth century with a Democratic administration [applause on the Democratic side].

As an honest, fair-dealing man, as a Speaker that has exerted every effort to be fair to both sides of this House he will go down in history, but as a prophet on presidential candidates he will never again be heard of. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time on this side to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 21 minutes.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and others who have addressed this House complain bitterly of the rule under which this bill was brought before this Congress. They demand greater latitude for debate and amendment, but debate and amendment should be permitted for a legitimate purpose and not simply for debate and amendment.

The tariff bill was open to debate, open to amendment, during the whole time it was considered by this House. We were notified in advance that you proposed no amendment to this measure; that the attitude of the minority toward this bill was to be one of blind obstruction. A minority is useful that proposes a better way, but a minority is pitiful that sits silent, blind, and stubborn simply to obstruct. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You either can not or will not propose a better way; you offer nothing in your minority report. We had no reason to believe that anything better could or would be secured by amendment.

We had a duty to perform to the American people, a duty to perform with fidelity and celerity, and so we have proposed to put this bill through, and we will put it through without unnecessary delay. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that the President has shown a strange tenderness for the banks; that his unwillingness to take $75,000,000, now on call in the banks all over this country, from the uses of the borrowers and to make it available for the Federal Government is showing a reprehensible tenderness for the moneyed interests and an indifference to the people, whom he proposes to burden with additional legislation.

In the light of history, that is a strange charge. In the memory of men now past the meridian of life no man can remember when the minority ever proposed an efficient measure to curb and control the monopoly of the moneyed interests. It remained for the majority, after your ignominious failure after failure, to take the control, to break the strangle hold of Wall Street and of the Money Trust upon the credits of the country, and to give to the people of America an elastic and available system of banking.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What bill is it that is in force now and furnishing this country and its people with emergency currency? Is it not the Vreeland bill? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STANLEY. The Vreeland bill without the Glass-Owen Act would be just what the Vreeland bill was before that bill was inaugurated—a mockery, a delusion, and a snare. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman know that the Glass bill has not been put into effect at all? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. STANLEY. I know that. It is the law of the land upon which the people can rely, and that the anticipation of its benefits is our bulwark at this time. We have the moral effect of the Glass-Owen Act.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. HENRY. The gentleman might remind the other side that the Aldrich-Vreeland bill could not be put into operation until it was amended by this Congress on the 4th day of August. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman proposes not to tax beer, not to tax wine, not to tax luxuries, but to tax fabrics, to tax the manufactured articles. I defy the gentlemen to bring into this House a motion to recommit, to take this hundred millions of dollars from beer, to take it from wine, to take it from gasoline, and to place it upon naked backs in need of raiment or in hungry mouths that need food. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I defy him to place it either upon woolen goods or wool or to place it upon sugar.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Where are these naked backs and these hungry mouths under this administration? [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. STANLEY. Oh, there are left just a few which we have over from the Payne-Aldrich bill. We have managed to clothe and feed the most of them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman be willing that some of this tax be put upon whisky?

Mr. STANLEY. I will not. The gentlemen by proposing a tax on spirituous liquors at this time show their absolute ignorance of the conduct of their own party. During the Spanish-American War you imposed a tax similar in many respects to this proposed tax. You placed a tax of a dollar a barrel upon beer, and you placed not one red cent upon whisky, and now you condemn us for doing the identical thing you did yourselves when you had the power. You exempted spirituous liquors. The reason is perfectly plain. A tax of 20 cents a gallon upon distilled spirits would not produce one dollar of the revenue you seek. There are now in bonded warehouses 286,901,784.9 gallons of distilled spirits. Under the law the distiller has eight years in which to pay the $1.10 imposed under existing law. Did you propose to put an additional tax upon those distilled spirits, 150,000,000 gallons at least would be taken out of bond before the act could become a law, and thus more than $150,000,000 would be taken from the very banks that you are attempting to protect, and enough distilled spirits would be tax paid to meet the exigencies of trade, and, more than probably, until after the repeal of this temporary tax. In that event you would never receive a cent of additional tax. More than that, a gallon of beer now pays a tax of 5 cents, and a gallon of wine pays a tax of from 12 to 20 cents. A gallon of distilled spirits pays a tax of $1.10. The alcoholic content in distilled spirits is taxed from two to three times as much as the alcoholic content of any other intoxicating liquor. The tax upon distilled spirits is from four to eight hundred per cent greater than the cost of producing it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Could not the distilled spirits that might be taken out of the warehouses be made legal tender the same as the cotton bale under the bill proposed by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. STANLEY. I have not the slightest doubt it will be just as good as money to the gentleman who interrupted me, but not to the public generally.

We have been taunted with the statement that this bill was brought into this House and has been passed because our general manager at the other end of the Avenue has asked to have this bill reported. Aye, and the Democratic majority, thank God, can go before the country at this hour and state that the President demands it, and by his past performances we had the right to trust the wisdom of his judgment. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He asked for a revision of the tariff and it was given. I had imagined that a tariff bill that had its incipiency in false promises, that dragged with it a discredited party to defeat and to destruction, would be accorded decent burial, and that no Republican would exhume the malodorous thing in an hour like this. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That same President came before this House and asked for a reform in the currency system. Not the Democratic Party, not the Republican Party, not the Bull Moose Party, but the American people without regard to party have applauded the wisdom of his action. That same President asked this Congress to wait, asked for patience, asked that those in charge of delicate foreign relations should not be driven by the unwary or the hot-headed, asked that we might not be precipitated into the maelstrom that to-day has engulfed every other world power on the reeling earth. You said that his caution was cowardice. You said that his patience was pusillanimity, and now we alone are at peace, our youths employed in productive industries, our homes undismantled, enjoying a prosperity and a power no other country can anticipate or emulate, while the rest of the world is engulfed in the wreck and ruin of universal war. We can still say to you and we can still say to the country we do grant this measure of relief to the Federal Treasury and to the Federal Government because we have a general manager whom we can trust. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The leader of the minority has said that this tax is imposed at this time not because it is necessary but because Woodrow Wilson is hysterical. I call your attention to a single sentence of that hysterical man:

> We must accept the inevitable with calm judgment and unruffled spirits, like men accustomed to deal with the unexpected, habituated to take care of themselves, masters of their own affairs and their own fortunes.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Is that the language of a hysterical man? Viewed through the white light of peace, descried through the red haze of war, he alike maintains his poise and his equanimity, and he deserves a deathless place in the history of immortal statesmen. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Who at this hour and at this trying time would exchange the hysteria of Woodrow Wilson for the placidity of Theodore Roosevelt? [Laughter.] Who at this time would exchange the indolence of Woodrow

Wilson for the tireless activity of William Howard Taft? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In the midst of the sunshine and in the shadow of a great grief, with a breaking heart, he has been the same calm, serene, fearless, and capable leader, allowing neither his personal comfort nor his great bereavement to divorce him for an hour from the duties imposed upon him. He has stood Titan-like under a weight that might have crushed even a mighty man, for never since the Civil War has any President been called to meet such responsibilities, and never since Jefferson's pen fell from his master hand has any President discharged them with such fidelity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We can indorse or, if you prefer, we can follow a leader whose patriotism and whose wisdom has yet to be impugned or questioned. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have time in which to finish his oration.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read a third time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, and on that motion I move the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the previous question was ordered on the bill to its final passage, but that would not cut off amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question on his motion to recommit.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Does not a motion to recommit with a substitute in definite form take precedence over a motion such as was made by the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. A motion to recommit can be amended, or a substitute offered for it, or anything of the sort, except where the previous question is ordered.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves the previous question on his motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 234, nays 135, answered "present" 2, not voting 60, as follows:

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I find I am paired to-day with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. EDMONDS. I wish to change my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech delivered by Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY at the Democratic State convention in Illinois last Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech made by his colleague, Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, at the Illinois State Democratic convention. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 339. Joint resolution to correct an error in H. R. 12014;

H. J. Res. 342. Joint resolution to correct an error in H. R. 12014; and

H. J. Res. 335. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved July 21, 1914.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, September 26, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 18975) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Patterson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 18976) granting an increase of pension to John Sorrels; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 18977) granting an increase of pension to Hannah Kelley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 18978) granting an increase of pension to Martha P. Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 18979) to correct the military record of James M. Rice and grant him an honorable discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEELEY of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 18980) granting a pension to Allen Sigler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of New York: A bill (H. R. 18981) granting a pension to Charles A. Webber; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 18982) for the relief of Samuel T. Shelton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 18983) for the relief of Adolph W. Fries; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOBSON: A bill (H. R. 18984) for the relief of Emma Louise Du Bois, heir of Amos Towle; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KEATING: A bill (H. R. 18985) granting a pension to Walter E. Doyle; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18986) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Goodlander; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. AINEY: Petition of Braintrim and Tuscarora Sunday School Association, Wyoming County, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BAKER: Petition of citizens of Vineland and New Gretna, N. J., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BRODBECK: Petition of 500 citizens of Gettysburg, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BROWNING: Petition of 50 citizens of Auburn and 250 of Swedesboro, N. J., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi: Petition of citizens of Iuka, Miss., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. DERSHEM: Petition of 400 citizens of Greencastle, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. DILLON: Petition of citizens of Evanston, Ill., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. EAGAN: Petition of the First National Bank, Guttenberg, N. J.; Manufacturers' National Bank, Newark, N. J.; and New Jersey Bankers' Association, against proposed tax on banks; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GERRY: Petitions of George E. Noble, J. A. Eddy, G. A. Burgess, J. H. Shippee, I. A. Dexter, C. L. Sweet, J. W. Shaw, E. A. Hopkins, L. L. Claugh, W. H. Ford, W. W. Lovell, I. A. Taft, Louis Remily, Fritz Arndt, C. F. Jencks, C. L. Shippee, F. W. Jacques, H. A. Tulles, O. R. Blackman, D. O. Chapman, James Winsor, W. J. Farrow, J. Randall, Byron W. Page, W. I. Card, O. J. SENATE.

SATURDAY, September 26, 1914.

(Legislative day of Thursday, September 24, 1914.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum before resuming the consideration of the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	James	Page	Smoot
Bankhead	Johnson	Perkins	Sterling
Brady	Jones	Pittman	Stone
Bryan	Kern	Poindexter	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Thornton
Chilton	McCumber	Reed	Townsend
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Robinson	Vardaman
Crawford	Nelson	Shafroth	Walsh
Culberson	O'Gorman	Sheppard	West
Fletcher	Overman	Simmons	White
Hughes	Owen	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I wish to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to state that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] is absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is temporarily absent, is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I desire to have this announcement stand for all votes to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

I wish also to announce the absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] by leave of the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

I desire also to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the fact that my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate and that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. LANE answered to his name when called.

Mr. COLT, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. MYERS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. LEE of Maryland entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES OF BANKS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., September 25, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Clayton bill as reported by the conference committee contains a provision that prohibits a person from being a director of more than one bank or trust company in any city having a population of over 200,000. Such legislation is harmful and unjust to the general banking interests in this country and tends to impair their strength and will result in weakening the personnel and standing of the directors. There are 28 cities in the United States with a population exceeding 200,000. The financial resources of the banks of these cities represent more than half of the financial strength of all the banks in this country. It is upon the banks of these cities that the burden largely rests to protect our commerce and industry. The banks of the smaller cities rely upon those in the larger cities for assistance and support. It is not right to attempt to discriminate against the banks of these 28 cities, particularly at this time, when acute financial disorders prevail throughout the world. I submit that no sound reason can be advanced why the director of a State trust company or bank should be prohibited from being a director of a national bank. State banks act as trustees, executors, administrators, and in other recognized corporate trust positions. They discharge functions that can not be exercised by national banks. The business of each of these two classes of institutions correlates and fits in with that of the other and does not conflict or compete. There are several hundred national banks which have affiliations with State trust companies or banks and have one or more common directors. The proposed legislation will introduce uncertainties, and, in my opinion, no bank legislation that is not absolutely necessary ought to be attempted at a time like this, when our commercial and financial interests are greatly distressed. Furthermore, I do not think it right to mix up an important banking question with the provisions of the Clayton bill, that has to do with the regulation of trusts and monopolies. I submit these views in the interest of the people and of the banking institutions of the country generally, and not because of any peculiar hardship that the proposed legislation will work against me or the institution of which I am president. I therefore urge that the prior action of the Senate in striking out the entire provision should be maintained.

GEO. M. REYNOLDS,
President Continental & Commercial National Bank of Chicago.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be granted leave of absence for the remainder of the session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and unanimous consent is given the Senator from Idaho to absent himself from the Senate during the remainder of the present session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 18891) to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 18891. An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and, on motion of Mr. SIMMONS, was referred to the committee on Finance.

MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from J. A. Loudon, secretary of the North Yakima Clearing House Association; from W. H. Pringle, secretary of the Tacoma Clearing House Association; and from E. V. Klein, secretary of the Spokane Clearing House Association, all in the State of Washington, remonstrating against the proposed tax of $2 per thousand on the capital and surplus of national banks, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CRAWFORD presented memorials of the First National Bank, the Lake County Bank, the Dakota State Bank, and the Banking House of Mackay Bros., of Madison; of the secretary of the Aberdeen (S. Dak.) Clearing House Association; and Brown Bros.' State Bank & Trust Co., of Aberdeen, all in the State of South Dakota, remonstrating against the enactment of a war-revenue law taxing bank checks, certificates of deposit, drafts, or other bank documents used to carry on daily business, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

EMERGENCY REVENUE LEGISLATION.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 18891) to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

ALASKA COAL LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14233) to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I indicated on yesterday that I would offer an amendment to the pending bill, which amendment, it seems to me, ought to meet the approval of everyone. It is an amendment which will run through the entire bill by inserting, after the word "lease," the words "or sale." The object of the amendment, of course, is to get the cheapest coal that we can obtain.

The contention has been, Mr. President, that under a leasing system, such as is provided in this bill, coal can be mined cheaper than in any other way. I have taken issue upon that proposition and have contended that it is not as favorable for the production of cheap coal as is the selling system. Under the amendment which I propose I wish the two to compete side by side; in other words, we ought to have the cheapest coal to the consumer. We do not want to lock up the coal lands in Alaska by one system if that system is not going to operate well. Consequently, if we give the option and let the coal be either mined under lease or sold, it can readily be seen, after a fair trial, which will produce the cheaper-priced coal. I believe everyone, including the proponents of this bill, wants cheap coal; that is the object of the bill; and it seems to me that when we adopt this amendment we shall be furnishing a means by which it can be provided.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to some of the experiences which have been had in leasing coal mines by governments. In the first place, I want to call attention to the facts that under the selling system, which prevails in three-fourths of the mines of the United States, we have the cheapest coal in the world. We have got coal on an average, as certified by the United States Geological Survey, for sale at the mouth of the mine at $1.11 a ton. When you compare that price with the price in those countries which have a leasing system, it is found that coal there does not sell at any such low price. I will read what is the selling price of coal at the mouth of the mines in the countries which have the governmental leasing system. In Nova Scotia coal sells at the mouth of the mine for $2.01 a ton; in New South Wales, under a leasing system, it sells at $1.82 a ton; in New Zealand, where they have State mines, it sells at $2 a ton; in Victoria, which also has State mines, coal sells at $2.28 a ton; and in West Australia it sells at $2.22 a ton.

Mr. President, these are countries which have had the governmental leasing system for a long time; and it is said that that system is a success. It is a success as to the lessees, but it is not a success as to the consumer of the coal, as can be seen from these figure, which are taken from the official report of these various countries and are embodied in Senate Document No. 482.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. WEST. And the figures which the Senator from Colorado states, are in face of the fact that we have the highest paid labor of any country in the world, are they not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; we have the highest paid labor for coal miners of any country in the world; yet by reason of the existing sharp competition, we are able to sell coal not only at a cheaper price, but nearly one-half as much as any other country.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. LANE. Does the Senator from Colorado contend that these prices of coal apply to the consumers; that the consumers get coal cheaper in those countries than they do here? Do not they pay about the same for coal as we do, or do they not pay more for it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know as to the consumer, but evidently it indicates that there is not a monopoly in the production of coal. I myself think that what ought to be done is in some way to cut out these enormous amounts that are added after the coal is dug and turned out—the transportation, the price for hauling, the delivery, and the commissions which are paid—all of which make up this enormous amount that the people have to pay. It is not fair, however, to charge that to the coal miner himself when, according to the report of the Geological Survey of the United States, he is selling coal on an average of $1.11 a ton.

Mr. President, I want to read an extract from the hearing before the Senate Committee on Territories on May 7, 1913, which will be found at page 113 of Senate Document No. 482. It is from the testimony of Mr. McDonald. He says:

> The keen competition in the production and sale of coal in the United States under our system of private ownership of the coal land is saving the industries that consume our coal, as compared with those countries operating under the leasing system, hundreds of millions of dollars annually. Our present consumption is about 400,000,000 tons per year. Now compute the annual saving to the industries of the United States on this annual coal bill of 400,000,000 tons as against New South Wales.

Then he takes the difference between the selling price there and the selling price in the United States, which he places at 64 cents a ton. According to those figures, the saving to the industries of the United States by reason of the system which we have now is $256,000,000 a year. I think, as a matter of fact, any change in the way of increased royalty or anything of that kind would, when carried all through the various operations, increase the cost to the consumer many times.

As compared with Nova Scotia and New Zealand, there is a difference in favor of the United States of 89 cents per ton, showing a saving to the industries of the United States by reason of the manner in which our coal is mined and produced as compared with the systems employed in those countries of $356,000,000.

Take West Australia. The price at the mouth of the mine in that country is $1.11 in excess of what it is in this country, or exactly double. On that basis there is a saving of $444,000,000 a year to the industries of the United States. In the case of Victoria there is a saving of $1.17 per ton, which would make $468,000,000 per year which the industries of the United States save by reason of the system we employ as compared with the governmental leasing system in that country.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. Has the Senator any information as to the wages paid miners in the various countries he has mentioned?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; but I know, as a general thing, that the wages paid in the United States are about the highest of any wages paid in the world.

Mr. PITTMAN. Would the Senator like, for the benefit of the consumer, to cut down the wages of the miners in the United States to a level with those paid in foreign countries?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, when we have a system by which we are enabled to give our miners high wages and yet at the same time secure coal at the cheapest price, it seems to me that that is the system which should be adopted.

In connection with the amendment which I have proposed, I have not so far said anything against the leasing system, because I have already expressed myself upon that subject. I think it is not a policy which ought to be adopted, but it seems to me the bill is approaching its close, and what I want is to insure the operation of the two systems competing with each other; that is all. We are trying to get the cheapest coal for Alaska; we are trying to get the cheapest coal for those who will buy Alaskan coal, and if we have the two systems working side by side it can be demonstrated whether or not one system is better than the other; but if you exclude the proprietor system, if you exclude the right to go up there and buy coal properties, then there will be no opportunity to compare the two systems and ascertain which is the better.

I have not any doubt that conditions may be such in Alaska now, by reason of the fact that coal entries can not be made and therefore coal can not be produced, that the price of coal is high in that country, and consequently, so far as the lessee is concerned, the leasing system would probably be a success, because the lessee would be able to make a profit. He would be able to undersell the coal that comes from Australia and British Columbia, and therefore he would probably be able to make a success of his operations under lease and obtain a profit; but, Mr. President, that is not the object of this bill. I know the Senator from Nevada wants the people of Alaska to get coal just as cheaply as is possible consistent with fair wages. The wage question, however, is not determined by the fact that there is or is not a leasing system.

The Senator has stated correctly that under a leasing system an operator would not be required to have the capital which would be essential if he were compelled to purchase the ground, and for that reason he will be better equipped to produce cheap coal than if he were compelled to buy the land.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. WEST. Is not this another strong reason why it would be better to work the Alaskan mines under a system providing for a sale of the land than under a leasing system, namely, that under a system where the property is sold much more coal would be obtained from a given territory?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think experience has shown that mines worked by the owners are operated more economically than mines operated by lessees. The owner works the mine with a view to development in the future, and, consequently, operates the mine more efficiently and economically.

Mr. President, Senators have contended here that under a leasing system it will be possible to get cheaper coal. If that be true, if there were no doubt about it, of course there would be no question that it would be in the interest of cheap coal to adopt that system, but the contention upon our part is directly to the contrary. We contend that in those countries where the leasing system prevails, according to the statistics, the amount paid for coal at the mouth of the mine is nearly double the amount paid in the United States under the ownership system. That being the case, there ought to be consideration given to the views expressed by the majority as well as to the views expressed by those of us who have been contending the other way, and that can be done simply by inserting after the word "lease" the words "or sale."

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. Do I understand the Senator as saying that he has statistics or proof that under a leasing system——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Under a governmental leasing system.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator said "under a leasing system."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I meant under a governmental leasing system.

Mr. CHILTON. To what does the Senator refer? Where is there any governmental leasing system?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That system prevails in a number of countries. If the Senator was not here when I read it, I will reread a statement I made as to the price of coal in countries where that system prevails.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator was not speaking as to the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator to read the statement to which he refers.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well. Here is Table No. 3 in Senate Document No. 482. It gives the average amount that the coal sells for at the mouth of the mine in each one of these countries. The first is compiled by Mr. Parker, of the Geological Survey, and is for the year 1911. It gives the average value of coal per ton at the mine in the United States as $1.11. It does not take in anthracite coal. This is bituminous coal and all lower grades of coal.

In Nova Scotia, where they have the governmental leasing system, it is $2.01 a ton.

In New South Wales, where they have the leasing system, it is $1.82 a ton.

In the New Zealand State mine it is $2 per ton. The New Zealand leasing mine proper is not given in this table.

In the Victoria State mine it is $2.28 a ton.

In West Australia, under a leasing system from the Government, it is $2.22 a ton.

Mr. President, as I have said, that shows there is no monopoly in the United States on coal, or at least on bituminous coal. There may be on anthracite. I do not know. If there is, it ought to be stopped in some way; but evidently you can not make out a monopoly in coal. There may be some local monopolies in some parts of the Union; but as a general mass, selling at that price, nobody would contend that there could be a monopoly in the selling.

I want to read, if the Senator was not here, this expression from this same author, who gave a tabulation just to show how much of a saving it was to the United States Government to have ownership of coal instead of the Government leasing system. He said, before the Committee on Territories, on May 7, 1913, at page 117:

> The keen competition in the production and sale of coal in the United States under our system of private ownership of the coal land is saving the industries that consume our coal, as compared with those countries operating under the leasing system, hundreds of millions of dollars annually. Our present consumption is about 400,000,000 tons per year. Now compute the annual saving to the industries of the United States on this annual coal bill of 400,000,000 tons as against New South Wales, a saving of $0.64 per ton, $256,000,000; Nova Scotia and New Zealand, a saving of $0.89 per ton, $356,000,000; West Australia, a saving of $1.11 per ton, $444,000,000; Victoria (State mine), a saving of $1.17 per ton, $468,000,000.
> This indicates a saving to the industries of the United States of approximately a million dollars per day—no mean advantage when we are seeking a world's market for the products of our mills and factories.

Mr. President, I bring this up simply for the purpose of showing that there are two views of this matter. First, the theory that the system of leasing by the State or by the National Government will produce the cheaper coal, as advocated by the statement that, of course, you do not have to have your capital invested in the coal land itself; second, the theory that the cheaper coal is produced by the economical management and extraction of coal by reason of the persons owning the land and working it to its best advantage. They are two different theories. It seems to me that the history of the world indicates the soundness of the theory I have advocated—that private ownership, as contrasted with State or National ownership, is much more advantageous.

Mr. President, in this bill all I want is to permit it to be done by either, that we can have these two systems competing against each other. The National Government can let leases in Alaska. That is all right. As long, however, as you do not have competing by the side of it some mine that is operated under private ownership there is nothing to compare it with. You can readily say, "Oh, well, the price is high up there, it is true, because it is a cold climate, and you can not get men to work there as cheaply as you can somewhere else"; but when you permit a mine right by the side of it to be operated by the owner, then we shall see which one can pour out the coal to the best advantage.

What all this legislation means is cheapness of coal for the consumer. We want to establish in this Government the system that will produce the cheapest coal to the consumer, and by letting them both undertake it, it seems to me you will get the best results.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. While we recognize that the furnishing of coal to the consumer at a low price is a very important thing, I consider it far more important that the labor which produces that coal shall be protected. It is customary in business in this country, whenever a reduction is necessary, to start in that reduction on the labor. Now, while the cost of the coal at the mines in this country is $1.11 per ton on the average, the price of it to the consumer is probably in the neighborhood of three or four dollars per ton on the average.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be, but that is caused by other things.

Mr. PITTMAN. On behalf of the consumer, you start in to cut down expenses. Like everyone else, the first thing you want to do is to go to the laborer and cut down his wages.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I will ask the Senator to wait just a second.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no doubt that the laborers in the coal mines in this country are not sufficiently paid. I might go further than that, and I think the Senator will agree with me, and say that the wages of labor—and I mean all kinds of labor; the wages of a Senator, for instance—have not increased in the United States in proportion to the cost of living. In other words, the price of labor has not increased in proportion to the price of other products, and it is perfectly natural that that should be so. Other products have no fixed price, and they increase in accordance with the law of supply and demand. Labor has a fixed price; wages are fixed, and for that reason it is much more difficult to raise wages than it is to raise the price of wheat or cotton or meat, which is not fixed, but depends on supply and demand.

All of the argument of the Senator so far has been devoted to the consumer. I would like to have him devote a little of his attention to the wage earner in this matter, because one of the objects of the leasing system is to have such a control over the mining operations that if the laborer is not paid a fair wage, if the laborer is not protected in his life and his health, the lease shall terminate and the lessee shall cease to operate upon Government lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I am satisfied that the wages paid to the miners in the United States are larger than the wages paid under any governmental leasing system, and that, consequently, on the general proposition, it is to the interest of the miner himself that the system of ownership instead of a system of leases should prevail.

On the other proposition I want to say that whether we have the leasing system or the private-ownership system will not in any manner affect the question of wages. If I lease 2,560 acres of land under this bill, which I would be entitled to do if I were in the leasing business, I would begin to develop that mine, and I would have to pay, and would pay, necessarily the market price of the labor, whatever it was, in the community. I would have to do that if I owned the land in exactly the same way.

These provisions that are made within this bill are all upon a competitive basis. The bill provides that whenever a lease is applied for, if 2,560 acres are asked for, or any other amount, they shall advertise for the best bid. By inserting the word "sell" there, we adopt the principle that whenever a man makes application for 2,560 acres of land to be sold to him it is to be sold upon competitive bidding. I want to say, further, that toward the close of the bill I have an amendment to the effect that no bid shall be accepted that is lower than the minimum price prescribed by law, which in the United States and also in Alaska is not less than $10 an acre when it is more than 15 miles from a railroad, and not less than $20 an acre when it is within 15 miles of a railroad.

Mr. President, with that provision no combination of bidders can be made by which the Government will be cheated. Twenty dollars an acre is a pretty stiff price, when you consider that we paid 2 cents an acre for this land 47 years ago. It seems to me that when we offer it by advertisement for competitive bids, and say that you can not bid less than $20 an acre for this land, that you must put in bids above that price. If the land is worth more, then the Government will get the full value of the land.

Mr. President, it seems to me that by adding such a provision, so that these two systems can absolutely compete with each other, side by side, we are going to get the cheapest coal; and the question of wages will be determined in exactly the same way. The Government, in this bill, does not attempt to say what wages shall be paid. It does not attempt to restrict the lessee in regard to the amount he shall pay. There is not any provision of that kind; and the lessee will want to mine his coal just as cheaply as the operator who owns the property. He gets a larger profit when he gets a cheaper wage; and consequently it will be to his interest, and he will be guided by the same impulses as the man who owns the mine and wants to make a profit out of it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. JONES. What, if any, restrictions would be upon the owner if the Senator's amendment should be adopted and the coal lands were purchased?

Mr. SHAFROTH. All of the restrictions which are in the bill now and applicable to a selling proposition. I will read the Senator some of them, because it is a very easy mode of amending this bill and at the same time getting competition. For instance:

> The Secretary shall offer such blocks or tracts and the coal, lignite, and associated minerals therein for leasing—

I say "or selling"—

> and shall award leases—

I put in "or sales"—

> thereof through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt to any person above the age of 21 years—

That is the provision of the law now in regard to taking up coal lands—> who is a citizen of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof: Provided, That no more than one of said blocks shall be included in any lease or sale: And provided further, That no railroad or common carrier shall be permitted to take or acquire, through purchase, lease, or permit, under this act any coal or coal lands in excess of such area or quantity as may be required and used solely for its own use, and such limitation of use shall be expressed in all leases or permits issued to railroads or common carriers hereunder.

That is the way it runs all through. All the provisions and restrictions that could possibly apply are adopted; and then, when it comes purely to leasing, of course the provisions apply to the leases.

Mr. JONES. The Senator thinks these provisions would be included in any patent that would be issued?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, no; because they relate to something that is before patent. The mode of location is provided for just as at present.

Mr. JONES. What I was getting at is, What restriction will be imposed on the owner after he gets his title?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, the restriction that I think is the most pertinent has already been enacted into law, and it will be reenacted into this law.

Mr. JONES. That is the antitrust provision?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. I remember that.

Mr. SHAFROTH (reading):

> That if any of the lands or deposits purchased under the provisions of this act shall be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in anyway effect any combination or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres in the District of Alaska, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General of the United States in the courts for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. Under the Senator's amendment, one purchaser could acquire by purchase from the Government 2,560 acres, or whatever the amount is?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the amount.

Mr. JONES. Yes. Now, then, after he gets his title to the 2,560 acres, and some other man gets title to 2,560 acres, is there anything that would prevent one of the men, in good faith, for a full consideration, from buying out the other?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; it is right here in this statute—a provision that prevents them from combining.

Mr. JONES. That is not combining. That is disposing of the land by purchase.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Or selling in any manner.

Mr. JONES. Does it not say "for the purpose of acquiring a monopoly," or something like that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I think not.

Mr. JONES. It seemed to me there were some such qualifying terms. It absolutely prevents any man from buying in good faith from another?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; you can not do it. That is, if you take up a thousand acres and you want to buy 1,560 acres more, you can do that.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But whenever you reach the limit of 2,560 acres this statute absolutely makes the purchaser forfeit all the title to all the land if he does it. That condition follows the title; it goes into the patent, and consequently it is perpetually and forever a check with relation to the matter. If some administration should be lax in enforcing it, the next administration could come along and enforce it. So it seems to me it is an absolute safeguard. The laws of Alaska were made after the scandals came up concerning some of the coal lands up there, and were made for the very purpose of preventing combinations and large ownership of these lands. You have upon the statute books the most perfect law that is known to prevent combinations of that kind.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. At what price does the Senator propose that these lands shall be sold?

Mr. SHAFROTH. As I explained a little while ago, in this provision, of course, by inserting the word "sale," the land shall be put up at competitive sale, and it will go to whoever bids the highest amount, just like in our State. That is the way we have the system in Colorado, simply putting a minimum price on it, and then saying that bids are solicited. Some man comes into the land commissioner's office and says, "I want to buy a certain tract of land out here, and I want to make an application for it." He makes an offer for that land at some amount. We have there the requirement that no land shall be sold for less than $3.50 an acre; that is, agricultural land or grazing land. That minimum is placed on it, and then they advertise that there will be sold at public auction, at the State capitol in the city of Denver, this particular land. Then they post that notice on the land itself in three or four conspicuous places, and then at the post office at the nearest place, and then at the county seat of the county, and then at the State capitol itself. Previous to the sale there is a certificate issued by the commissioner of the land office to the effect that on such and such a day there will be sold at the State capitol of the State of Colorado this described land, naming the county, the township, the range, the section, and the quarter section. The notice of sale includes all property applied for during the month preceding and is published in a paper in the county where the land is situate and in a daily Denver paper. Then they come in and bid. I have found that they get into spirited bidding for these lands, and they have bid as high as $50 an acre on specially located land.

Mr. PITTMAN. That brings me just to the idea I had in mind. They bid up to $50 an acre. It has occurred to us that a great many people in Alaska who have been living there for a great many years, who are miners—4, or 5 or 6 of them, it may be 20 of them—could get together, and by uniting their capital, could raise sufficient money to start mining under a lease.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. But if they had to compete against capital bidding $50 an acre, we will say for 2,560 acres, it must occur to the Senator that they would have no chance on earth of enjoying the coal mines at their very door that they have discovered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am not proposing by this amendment that you can not do exactly what you have wanted to do. This is simply an addition. The leasing system goes on, and miners can come in and cooperate. Whenever a person makes an application for a lease, of course, that is not for sale and the lease could be made under the regulation of the Secretary of the Interior, and he could offer it in any manner he wants.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to ask a question, if the Senator will permit me, relative to the practical administration of his system of leasing or selling the lands by the Secretary of the Interior. How will it be managed? Will the Secretary of the Interior first advertise for competitive bids in leasing the land and then for competitive bids in the sale of the land, or will he advertise that he will receive bids for the sale and for the leasing of the land?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state——

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me, suppose he does advertise that he will receive bids for the sale and the leasing of land and he receives a bid from one——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will explain how it is done in our State.

Mr. STERLING. Let me just complete my question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Suppose he receives a bid from one for the purchase of land and from another for the leasing of land, then will it rest in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior whether he will lease or sell?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it likely would. But it is going to be controlled by regulations that he makes. He is given the power to make all needful rules and regulations with respect to this matter, and consequently he will determine it. As a usual rule, no doubt, as this thing proceeds if a man applies for a lease the Secretary will say, "Well, we will give the preference to a lease." I do not know that he would. We can not tell. He might say, "I will give the preference to a sale."

Mr. STERLING. Let me ask the Senator if that would not in itself create dissatisfaction with the system? If the Secretary of the Interior under such circumstances decided to lease instead of selling, would he not be charged with partiality to the leasing system, and vice versa, if he sold instead of leasing, would he not be charged with partiality to the selling system?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is a matter which can not be regulated absolutely by the law unless you put in the statement that a preference shall be given to whoever first applies, and I do not know whether that would be wise. I think it is better to leave those things to the Secretary himself. On that account I do not think there is going to be any difficulty, because I do not believe that people are going to buy up there in great quantities. They can not buy in unlimited quantities, and they can not buy very much unless it is right close to a railroad, because there is no market for it.

Coal lands in my State beyond 15 miles from a railroad have had no market value. For 50 years—just think of it—only 2.8 per cent of the coal lands of Colorado have been taken up, when they have been opened up for $10 an acre, where they were beyond 15 miles from a railroad. They have been opened up and they could have been gotten by anybody on earth, and yet only 2.8 per cent of the coal lands in my State have been located.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I wish to say that when the Senator suggested his amendment I was rather inclined to favor it, but in reflecting upon it I am impressed with the view that if we place these two systems side by side in the bill, under the conditions which exist in Alaska, one is likely to destroy the other.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The only way it could destroy it would be by giving cheaper coal.

Mr. JONES. No; I look at it like this: Here is a tract of land supposed to be good for coal. Right by the side of it is another tract supposed to be good for coal. A man contemplates the purchase of one tract, and yet he is confronted with the fact that after he purchases that possibly the other tract may be leased, and he feels that he does not want to compete with a proposition of that kind; therefore he will not purchase. The other man who contemplates leasing a tract knows that another tract adjoining him might be acquired by purchase, and he might say, "Well, I do not want to enter into competition with a proposition of that kind." Therefore we would have neither tract taken.

As I said yesterday, I do not look for very much relief from this leasing bill. I am inclined to think that the conditions are so onerous not only in the bill—though not more onerous than may be necessary to pass it, as far as that is concerned—but the local and physical conditions are so onerous that we are not likely to have much leasing done. However, the sentiment of the country, I am satisfied, would not indorse any proposition that looks to the transfer of the title of the land. The sentiment of the country wants the leasing proposition tried, and I believe that ought to be done. I am impressed with the idea that we are likely to work out this situation better in the long run by trying one system, without complicating it with something else. I feel pretty well satisfied that this leasing system is likely to be a failure; but it will require an actual demonstration to convince the people that it will be a failure, and when they are convinced of it then we will be in a position to take up something else. So I am rather inclined to think that it might be unwise from either standpoint to put these two systems in the bill, and that it would likely destroy the one or the other.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question in this connection to clear it up in my mind?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator's amendment should carry, would it be possible for some party to purchase 2,560 acres of this coal land and also to lease the same quantity?

Mr. SHAFROTH. He could have 1,280 acres of leased land and an equal quantity of the other, but the most he can work is 2,560 acres.

I wish to say to the Senator from Washington that I got this idea very largely from a bill that was introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who is the author of most of these bills, but it applies only to the States. That Senator has a bill here which permits the purchase of land within the States, and at the same time there is the leasing bill which the House has passed and which has come over to the Senate. Under the Walsh bill 1,280 acres can be purchased, at not less than $10 per acre or $20 per acre, instead of leasing, if the parties prefer it. Reading that bill I formed the idea that it would be better to incorporate this as an amendment on the pending bill. Therefore I felt that it was better to amend this bill all the way through just by providing for a sale and limiting the amount to 2,560 acres, and I believe there are enough coal lands now known in Alaska to supply 6,000 competing companies, and if they had 2,560 acres each there would not be any danger of a monopoly.

Mr. President, the bill as it has now been amended will have three features in it, if this is added. There is, first, the feature of withdrawal absolutely for the Government. The bill as it was introduced provided that there should be two tracts of land, which was increased to three tracts of land for the Government to own, and nobody can lease or buy any of them.

Then there was an amendment adopted that one-half of the balance of coal lands in all Alaska should be reserved from lease or entry, so that reserves probably two-thirds or three-fourths of the coal fields of Alaska for Government use, and the balance of the bill, as to the leasing and as to the sale, applies only to the one-third that is left.

So you have every safeguard against any monopolization if monopolization were possible under this statute. In other words, you have reserved up there two-thirds of the coal area of Alaska for the Government, with power to permit the Government I believe, to operate it in any way it wants, that it may mine it for naval purposes or for competitive purposes, as the word "competition" is there. So we will have two-thirds of that land reserved for the purpose of having the Government undertake coal mining at its own expense and at its own risk.

Now, this sale business would apply only to the remaining one-third, and surely it would be safe to permit sales and leasing therein. In fact it is nothing but the old system we have had under which this whole country has been developed and under which we have the cheapest coal in the world, with restriction as to amount that can be acquired.

For that reason I can not understand why this amendment is not admitted unanimously. I do not see why the Senator from Nevada does not consent to this amendment and let it go into conference and let the parties there investigate it thoroughly.

I want to say that 2,560 acres have been regarded as about the area by which you could have development and at the same time not have monopoly.

Mr. President, there is another thing I want to consider, and that is that Alaska must have some property that it can tax. If you do not permit it to have property that it can tax, I do not see how it can ever be admitted as a State. There is only one-fiftieth of 1 per cent of the area of Alaska now in private ownership.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to ask a question particularly on this tax question. In our State we indirectly tax mines the titles to which are held in the United States Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You tax the output.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; we tax the output. A mine is worth nothing except for the output.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Just wait a second. If you could tax the output of coal in Alaska, which is the only value of the coal mines that I know of, would not the Government receive more from that taxation than it would now receive when the Government owns all of it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is not any question but that some little taxation would come. I do not know whether taxing the mines in the Senator's State is satisfactory to him, but I mean to say that the taxing of the mines in my State is not satisfactory to me.

Mr. PITTMAN. It was not always satisfactory to us, because the law was not enforced, but it is daily becoming more satisfactory by reason of our law being enforced, and it is bringing in a great revenue to the State.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to state to the Senator that we have in Colorado coal lands in the ownership of the Government which have been estimated by the Government to be worth $500,000,000, but that is too high a valuation. Not an acre of that is being worked. Consequently there is a large coal property there—seven to nine million acres—within the borders of the State exempt from taxation.

The sovereignty of a State which is recognized by the Constitution of the United States is the right to tax every piece of property within its borders to maintain its existence, except such reservations for purely governmental purposes, such as military, naval, or post-office purposes, or property held temporarily in trust.

Mr. President, you can readily see that with $500,000,000 of property in the State of Colorado from which the State is deriving no revenue, if we have a leasing system and an alternative sale system we would get some revenue by taxing the property sold; otherwise we practically will get nothing.

I never noticed this condition particularly until I was governor of Colorado and I began to inquire what was the matter with our revenues; why is it that we get a measly $1,800,000 for our yearly budget and at the same time we pay to the General Government taxes to the extent of more than $5,000,000 a year? There was a State not receiving revenue enough for its own maintenance—only one-third of what it pays to the Federal Government.

There are in my State one or two counties where nine-tenths of the land is in a forest reserve, and as a result they get very little revenue for county and school government. Those counties, of course, are in a deplorable condition.

Mr. President, I think there never was an intention on the part of the Federal Government to own perpetually the public domain. If there is any scheme of governmental leasing or perpetuation of title, it should be in the State, because the State must get a revenue. Such royalties would be a substitute for taxes. Even in that case it is not exactly right, because one county may have State lands within its borders which would be exempt from taxation, and consequently its county government and school government would not derive revenue therefrom. Consequently the very safest and best way is to have all lands subject to taxation for State, county, and school purposes.

It seems to me that is the system we ought to have for the States and Alaska. If Alaska has one-fiftieth of 1 per cent only of the lands within its borders upon which to raise revenue, how can it support decently a school system? It will have to make taxation upon the property in private ownership so high that it will be unendurable.

Mr. President, I wish to offer this amendment if there is no other discussion. I want to say that the system of State land leasing in Colorado is not at all satisfactory. We lease them at 5 cents an acre. That is the best we can get, and the result is that is not 1 per cent of their value. These lands sell for $5 to $10 per acre. Five per cent of the value would be 25 to 50 cents an acre, yet we are leasing them at only 1 per cent to one-half of 1 per cent of their value. If the lands were in private ownership, and were subject to taxation, they would yield more of a revenue to the State, county, and schools than would be raised by the leasing of them.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, if I understood the Senator from Colorado and the deductions which he made from the little pamphlet which he quoted—Senate Document No. 482—he announced the general proposition that in countries where there is a leasing system coal is produced at a higher price.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true in countries where there is a governmental leasing system, a leasing by the Government. I can say that the keen interest of the landlord will produce better results than can the Government.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, taking that same pamphlet, I have made a little calculation, and I want to show to the Senator that his argument will not hold good. Take, for instance, the State of Pennsylvania, which produced for the year stated 219,000,000 tons of coal; the State of Illinois, that produced over 50,000,000 tons of coal; and the State of West Virginia, that for the year mentioned produced over 50,000,000 tons of coal, though last year it produced 70,000,000 tons. I take it that this was for the year 1909 or 1910. All of the States have increased their production each year by a very healthy per centage; but I will take the production for the year mentioned, and I take it that it would be practically the same for the other years.

The State of Pennsylvania produced by ownership operation 88 per cent of its coal; Illinois produced by ownership production 79 per cent of its coal; and West Virginia produced by that method 32 per cent of its coal. If there is anything in the argument, Pennsylvania and Illinois coal should be produced for less than West Virginia coal, because, whereas Pennsylvania, by the leasing system, produced a very small percentage of her coal, West Virginia produced over 67 per cent of her coal by that system.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But West Virginia did not produce an ounce of coal by a governmental leasing system, whereas the countries to which I have referred do so.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Colorado should have some answer to his position; but let us carry it out a little further. The fact is that it is shown by this same pamphlet that West Virginia produced its coal at 90 cents a ton, Illinois produced its coal at $1.11 a ton, and Pennsylvania produced its coal at $1.01 a ton. Now, I should like some one to tell me how on earth there could be any difference as to whether or not the producer of the coal owned the land or leased the land? Take the rates fixed in this bill at from 2 to 5 cents. If you have a vein of coal that runs 6 feet you will produce about 9,000 tons of coal to the acre. As I understand, coal runs about 1,500 to 1,600 tons per foot of thickness to the acre. So a 6-foot vein of coal, which we will take as an average, will produce about 9,000 tons to the acre. At 2 cents a ton, the Government would get $180 an acre for the land; at 5 cents a ton the Government would get about $450 an acre. If a man bought that land at $100 an acre, of course he would have to pay interest upon the money, he would have to care for it, he would have to pay the taxes upon the land, owning the fee of it, and when you run $450, which you have paid at 5 cents a ton, or $180 an acre, which you have paid at 2 cents a ton, over a series of years, you would see that they would about balance or even each other.

Mr. President, there can not be any practical difference in the same section, in the same State, or really in the same country. The only way to determine whether or not there is any difference is to take each specific country. Take Nova Scotia. It can not be possible that Nova Scotia is working side by side a coal system where the producer of coal owns the land and another system where the producer has a lease upon the land. There may be a material difference in the production of coal, and the market competition would settle that and would level it. You can not have a coal mine here and a coal mine there in the same field, one of them producing under materially better and cheaper conditions than the other; that is impossible.

Mr. President, the main argument of the Senator from Colorado was based——

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from West Virginia must not forget that I am asking the same competition that exists in West Virginia; that is, that they side by side can use the two systems in one field or another, so as to ascertain which is the cheaper. So long as you simply have one system there is no doubt but that it can be contended that it is either cheap or high, but when you have both systems you can readily see which one will produce the better results.

Mr. CHILTON. But, Mr. President, after all, when you take the facts and figures and market conditions into consideration you will find that the coal business is like any other business; that it is regulated by market conditions and by transportation. If a coal field is in such a position that by reason of the exactions of the transportation companies, persisted in, it can not get coal to market so as to compete with the same kind of coal in the same market it can not live. I think, when you run it down, you will find no reason why there should be any difference between Government ownership and Government leasing and private ownership and private leasing, so far as the selling of the coal and so far as the cost of its production may be concerned.

The chief cost of producing coal is labor. Whether you have a governmental system or have a private-ownership system or a Government leasing system or a private leasing system, labor is going to regulate its own wage, and labor is going to get a better wage by virtue of its own demand, and not by anything that the Government has done. For that reason the Democratic Party has always contended that protection does not give labor anything; that laws do not give labor anything. Labor goes out into the market and gets its wage by its own demand and by its own merits.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Whether under a leasing system or under an ownership system.

Mr. CHILTON. Or any other system; yes, sir. If the Senator means to say now that there is no difference in these two systems I agree with him; there can not be any. They are regulated by the market and by other things that we can not regulate here by law.

Mr. President, the Government of the United States has much property in Alaska; it was paid for by all of the people of the United States; it is valuable. We are not called upon now to look forward to the time when Alaska shall ask to come into the Union. When that time comes, if we find that the State which we are about to admit can not exist because it can not get any revenue, we do not have to admit it. Certainly this Congress is not called upon to give away a great estate, which all the people of the United States have in that Territory, simply because at some time and in some way Congress may want to admit this Territory as a State of the Union. When that time comes, if we find that the Territory is so poverty stricken that it can not pay its own expenses we shall not admit it into the Union. We do not, I repeat, have to admit it into the Union. If it were now a question whether it was best to let Alaska come into the Union, even though all of this land were in private ownership, I am not prepared to say that it would be best for us to do so, and I do not know that the Senate is prepared to say so.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. Is it the Senator's idea that this Territory is never to be admitted as a State into the Union?

Mr. CHILTON. I have never said so, nor have I intimated any such thing.

Mr. WHITE. What is the Senator's view on that question?

Mr. CHILTON. I have not any view on it. I do not know whether Alaska ought to be admitted as a State or not, but I say we should not give away our property, we should not throw away the property of the United States, and should not neglect to perform our duty of conserving that property and saving it for all the people simply because we can not say that it would be best for Alaska if she should hereafter be admitted as a State. I do not think the argument holds good at all.

Mr. President, after all, the question is simply this: The people of Alaska need coal; they are paying an exorbitant price for coal, due to the cost of transportation; they have it there near at hand; and what is the sensible and practical thing for Congress to do at this time? We should provide a way by which people, if they want to do it, if it pays to do it, can lease the coal land in that Territory and can produce coal. We should pass this bill giving the Government the power to make leases, and we should provide for fair, practical, and reasonable provisions in the leases. The Government should not sell the land to Tom, Dick, and Harry, because it is very valuable; it should not think of selling the land until it finds out something about the value of it and whether or not it can get a fair return for it. By a leasing system, which has been tested in every State in the Union, it can ascertain what return it can get per acre. In my judgment, it is the practical and the sensible thing to do, and, unless the bill shall be loaded down with such unreasonable and impractical conditions as to convince me that it can do no practical good to the Government and will not relieve the people of Alaska, I intend to vote for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I think I had better propose one amendment at a time.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to have the amendment stated, if it is not too long.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the whole amendment be stated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can not state it all, because it is too long. I first move, after the word "leasing," in line 4, page 14, to insert the words "or selling."

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 4, after the word "leasing," it is proposed to insert the words "or selling."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Colorado if there is a provision in his amendment limiting the acreage of coal land which may be sold to any one individual or corporation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The provision fixing a limit at 2,560 acres would apply in the case of selling, the same as it would in the case of leasing. The conditions in the bill applicable to the leasing provisions will apply as well to the selling provisions, and providing for the two methods will be, it seems to me, a much better way of handling the subject so far as Alaska is concerned than by simply providing for one method.

I will state to the Senator that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has introduced a bill which is applicable to the States in the way of selling, and I thought of offering that as an amendment to the pending bill, but I am inclined to think that it would be better to insert the words I have suggested, so that the regulations in large part in regard to leasing will apply also as to sales of coal lands in Alaska made by the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator also if it is not his conviction that if provision is made in this bill allowing the Secretary of the Interior either to sell or lease there will be no leasing under the provisions of the bill, but that there probably may be an opportunity for some sales?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not think so, because the provision requiring safeguards in regard to leases would apply to sales as well. For instance, the bill reads:

The Secretary shall offer such blocks or tracts and the coal, lignite, and associated minerals therein for leasing—

After the word "leasing" I propose to insert the words "or selling"—

and shall award leases—

And my amendment would insert the words there "or sales"—

thereof through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, to any person above the age of 21 years who is a citizen of the United States.

That is the provision of the general statute now in regard to those who can legally take up land.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator does not understand the purport of my inquiry. I should not have voted for this bill in the shape it was yesterday; I would have voted against it, because I do not believe either in the Government operating mines or holding them or leasing them; I do not believe in the landlord system in our Territories. I am inclined to think that with the many conditions imposed upon the leases by this bill no man would ever attempt to lease; but, if the Government is allowed to sell, there will be a great many who will be glad to purchase coal lands at a reasonable price and operate as they see fit their own property. I shall therefore vote for this bill with the Senator's amendment, if it carries, with the conviction that the result will be individual ownership and individual operation, and not Government ownership or Government landlordism.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that the very object of this proposed amendment is to prevent a failure of development. As a matter of fact some predict, as the Senator from North Dakota does, that there will not be any leasing under the provisions of this bill. Whether there will be or will not be is a matter of controversy, some people holding one view and others the contrary; but if you leave it in the alternative, then, if the land is not taken up under one system it may be taken up under the other, and there will be a better chance of getting some development in Alaska. For that reason it seems to me that the amendment should prevail.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota is in favor of the amendment because if it is adopted he thinks the sales will not be encumbered with the conditions which will apply to leases. The Senator from Colorado is urging his amendment because he says all the conditions will apply to the sales which apply to leases.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not all, but a number of them.

Mr. PITTMAN. Will the Senator say which conditions would apply and which would not apply?

Mr. SHAFROTH. For instance, the precautions against any attempt to get lands at too low a price. The provision that there shall be competitive bidding applies to sales or to leases. Then, under my proposed amendment it is contemplated that no sale shall be for less than the minimum price prescribed by law.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me see what the Senator means by saying that some of the conditions will apply and some will not. Will the provision requiring that labor shall be worked only 8 hours a day in underground mining apply after the land is sold?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should think not after title had been acquired, unless you want to make it apply. If you desire to make that apply in the case of sales you can so provide as a condition of holding the title.

Mr. PITTMAN. In case the land is sold, will this bill carry with it the restriction that labor shall only be employed 8 hours in underground mining? I ask the Senator if he thinks it will.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That will depend on whether or not you put such a provision in the bill and say that it shall be a condition of the title.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is in the bill now. That amendment has been adopted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not seen the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is in the bill now as an amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If my amendment should be adopted, that provision can be made to apply to it in just the same way that it applies to leasing.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is one of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be; but I have not seen a printed copy of it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is there any chance that all the provisions of the bill which apply to leasing will apply to selling?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The bill now is simply and purely a leasing bill. If you want to provide for that condition in the sale of the land, the same provisions can be applied to sales as apply to leases.

Mr. PITTMAN. Do they apply?

Mr. SHAFROTH. My amendment is an amendment to the bill and not an amendment to that amendment. After I have seen that amendment, if desired, I can make it apply.

Mr. PITTMAN. Under this bill at the present time the restrictions contained in it apply to leases. Among those restrictions is one that labor shall not be employed in the mines to exceed eight hours a day in underground mining, and another that the mines shall be worked in a certain way, looking to the preservation of the property. Would those provisions apply to the purchaser under the Senator's selling clause?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from Colorado again for a moment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think I still have the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator if he believes that it would be good policy on the part of the Government, in disposing of its public lands, agricultural and mineral, by sale, to attach a condition to the sale that no laborer shall be employed upon a farm so sold or in a mine for a longer period than eight hours a day? If it is to be applied to the mine, would he not also apply it to the farm? What would he think of a provision that a farmer and his family should not work more than eight hours a day upon his farm obtained through the Government, and about how much profit does he think the average farmer would get out of his farm with that kind of a condition attached to it?

I should be glad if the Senator would explain why you should make a distinction between disposing of mineral land and disposing of farm land in respect to conditions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield for the purpose of this question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield for the purpose of that question. I should like to have the Senator from Colorado answer it before he answers my question.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought the Senator had taken his seat. That is the reason I addressed the Chair.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall be very pleased to have the Senator from Colorado answer that question first, and then answer my question later.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say that I have always been in favor of limiting underground working to eight hours a day, and I do not think the provisions of the Senator would apply; but I do not want to mix this question with the other question. When you come to that question, if the Senator wants to move that the patents shall contain a clause like that, we can discuss the question as to whether it is advisable. You can readily see that there is a disposition on the part of some Senators not to agree to it, and it seems to me that can be perfected as we proceed.

I feel that this is a very important amendment, not only in the interest of Alaska, but also in the interest of cheap coal in that locality. I hope the Senator will accept these amendments and let them go into conference and study about it a little more. I am satisfied that it can not help doing good. I do not see where the harm will be. By this amendment we are simply permitting something that has been the law for years and years and years, and under which the greatest development in the world has taken place. It is in the alternative and is guarded by many restrictions that would be applicable. It seems to me there could be no harm in letting it go into conference and try to get a system that will be satisfactory.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think it is apparent from the Senator's answer to the questions that have been asked that he rather favors the provision in the bill with regard to the protection of labor, and that he doubts very seriously whether his amendment would protect labor in absolute safety.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, it would if you put it in there.

Mr. PITTMAN. I can not for the life of me understand how if you pass the fee-simple title to land you can reserve the right of forfeiture upon any failure to comply with certain requirements in connection with that land subsequently. I do not think the Senator's amendment reaches that point, either. I am satisfied that his amendment is totally impracticable in this bill; that it would create confusion; that it is not definite, and means nothing. I believe that as far as Alaska is concerned, in this bill we have got to adopt one of two systems; that is, either a system of leasing or a system of selling. The whole theory of this bill is antagonistic to selling. It ought to be remodeled all over again from beginning to end if the lands are to be sold.

I want to state now that whether we are in favor of a leasing bill or a selling bill there is but one bill that can pass Congress, there is only one bill that can become a law, and that is a leasing bill. This bill contains a great many splendid provisions. It is said that men will not take leases. I know miners all over the country to-day who have been looking for leases everywhere on good ground. I know to-day that I would rather take a lease on a valuable piece of ground where I only had to pay royalty as the coal came out of the ground than to have to bid against capital probably up to $50 an acre, and then take a chance on whether or not the ground was worth the $50 an acre.

It is simply a question of policy. It is a question as to whether a person is opposed to what is called "bureaucracy." That is the only argument against this bill. The bill is a good bill as far as a leasing bill goes. For those who are willing to stand for leasing in Alaska it is a good bill. It is the best bill that all the committees working on this matter could possibly frame, and only those who are absolutely opposed to and will not stand for leasing even in Alaska have any right to vote against the bill.

Why, here is a provision in the bill which allows any person living in Alaska to mine on 10 acres of the Government ground without any charge whatever; to take out coal for his own domestic use for a period of 10 years. Is not that a good provision? Is not that an equitable provision? We have heard the argument that he can not do it because he has not capital enough to do it. Why, we all know that there are exposed coal measures all over Alaska, where all a man has to do is to go with a pick and shovel and get it out—that is, for his own domestic use. We know that before Alaska was closed up they did use that coal. They went in and dug it out and used it themselves. There are places up in Alaska, as has been told you by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], where for 500 miles in every direction there is not a stick of timber any bigger than your finger, simply little willows growing, and yet there are coal measures in that very country that to-day they are prohibited from using under the existing laws.

I know the Senator's answer to that is, "Why do you not sell this coal land to them? Why do you not extend the laws of the United States to it?" Because Congress will not do it. There is no use in standing here and asking why we do not do something that we can not possibly do. You might as well have a man starving to death, and have two doctors complaining and debating and fighting over whether or not he should be given one kind of soup or another kind of soup. A starving man wants soup, and the people in Alaska want the right to get that coal out. They want it for their own self-protection. They want it to protect them against an Arctic winter. If this bill did not have any other provision in it than that one provision alone, providing for the mining of coal for domestic use without any charge whatever, it would be worthy of passage by this body.

I trust the bill will not be emasculated by the amendments the Senator from Colorado has now offered, which will either result in its defeat or will result in a debate that will take weeks and weeks in a conference committee, and then will result in ultimate failure to adopt the conference report.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say just a word with relation to the statement of the Senator. These insertions will not interfere in the slightest degree with a man mining coal for domestic purposes under the leasing system. It does not interfere with it. The only thing it does is also to let the competitive system in there. If it can live, a competitive system will of necessity prevent high prices, and consequently will be of benefit to the people of Alaska.

I want to say that I believe all the people of Alaska are opposed to a leasing system. I find that when Secretary Fisher went up to Alaska about three years ago he was met at Valdez with a petition, which was a strong one, and a part of which I have read; but there was also contained in that petition this provision:

The leasing system is unanimously opposed in Alaska because it is un-American and, further, because it would intensify rather than diminish the chances of monopoly. None but wealthy corporations could do anything with a lease, and they would demand concessions unlikely to be granted, and which, if granted, would license monopoly. The leasing dream would mean an indefinite postponement of coal mining in Alaska.

That is what the people of Alaska thought. They may be wrong, and the Senator from Nevada may be right; but why not let both go in the bill, so if one fails the other can be operative? Consequently, why not let the sale system be inserted without diminishing the leasing provisions one particle, nor interfering with it, nor curtailing a single privilege under the leasing system?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, because reference was made by the Senator from Colorado to the general leasing bill, for which I am in a way responsible, and for a bill introduced accompanying it, I feel justified in saying a word in this connection.

The general leasing bill, so called, is not exactly accurately named so far as it applies to the disposition of coal lands, because it gives an option either to lease or to buy, as the parties see fit. The Senator from Colorado desires to apply the same principle in Alaska. I want to indicate, in a few words, why I think it ought not to be applied.

The Senator from Colorado has referred to coal lands in his State or in the State of Wyoming, I do not now recall which, valued by the United States Geological Survey at $400 per acre, and actually sold by the Interior Department at that sum; so that a man who buys 640 acres of that land is obliged to make an initial capital investment of six hundred and forty times $400. That represents a huge capital investment. With reference to valuable lands of that character, I undertake to say that a man will not be likely to buy if he has an opportunity to lease. He will prefer not to put that enormous amount of money into the thing in the first instance, but will take a lease.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] feels that there is no great likelihood of anybody taking a lease, and he looks for the development of these coal lands only through the system of alienation in fee. He expresses some dread of "landlordism." Now, we have heard a good deal about tenantry and landlordism. Of course the Senator from North Dakota comes from a State whose resources are practically exclusively agricultural, and I can very well understand how the idea of a lease or of endeavoring to conduct business upon a tenantry system strikes him as altogether ridiculous and absurd; but of course when you come to consider the operation of coal land that is worth $400 an acre, when you take into consideration the system of leasing as it is carried on, for instance, in the State of West Virginia, where it is an eminent success, it has quite a different aspect.

I want to speak about that further in a minute. I pause, however, to say that the terms "tenantry" and "landlordism" are quite ridiculous when one comes to consider the conditions under which mining is carried on upon a commercial basis. A man can dig a little hole in the ground and take out some coal for domestic use, and possibly sell a few tons of coal to his neighbors, at a very small expenditure for equipment; but those acquainted with the matter recognize that in order to mine coal on any kind of a commercial basis in the Territory of Alaska you will have to have a plant that will cost you a quarter of a million dollars. This tenantry constitutes a tenantry that represents, for equipment alone, an investment of at least $250,000. You can not equip a coal mine in my State so as to enter into the business of the production of coal upon a commercial basis for less than $150,000 to $200,000.

That being the case, you take a piece of coal property that will sell for $400 an acre, and I undertake to say that the man who wants to operate that property will lease rather than buy. Why do I say so? We ought to bring to our aid—and I suggest this for the benefit of the Senator from Colorado, who seems to feel likewise, that the property will not be developed at all under a leasing system—the experience of the world and of our sister States in the matter.

Reference was made here the other day to the State of Minnesota. It has enormous areas of iron lands in the northern part of the State. It does not sell those lands. It leases them. The iron-ore operator, however, can buy iron lands in the northern part of Minnesota if he desires to do so, or he can lease iron-ore lands. What does he do? The Senator from Colorado and the Senator from North Dakota would tell you, of course, that he buys; that no man would operate under a leasing system if he could buy. I want to read you, however, from an address by Frank L. McVey, chairman of the Minnesota Tax Commission, delivered at Toronto, Canada, on October 6, 1908, as follows:

The iron-ore properties—

Speaking of those in the northen part of Minnesota—

are held in fee and in lease. Ownership in fee, since the increased value of mining properties, has in large measure ceased to be the principal method of controlling iron properties. The investment of capital in fees creates a permanent interest charge, which mining companies are very anxious to avoid. The consequence is that leases are made on a tonnage basis by which the lessee agrees to pay a certain sum for every ton of ore that he takes out of the ground. The interests of the fee owner usually are guarded by royalty on a minimum tonnage.

That is the operation of the system in the State of Minnesota. Bear in mind that he says that has been the operation since the value of these mining properties has increased. Now, that is the situation in Alaska.

In Alaska we have two great fields of coal. The coal is of a very high quality. There are very large quantities of anthracite coal in both these fields. If you are going to value those properties for the purpose of sale, the value must be placed away up high. Therefore, under the rule which is inevitable whenever the property is valued high, operators will prefer to take leases; so that, so far as those fields are concerned, the sale system will not go into operation.

But, Mr. President, I do not want it to go into operation. Take the Nenana field. We had a map and photographs here some time ago showing the measures there to be 30 feet thick, cropping out on the very face of a cliff. We can go right in and take out the coal at any time in vast quantities and at a trifling expense. I do not want to sell those properties, Mr. President. I want to have them operated under the leasing system, with the title to those rich properties reserved in the Government.

In the Western States, such as Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and Utah, we very rarely have these properties that will sell for $400 an acre. They are ordinarily valued at from $10 to $50 an acre. Now, property that is valued at $50 an acre can be leased, but when you get down to property that is worth $10 an acre, in my estimation, it would not be leased, and I believe it might properly be offered for sale. The initial investment would not be large in the case of the low-grade properties. Therefore I am willing to put both systems in operation so far as the disposition of the coal lands in the West is concerned, but I am not willing to put it in operation so far as Alaska is concerned, because the Geological Survey has already located and surveyed these two rich tracts, and because those two tracts will be able to furnish a high-grade coal, and a coal that can be mined at a comparatively small cost.

Those two fields will supply all the demands of Alaska for years to come. Then, Mr. President, there will be plenty of time, 5 years from now, 10 years from now, 15 years from now; if the leasing does not develop Alaska as rapidly as the people then believe it could be developed under the sale system, it is a very easy thing to provide for the sale of the large areas of coal lands outside of these two fields. That is why I do not believe that the principle of the general leasing bill, so called, ought to be applied to the disposition of coal lands in Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will not offer the other amendment, because it is the same principle that is involved in the amendment just rejected.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should be glad if the Senator having in charge this bill will answer a question before I commence what I have to say. Does the Senator from Nevada believe that Alaska is so circumstanced that it will ever become a State in the American Union?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I do. Let me say, further, that I think that time will be expedited by this bill. I believe that the taxable property of Alaska will be more rapidly increased by this bill than nearly anything else that could be devised, for the sole reason that mines are universally taxed on their proceeds rather than on the surface land.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator believe that while these lands are held by the United States Government, and while they are being operated under leases carrying royalties payable to that Government, that either the mines or the royalties could be taxed by the State, if one should be formed and admitted into the Union?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer the Senator by stating that in our State there are thousands of mining claims which are owned by the United States, the title of which is in the United States, and the possessory right solely being held by individuals, the output of which the States are to-day taxing to the persons operating them. While the lessee, you understand, does not own the property, he becomes the owner of the ore or coal he mines, and upon that he pays taxes to the State in which he lives, if the tax is levied.

Mr. WHITE. But does he pay royalty on the output of the mine to the Government of the United States?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; but he pays an equivalent of royalty to the Government of the United States in the form of an assessment. It is within the power of the Government of the United States prior to the patenting of those claims to compel the payment of the royalty if the Government so desires.

Mr. WHITE. Then do I understand from the Senator that the lands are really patented? Has the Government issued patents to these miners?

Mr. PITTMAN. In Nevada, the gold and silver mines I am speaking of?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; they have not been patented by the Government. The Government owns them and the Government imposes conditions upon the use of such mining claims.

Mr. WHITE. What are the conditions attached to them?

Mr. PITTMAN. The condition at the present time is that the claimant shall do $100 worth of development work upon each one of these claims every year.

Mr. WHITE. And eventually acquire title?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no provision that they shall eventually acquire title at all.

Mr. WHITE. He has an option.

Mr. PITTMAN. He has the option of acquiring title if he performs certain conditions, but what I am getting at is this: Mining property which is owned by the Government of the United States is subject to taxation indirectly by the taxation of the ore that is taken out of those properties.

The only value of mining property generally is the value of the ores. Practically the only value of a gold and silver mine is the gold and silver ore. Practically the only value in most places in Alaska of coal lands will be the value of the coal produced. If the land were patented to some individual, the State could tax the land as any other land. If, on the other hand, it was not patented; if the title is held in the Government, but is mined, no matter under what provisions it is mined, the ore is subject to taxation. As the ore is the only real value, the real value is taxed under the leasing system.

Mr. WHITE. Then I want to ask——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. WHITE. In one moment I will yield to the Senator from Colorado. Then, as I understand, it is possible for the State to so tax the output as to drive the miner from his leasehold estate, for you know the power to tax carries with it the power to tax to any extent. Is that not true?

Mr. PITTMAN. Answering the Senator, I believe that it has been agreed that governments have the right to tax to any extent. Under the Constitution I think probably there is no right to discriminate in the taxation.

I wish to say that in our State the tax rate on ore is just the same as it is on other personal or real property. There are no restrictions on the taxing power of the State as to property owned by individuals or corporations and within the jurisdiction of the State, except those imposed by the State constitution.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. WEST. The Government may give the lease, but the output is there.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all. In other words, while the Government owns the land, when the ore is taken out of the ground it becomes the property of the person who took the lease, and it is subject to taxation just the same as a cow that is raised on Government land is subject to taxation. If the Senator's contention is correct, the State could not tax the cow, because the cow is raised on a Government range that is leased.

Mr. WHITE. It then becomes separated from the soil; it becomes personal property—the property of the miner. His mining operations are carried on independently of and disconnected in every way from any ownership or control by the Federal Government. Mr. President, that is not a parallel case to the one presented by this bill and the one that I am discussing. I am discussing the right of the States to impose a tax upon the output of mines that are being operated under a lease from the Federal Government while royalties are being paid the Federal Government on the output. Taxes levied in these circumstances are taxes against the United States Government, and can not be imposed by the States.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sorry to differ with the Senator, but that has been held to be constitutional.

Mr. WHITE. With all due respect to the Senator from Nevada, quite the contrary has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. WHITE. It can be claimed with equal force that the States can tax the bonds or other securities issued by the United States, as it can be that either the lands or the output of the mines can be taxed by the States when operated under the provisions of the pending bill. If the States could impose taxes on property in this way, they could tax the lessee or the miner to such an extent as would drive him out of business, and in doing this they would drive the United States Government out of the same business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Directly in line with what the Senator has stated there is a provision here which clinches it:

> SEC. 13. That the possession of any lessee of the land or coal deposits leased under this act for all purposes involving adverse claims to the leased property shall be deemed the possession of the United States, and for such purposes the lessee shall occupy the same relation to the property leased as if operated directly by the United States.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true as to the property leased, but that is not true as to the coal that comes out of the ground.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the United States were mining it and taking it out, is it possible that any charge could be made on it or any tax?

Mr. PITTMAN. If the bill stated that the coal after it was mined should be the property of the United States, as it is stated that the lease claims shall be treated, that argument would be true.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not a fact, however, that even if that were the way with the collection of the output of the mine, you can not get $1 out of a good many of them in the way of taxation? To many people it is a personal charge. Consequently it is like personal-property taxation; it is very difficult indeed to collect.

But the great feature in this bill in relation to reserving these lands in this way is the fact that when one lease will be taken out all the other valuable territory will be exempt from taxation. If, however, the land is going to be perpetually owned by the Government it not only relates to the particular mines that are leased, but there is exempt from taxation forever all the rest. There is the difficulty, it seems to me, and you would get only a very fractional amount even if the taxation suggested by the Senator were operative on a particular claim.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. In the Senator's time, I would simply like to ask the Senator from Colorado if his State does not tax bullion and the output of the mines?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is called taxation on the output, but really on the net profits of the mines.

Mr. PITTMAN. You tax the output of your mines?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly we do. That is about the only way we can get anything, and we do not get a satisfactory revenue from it.

Mr. PITTMAN. You tax them before the title of the property has left the Government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; after the output is produced. There is no doubt about that; but in Colorado, for instance, there is $500,000,000 worth of property——

Mr. PITTMAN. I was only discussing the legal phase which the Senator from Alabama seems to think——

Mr. SHAFROTH. None of which is taxed but under the leasing system. It never would be taxed except the net profit of the output of one or two mines.

Mr. WHITE. I am glad that the Senator is disposed to discuss that phase of the question. In Colorado the Federal Government is not receiving a royalty on the bullion that is taxed; it occupies the same relation to the Federal Government that the annual crops grown on the homestead occupy to it, where land has been entered or homesteaded from the Government. That is not the proposition involved in this bill at all. In this bill the Federal Government lays a royalty of 2 cents a ton to 5 cents a ton upon every ton of coal that is mined. If the State has the right to levy 10 cents a ton upon every ton of coal that is mined, the lessees, instead of paying 2 cents a ton royalty only, will pay 12 cents a ton—2 cents royalty and 10 cents tax. It is therefore in effect taxing the Government of the United States, and it has been most positively held that the States have no power to do it; in fact, the Constitution settles that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just supplementing the statement of the Senator, suppose the Government enters into a contract with an individual to mine coal belonging to the Government upon a certain royalty at which the lessee can afford to mine it. Then the State comes in and taxes the product so high that he can not afford to mine it, and thereby destroys the contractual relation between the Government and the individual. Can the State levy a tax in such a manner as would amount to a destruction of the right of the Government and its ability to collect its own revenue from its lessees?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly not; and that is the theory upon which the Federal Government will not permit its securities to be taxed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. WHITE. Just a moment, Mr. President. It never has been said by the Supreme Court of the United States or any other court, so far as I know, that the State had in fact levied a tax that was destructive of the security, but it has been said that to concede the power to tax would give the State the right to do it to any extent, and therefore the Federal Government would not concede the power. I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Of course the Senator is considering now a situation of affairs that will arise at some time in the remote future, when the Territory of Alaska shall be a State of the Union. That may be 5 years from now, or 10 years from now, or 15 years from now, or 20 years from now; we can not anticipate it in less than 5 years. Of course that situation could take care of itself when it arises. But I want to say, for the information of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] as well, that exactly the condition the Senator from Alabama speaks about exists now. Every locator of a mining claim has what may be said to be a contract with the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States contracts with him to the effect that if he will do a hundred dollars' worth of work each year upon a mining claim, until he shall have done $500 worth of work on the claim, and then shall pay to the Government at the rate of $5 an acre for that land in the case of a quartz claim and $2.50 in case of a mining claim, the Government of the United States will give him a patent to that land. Now, that is the contract. He goes and locates a claim and says, "I will take that proposition." Is it conceivable that the State will levy so high a tax upon the output of that mining claim? We will say it levies a tax of $2 a ton on all ore containing gold extracted from the mine. The man might as well give up his claim; he can not work it. It would be foolish for him to go on and do his hundred dollars' worth of work or $500 worth of work or pay $5 an acre for it, because it is useless.

So, Mr. President, under the existing condition of affairs the State can levy so heavy a tax upon the output of a mining claim as to practically destroy the contract a man has with the Government. But the State does not do it, because it feels that it is to its own interest to have the property worked. It does not tax him out of existence any more than it taxes the dry-goods merchant. You could impose a license tax upon the conduct of the dry-goods business in any State so that a man's right of property would practically be destroyed. But the State does not do it. It thinks the dry-goods stores are a good thing.

Mr. WHITE. I do not say that the State would do it or that States have done it. I am talking about the power it would give the States if conceded.

Mr. WALSH. I am trying to explain to the Senator that the State has that power now with reference to mining claims.

Mr. WHITE. I will say to the Senator that question has never been raised and never has been presented to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is an entirely different proposition from the question presented here. The proposition that you present is precisely the question that would be presented if the State levied a tax upon the products of the farm when the entryman was cultivating it before he had acquired his patent.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator entirely about that. Let me say to the Senator that we are contemplating to-day in the State of Montana levying a tonnage tax upon the output of copper mines. We now have a net-proceeds tax. We now tax the net proceeds of the mine, but we are contemplating imposing a tonnage tax upon the copper, a per-pound tax. The very same principle will permit us to impose a tax upon the production of wheat; that a man shall be obliged to pay so much per bushel on the wheat that he raises. Here is a man who has a homestead and is producing a thousand bushels of wheat a year off that homestead. It is the proposition of the Senator that the State is prohibited from putting a tax of 5 cents a bushel upon the production of that wheat.

Mr. WHITE. No; I never said that. I said nothing like that. That is an example advanced by the Senator.

Mr. President, I said that a State could not tax the output of mines operated under the provisions of this bill, where the Federal Government is receiving a royalty upon every ton of coal mined; that it would be violative of the Constitution of the United States; and I repeat that. If the Senator's State levies a tax, as he suggests, upon the output of the copper mines and those copper mines are being leased by the Federal Government on a royalty basis and the question is ever presented to the Supreme Court of the United States he will ascertain that his State can not tax in that way.

Now, Mr. President, I have been somewhat diverted. I agree with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] as to the likelihood of the Territory of Alaska becoming a State in the Federal Union, and as that is the status of the Territory we must deal with it having in view the proper relations not only of the States but of the Federal Government to this embryo State. What duties do these relations impose upon the Senate as representatives of the Nation as well as of the States?

First, Mr. President, the welfare of this contemplated State must be paramount to all other questions. As representatives we must be entirely unselfish and must not commercialize the resources of this unborn State. That is the policy which has been pursued with all the other Territories.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] says that Alaska may be admitted 5, 10, or 15 years from now. The day was when the great State which he represents was as far distant from admission into the Federal Union as the Territory of Alaska is to-day. Suppose the older States had commercialized the productions of your State before it was admitted into the Union and appropriated them to their own uses, I dare say your State never would have been admitted. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] suggests that we can admit Alaska or deny her admission as it suits our whim after we have stripped her so that she can never be operated as a successful sovereignty. Of course we have the power to do this, but should we do it?

In our treatment of the other Territories we granted the public domain to their citizens at a nominal cost. We have treated all their natural resources practically in the same way. By this means great inducements were offered people to migrate to and populate them. The population thus attracted to them became owners of their resources and permanent in their occupations. They were by these means given local attachment. There they builded their homes, exerted their energies, employed their talents, thereby enriching themselves and the State that was to come after them. They were dignified by its ownership. They were given a better and broader view of life. They exerted themselves to make their surroundings comfortable not only for their own pleasure but for the enjoyment of their posterity that was to follow them.

It was in this way that all the States in the Union, except the original thirteen, have been treated, under which treatment they have grown great and under which their populations have been made happy and contented. For that matter, the original thirteen States were treated quite as well by the mother country.

Mr. President, shall we now depart from the policy under which we have established and have in existence 48 sovereign States welded together in a Federal Union? If we are to depart from that policy, why should we do it? Why should we strike first at Alaska, that Territory that needs our care, that Territory that needs our help more than any other section of this country? She is far removed from the other States. Because of her isolation she can not lean on them for support, as they can lean upon each other. She must, to a large extent, stand or fall by herself. Therefore she must be self-supporting.

Mr. President, what is offered in this bill to induce people to migrate to that country? Are they permitted to homestead the lands as people were permitted to do in the other Territories? Is anything offered to invite or attract immigration to that Territory? Nothing whatever. On the contrary, under the provisions of this bill the main resources of the Territory that would attract immigration and hold population are being dissipated—yea, worse than dissipated; they are to be turned over to foreigners and others, who will in no sense become permanent citizens. By the bill we are proposing to exploit the resources of Alaska. Mr. President, under the provisions of this bill there need not be a single citizen of Alaska interested as a lessee or otherwise, in operating the system we are inaugurating. The lessees are not required to live in that Territory even for a day. Those who will be attracted there by this bill will feel no local interest, have no local pride, their homes or families will not be there, the only interest that they will have in the country will be to work it to the best advantage to accumulate wealth and remove it from the Territory, and at the end of their term of 50 years they will have enriched themselves and impoverished the Territory.

Mr. President, the right to exploit Alaska is not only given to the citizens of the other States under this measure, but corporations of other States are allowed to lease and hold for 50 years her wonderful resources. It is not confined even to them. Foreigners, the people of Canada, just across the line, can become the owners of the property of Alaska under the provisions of this bill. Is it contemplated by those who are pressing this measure that the great resources of that Territory shall be turned over to foreigners, who have no interest in this country, who have no interest in Alaska, except to exploit her and her resources? Mr. President, corporations organized in any State may become lessees under the provisions of this bill, and citizens of foreign States may become incorporated in the other States and thereby become the owners of Alaska. Why, I ask, should we adopt this policy?

The only excuse for it that I have heard is that we may thereby cheapen the price of coal. It is true it has been suggested once or twice that the people in Alaska needed some of this coal for immediate use, and that there was no way by which they could be given the use of it except by the passage of this bill. I deny it. We can pass a bill through this Congress in less than 10 days giving the people of Alaska the right to mine coal for their own consumption without paying a dollar for it; and that ought to be done. A measure like that would attract people to Alaska—real people, people who would feel an interest in the country itself.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WHITE. One moment, and I will yield. Foreigners may become virtually the owners of the soil under this system; they may be transported by the shipload to that Territory and that section of country be drained of its resources, its wealth transferred to other sections. Now I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know where the Senator from Alabama has obtained his information with regard to the ease with which certain bills may be passed through Congress. I want to state that I have not experienced that. I am chairman of the Committee on Territories, and in that capacity have had some experience with the Alaskan railroad bill, which required a fight of some four or five months, and then there was a compromise. As to this particular bill, we commenced work on it about six months ago, or longer—yes; nine months ago. The work began by the introduction of 8 or 10 bills by different Senators, all expressing their ideas. Many of those bills provided for the sale of those coal lands to the people of Alaska; others of those bills were for the giving of certain portions of those coal lands to the people of Alaska. We found that it was impossible to get any consideration in another branch of this Congress for any measure that did not carry with it the policy of leasing. I think the Senator will find, if he investigates the matter as carefully as some members of the committee have investigated it, that when he goes over to the House of Representatives he will not find the same enthusiasm on behalf of the people of Alaska as he himself has, so far as giving anything to them is concerned.

When we proposed to give them something up there for nothing the Members of the House held up their hands in holy horror at the idea of giving away the resources of this country to anybody. The truth about it is, I will say to the Senator, that every member of the committee who has been working on this bill has practically come to the conclusion that if we get the bill through at all we shall be very fortunate. That is the truth about it.

So far as foreigners are concerned, this bill absolutely prohibits a foreigner or anyone except a citizen of the United States from taking any advantage of it.

Mr. WHITE. Point to the section of the bill that does that.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well; I have it here right now.

Mr. WHITE. I challenge the Senator to produce such a provision.

Mr. PITTMAN. The bill provides that "any person above the age of 21 years who is a citizen of the United States."

Mr. WHITE. Yes; and corporations organized by the Government of the United States or by any State are permitted to lease lands under the provisions of this bill. Such corporations may be organized in practically every State in the Union with no other than foreigners holding stock in them. In this way they can take advantage of the provisions of the bill, and if they do, as I am sure they will, we shall have transferred this magnificent empire of ours to foreigners, conferring upon them the right to hold and occupy exclusively for 50 years the land, with a consequent right to consume and thereby destroy the only thing of value contained in it.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is a very good Democrat. Let me ask him another question.

Mr. WHITE. No; let me answer the question which the Senator has already asked.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will take the time later.

Mr. WHITE. I will give the Senator an opportunity, and shall be glad to do it.

The Senator from Nevada says a bill granting to the people of Alaska the right to take coal free for their own consumption could not be passed through this Congress. Will the Senator point me to a bill of that kind that either House of Congress has refused to pass?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; because we could not get such bills out of the committee.

Mr. WHITE. Then, Mr. President, it seems that the committees are responsible for giving away this empire. Why should Congress or this Senate yield to them any such right or submit to any such dictation? I suggest that a bill be introduced giving the people of Alaska the right to mine and use such coal as is necessary for home consumption and endeavor to have it passed. We should not assume that Congress will not enact such a law.

Mr. PITTMAN. All I want to say is this——

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Secretary of the Interior will have the power to decide as to how these leases shall be granted; and I have confidence enough in the Secretary of the Interior, knowing that it is the intention of the bill that none but citizens of the United States shall have the benefit of it, that he will investigate any corporation before he grants a lease to it.

Mr. WHITE. That, Mr. President, is no answer to my argument. The Secretary of the Interior under this bill will be compelled to grant leases to foreigners.

Mr. PITTMAN. Under the bill he is allowed to make the rules under which leases shall be granted.

Mr. WHITE. The provisions of the bill are peremptory that he shall grant leases to corporations of the United States or corporations of the States.

Mr. PITTMAN. Under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. WHITE. The rules mentioned relate to the mere matter of operation; that is all. The Secretary of the Interior is given the right to arrange the wording of the lease as to the manner in which the mines are to be operated, but he has no discretion under this bill by which he can deny corporations composed of citizens of European countries from acquiring leasehold interests in the Territory and thereby fill Alaska with undesirables.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator is really trying to perfect this bill, and not trying to kill it, let me suggest——

Mr. WHITE. I am not trying to perfect it; I am trying to defeat it.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator really——

Mr. WHITE. At heart I desire to bury it, and bury it beyond resurrection.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not want to interrupt the heart's desire of the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. Of course not, but I do not want the Senator to understand for a moment that I am trying to perfect such a bill as this; I am fighting it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator unless he desires to be interrupted.

Mr. WHITE. I am glad to be interrupted, but I do not want to be misunderstood.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I go on?

Mr. WHITE. The Senator may go on.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to suggest that if the Senator has not confidence in the Secretary of the Interior, he can move to amend the bill by inserting some such provision as this:

Provided, however, That a majority of the stockholders of such corporation shall be citizens of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I am not the author of this bill, and I do not propose to assume responsibility for any of its provisions, but we are commercializing that Territory, which is to become a State in the Federal Union, and, if its resources are conserved, may become one of the greatest States in the Union. Its territory is equal in extent to one-fifth of the territory of all the other States.

Mr. President, I have thought all my life that the sale of Joseph into slavery by his brethren constituted one of the darkest pages in history, but in passing this bill we are writing even a darker page in history than that. By it we are making the States we represent strip their unborn sister of her dowry and sell her into servitude for 50 years. Joseph's brethren had some excuse for what they did; they really and sincerely believed that he had supplanted them in their father's affections; but what, Mr. President and Senators, has this unknown sister done that justifies her 48 sisters in consigning her unborn to the fate proposed in this bill?

I beg that we wait at least until this embryo sister has been born. If Alaska is to be deprived, as is proposed by this bill, of her greatest natural resource, the one upon which depends the development of all her other resources, we have left her at the mercy of the snow and ice that is already bearing her down and from which she can not uncover herself if deprived of her only source of heat and power.

Mr. President, before perpetrating this wrong upon Alaska, I appeal again to Senators and ask them to wait at least until she has been born. Then let her sisters gather around the cradle of her birth, and perhaps her infant smiles or her baby tears may touch—yea, even soften—their obdurate hearts.

Mr. President, the idea of a Democratic Congress establishing in one of our Territories a system of foreign landlordism, a system that will require the presence of large numbers of Federal employees, to keep them there when their presence will be irritating and exasperating to the real citizenship of the country, is revolting to me. It was never contemplated by our Constitution. It is repugnant to our form of government. The framers of the Constitution never dreamed that such use would be made of Federal power. It was understood by them, and heretofore has been understood by us, that the Federal Government held the lands and resources of the Territories in trust for the benefit of their people until States were formed, and then for the benefit of the States.

The Federal Government has no right to permanently occupy or control the territory of the country except to discharge some Federal function, and leasing lands to foreigners for them to operate is not one of the functions of the Federal Government.

If this bill is enacted into law, hordes of Federal employees as well as foreigners will infest the territory of Alaska, there to interfere with and perhaps prevent that Territory from becoming a State of the Union.

Mr. President, are we going to reverse the policy of the Federal Government which has been in force from the time it was formed until to-day and inflict this wrong upon the people of the Territory of Alaska?

How long, Mr. President, would the States themselves, having the right to speak and to be heard in the halls of Congress, submit to such interference with and usurpation of their rights, as is proposed in this legislation? They would not submit for a moment to have their domain invaded by Federal authority and made the dumping ground for undesirables of foreign countries.

We can well imagine when this useless, heartless, and sanguinary struggle in Europe has ended that the population from that distressed and impoverished country will flee from its blood-stained fields and flock to Alaska. The innumerable impoverished host will gladly accept the invitation that this bill on its passage will extend, and when they arrive they will not come imbued with the love of peace and good will that characterizes American citizenship, but rather will they bring with them what they have been taught by the war lords of Europe—disrespect for our representative form of government and be disposed to rule by militarism with the sword.

Does any reason exist why we should transplant this kind of population, with its un-American views, to our continent, to Alaska, if you please, there to menace our institutions and threaten our liberties? Let us pause and contemplate the consequences before we do it.

Mr. President, the only reason advanced for passing this bill, except that the few people now in Alaska need a small amount of coal for their own consumption, is that it will reduce the price of coal. This is not a sufficient reason. We have cheap coal now, probably cheaper than any other Nation in the world, and even if we needed cheaper coal, can we afford to pay the princely price we are offering to pay by the passage of this bill? That is, to surrender the Territory of Alaska to the control of foreigners for the long period of 50 years, and even this will not cheapen coal in this country. When these lessees have lined their pockets with gold, obtained by exhausting the resources of Aalska; when the coal diggers have been paid, as they must be paid, their wages for mining; when the royalties to the Federal Government have been paid, as they must be, and when the middlemen have taken their toll; when all these greedy hands have been filled, when their avarice has been satisfied, the people of the States need not expect that they will get coal any cheaper than they are getting it now.

Mr. President, what does this bill do for Alaska? What wrong is this that we are about to perpetrate on her? Aye, sir, we are robbing her of her greatest, most vital, and indispensable resource. Situated as she is in the frozen north, isolated from the other States, she needs, above all things, her fuel supply, a supply not for this year or next, but for centuries to come.

That land can not be inhabited, that climate can not be endured except by the aid of artificial heat, and by this measure we are depriving that country of this prime necessity. We are robbing this embryo State while she is helpless. She lies prostrate and voiceless at our feet. Her silent helplessness should appeal to our sense of justice as well as manhood in her behalf.

When we deprive Alaska of her fuel supply, we strike at her very right to exist, we deny her the right of development and growth, we stop forever the wheels of progress on her shores. Without the benefit of coal her other resources must lie dormant. The wonderful possibilities of her gold deposits will be denied her. Even her power and agricultural productions will be greatly hampered. She needs them all in cooperation, and when properly developed they will not only make her habitable but great.

These great assets, if conserved, will attract to her a population worthy of the advantages she holds in store for them. They will be enriched by her, and she in turn will be enriched by them.

Mr. President, the other States of this Union may assemble around the table to partake of this unnatural feast, which has been provided by requisitioning the resources of this coming sister into the Union. I want it understood, however, that Alabama will not be there, and will not participate.

If this bill passes, the Territory of Alaska may bid farewell to all hopes of statehood and dreams of sisterhood with the States of the Union we represent. Pursuing somewhat the thought of the immortal Prentiss, I will say that if this bill passes, if Congress enacts this measure, then the star that should represent Alaska ought to be withheld from the flag. In its light her existence as a State can never be reflected; its only office will be to furnish light in which her degradation may be read in its stripes.

Mr. President, I urge that the Senate do not pass this bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the first section, on page 13, the following:

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, for the purpose of making surveys herein provided for, to continue available until expended: Provided, That any surveys heretofore made under the authority or by the approval of the Department of the Interior may be adopted and used for the purposes of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am very happy, indeed, to find that I have an ally in the Senator from Alabama [Mr. WHITE], who expresses himself in utter opposition to this bill. I feel very kindly toward the Senators, my neighbors sitting here, who are pressing it; but I believe this to be infinitely a dangerous and a bad measure, and I am opposed to it in toto. As I said before, and I need not now reiterate, I believe in the Government ownership of these mines.

As showing how much profit comes through individual and private ownership of this great necessity, this article, by a singular coincidence, came into my hands while this discussion was going on. I hold in my hand the Philadelphia Record, published in Philadelphia, Pa., right up in the coal regions. It says:

Last year was not considered a good year for the anthracite coal trade, so it is especially gratifying to learn that the Lehigh & Wilkesbarre Coal Co. are able to worry through with the modest profit of 36.2 per cent. In the year previous, last year, it did even better. Then it declared 48 per cent available for dividends.

Such figures as these should convince anthracite consumers of the impossibility of our coal-producing companies carrying any greater burdens than they now stagger under.

That tells the truth in regard to individual, private ownership of coal. I live in New Jersey, right on the line of the coal transportation coming through to the city of New York. The price of coal has been shoved up until now it is $7 or $7.50 a ton, and it will go up within the next few days until it reaches about $8; yet these companies fatten on profits of 36.2 per cent.

I say that this prime and stern necessity should be the people's, and for the people; and, while this place of discussion—Alaska—is far removed from Pennsylvania, yet the same principle will hold good. In Heaven's name, while we own the Territory, while we are providing for the building of the railroads for transportation, let this prime necessity and blessing come to the people as freely and as cheaply as it can. Cut out profits of 36.2 per cent and what would be the price to the average consumer? It would be a blessing to humanity.

I hope this Democratic Senate will have the courage of its convictions and vote against this measure. I have voted for very many amendments to it, hoping that I might make it better. I fear I can foresee the passage of the bill, but my vote shall be recorded unalterably and positively "no."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "renewal," on page 18, in line 6, it is proposed to insert:

All net profits from operation of Government mines and all royalties and rentals under leases as herein provided shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States in a separate and distinct fund, to be applied to the reimbursement of the Government of the United States on account of any expenditures made in the construction of railroads in Alaska, and the excess shall be deposited in the fund known as the Alaska fund, established by the act of Congress of January 27, 1905, to be expended as provided in said last-mentioned act.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the system of taxation to be imposed—the reference there is to the net receipts—and I also wish to call his attention to the fact that I do not believe there is any one of the Western States that taxes the output except the net profits. The net output is insignificant compared to the value of the mine, and if the same thing should apply to the mines in Alaska the amount to be derived from such taxation would be very insignificant indeed—nothing to compare to the ordinary taxation on the value of lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 14, after the word "thereof," in line 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 11, after the word "thereof" and before the colon, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That a majority of the stock of such corporation shall at all times be owned and held by citizens of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I will ask to have the amendment stated again.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to inquire of the Senator why he does not make it all of the stock. Why is there any reason or necessity for allowing foreigners to become the owners of that property?

Mr. PITTMAN. To become stockholders in companies in this country?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; which is the same thing.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know whether that is good policy or not; but I know one thing, and that is that there is not a State in the Union but permits foreigners to own some of the stock of corporations organized in it. As a matter of fact, I have been a member of mining companies where we were very glad to get English capital in them, so long as we controlled the corporations. It is the control of the corporations that is material to our people. If we want to sell treasury stock to raise money for working a lease up in the coal lands of Alaska, we intend to obtain control. After we have control we do not care who buys the remaining stock. It is the control we want.

Not only that, but the administration of these mines would be too difficult if you provided any more than control. I am trying to make this thing practical. The poor man who goes up to Alaska will take a lease of 2,560 acres, and he will organize a little corporation; he will set aside in the treasury a third or a fourth of the stock, and then he will go out to the public and say, "I have a good lease, and I want you to help me develop this property. I want you to purchase this treasury stock."

Mr. WHITE. This is what I want to have the Senator answer: These foreigners are becoming the owners of this property, practically the owners of the soil, before Alaska is admitted into the Union; and they may in that way exercise their influence against having it admitted as a State.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have already stated to the Senator that the bill expressly provides that nobody but a citizen of the United States can take the benefit of this act; and now I provide by this amendment, so as to satisfy the Senator, that no corporation except one controlled by citizens of the United States can take the benefit of the act.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator for one moment say that without that amendment foreigners could not have leased under the provision of this bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will admit that if the Secretary of the Interior had been the character of man the Senator from Alabama evidently thinks he is, corporations controlled by foreigners might have benefited under it. I want to say also that foreigners can own their claims and mine under the same conditions in the Senator's State of Alabama; and I should like to know whether they have ever taken any steps in the State of Alabama to help correct it?

Mr. WHITE. No; because we have a sovereign State there, and our sovereign State controls such matters; but you are turning this matter over to foreigners, who can determine for themselves whether or not Alaska shall ever be admitted. I should have no objection to their owning stock in the coal mines if it were in a State of the Union. I do object to foreigners leasing the land for 50 years, and by their possession and control of it prevent the admission of Alaska into the Union for that time.

Mr. PITTMAN. The bill absolutely excludes foreigners from taking or controlling any of such leases. Such protection could not be insured if the lands were sold, because there is nothing to prevent an owner of property in Alaska from selling to a foreigner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. WHITE. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point that there is not a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Nelson	Sheppard
Borah	Johnson	Norris	Shively
Bristow	Kern	O'Gorman	Simmons
Bryan	Lane	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Chamberlain	Lea, Tenn.	Owen	Smoot
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Page	Sterling
Clapp	Lewis	Perkins	Thornton
Colt	McCumber	Pittman	Townsend
Culberson	McLean	Poindexter	Walsh
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Reed	White
Gore	Myers	Shafroth	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. Not a quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. WEST answered to their names when called.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia and Mr. HITCHCOCK entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the address of Mr. George E. Baldwin, of Valdez, Alaska, delivered to the American Mining Congress at Chicago, Ill., October 24, 1911, be published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? There being none, the address is ordered to be printed as requested.

The address referred to is as follows:

THE ALASKAN QUESTION.

[By George E. Baldwin, Valdez, Alaska.]

I wish at the beginning of my remarks to extend to the American Mining Congress, in behalf of the people of Alaska, our profound and sincere thanks.

It seems that of late years scarcely any sort of a national meeting could be held, no matter for what purpose convened, or by whom constituted, without passing some sort of resolutions for our benefit, and, considering the Niagara of misinformation and the deluge of lies about Alaska with which the country has been flooded by the muckraking writers for a certain class of publications, it is not surprising that certain ignorant but well-meaning people should make mistakes.

As the residents of Alaska depend almost entirely for a livelihood upon mining and its subsidiary industries, it is a reasonable presumption that the members of the American Mining Congress should best appreciate the difficulties under which we labor and be most competent to suggest remedies. The resolutions concerning our Territory passed at your last meeting reminded us that one great organizaion at least was our friend.

What are the needs of Alaska? Considering the fact that a country of great natural and undeveloped resources has remained stationary in population for 10 years, if not actually decreasing, its trade and commerce the same, the question is certainly one to demand thoughtful study.

The Secretary of the Interior recently visited Alaska and was presented with a memorial by the citizens of Valdez, in part as follows:

"Primarily Alaska demands and needs the same right of untrammeled development that has been accorded to every other Territory of the United States pioneered by Americans. Alaskans ask that American citizens and all other industrious men be permitted to create property for themselves out of the limitless resources of this vast Territory unhampered by bureaucratic dictation and interference. The people of Alaska are a unit in opposition to Federal landlordism over its mines, forests, and water power.

"The doctrine that the Federal Government, 5,000 miles away, knows better what is good for Alaska than the pioneers who have spent years within its boundaries is a political heresy that can not long stand before the enlightened sense of justice which characterizes the American people. If left to herself, Alaska would enact laws for her government and development with the same intelligence and regard for natural right that was shown by the early immigrants into the Pacific and mountain States, of whom Justice Field said in a judicial opinion:

"'Wherever they went they carried with them that love of order and system and of fair dealing which are the prominent characteristics of our people.'

"And the Senator who introduced the first mining law into Congress in 1866, which was merely a Federal recognition of miners' law, said that the miner had given the honest toil of his life to discover wealth, which when found was protected by no higher law than that enacted by himself, under the implied sanction of a just and generous Government.

"This just and generous Government has been succeeded by one that seeks to create a distant landlordism over Alaska. This policy, if continued, will forever stunt the development of the Territory. Men born under republican institutions will not long remain where they have to get permission of a Government agent to transact business. The garroting of Alaska by the last two national administrations has stopped its growth, decreased its population, and financially ruined many men who had not anticipated that the great National Government would make Alaska the dumping ground of eastern political fads."

And upon that subject I wish to add that, in my opinion, a form of local self-government at least as liberal as has ever been accorded the pioneers of any Territory is absolutely necessary to our proper and orderly development. We will be satisfied with no makeshift, no halfway measure; it is our right as Americans, and it is rights we demand, and not permits and privileges that we sue for. So much for the political side of Alaska's needs.

ALASKA HAS PAID DEBT TO NATION.

It has been urged by certain people utterly unacquainted with the risks and hardships of pioneering, and who have never wandered far from their own firesides, that Alaska was bought and paid for out of the taxes paid by the American people and they are entitled to get something out of it. Our answer is that they have gotten something out of it and are getting something out of it. The nearly two hundred million of Alaska gold which has been poured into the channels of trade of this Nation, stimulating industry in all its branches, has more than paid any debt Alaska owes the Nation. During the panic of 1907 our bankers were begging the money power of Europe for a loan of twenty million in gold.

Alaska that year produced nearly that amount of the yellow metal, all of which went to the United States, not loaned, but to purchase commodities from almost every State in the Union, for up there we must import almost everything, except the air we breathe and the water we drink—and I suppose if the ultraconservationists had their way we would pay a direct royalty on these.

Any attempt to impose upon the people and resources of Alaska any burden not borne by the people and resources of the balance of the country will fail—first, because it is unjust; second, because it is economically wrong.

It seems to me, in my boyhood days I read a story of fools who killed a goose that was laying golden eggs.

The mining laws of the United States, as they stand to-day, have stood the test of nearly 40 years. These laws have been interpreted by the courts at an expense to the miners of millions of dollars. All important points have been settled, and to enact a new set of laws at this late date, with all this to be gone over at the expense of the mining industry of Alaska, which is practically all on the public lands, would impose on that industry a burden it could not well bear.

Again, we demand—with reason, we think—the same laws as apply to the remainder of our country. One might think to hear some people talk that the present residents of Alaska had established a close corporation and were trying to keep out the remainder of the people from participating in the possible profits of its development, while as a matter of fact we are crying for miners, investors, prospectors, and industrious, thrifty men generally to come and take up their residence with us.

The town I live in is located in a forest reserve. Last summer I was doing a little building, and purchased lumber from Puget Sound, 1,400 miles away, which, quality considered, was cheaper than could be produced by the local mills after they had paid the royalties and complied with the regulations of the Forest Service. If our gold mines are to be put on a leasing basis, and managed the same as our forests, I have no doubt we shall be able to extract gold from sea water cheaper than from the rocks and gravels of Alaska.

The problem of conservation has become so confused with the problems of Alaska that a few words upon this subject may not be amiss. A short magazine article published recently upon political subjects contained the word "conservation" no less than 26 times.

Now, what is conservation?

HOW SOME ALASKANS REGARD CONSERVATION.

From our standpoint conservation to date is an attempt to gather all the public lands of our Territory as an estate—its forests, its mines, its water power, its wharf sites—to be managed by a vast horde, a devastating host of Government underlings and worked by our citizens as tenants, licensees, and lessees; these underlings to be ruled by a retinue of officials stationed at Washington, thousands of miles away; all of these locusts of officialdom to consider themselves the people's masters and not their servants. Why this retinue stationed at Washington? So they can be in closer touch with questions to be decided? No; so they can be promptly on the ground to lobby for more appropriations to hire more officials to lobby for more appropriations, ad infinitum. And they will need these appropriations, for such a system has never in past history paid its way and never will.

For generations we have been decrying the heartless greed of Irish landlords, yet here is a system of landlordism that out-Irishes the most Irish landlord that ever disgraced the human race by his rapacity—a landlord who refuses to develop his property, refuses to let anyone else develop it except under the most onerous conditions, and refuses to pay one cent of taxes to be expended by local officials for local needs. The manifest injustice of all this needs no comment.

The idea that an owner will not more efficiently conserve resources than a Government official is too silly to merit discussion.

I, in common with all other Alaskans, have nothing but words of commendation for that great body of scientific men who have represented the various branches of the Government service in Alaska.

There is another way to look at conservation.

It is a foolish attempt on the part of this generation to do the thinking for generations yet to be. What can be more ridiculous? You have probably heard the story told by Congressman HUMPHREY of Washington of the old woman who went into hysterics after she had concluded that some epidemic was going to kill all the geese in the world, that the people would forget how to write, because there would be no quills to make pens with. It is to be presumed that had conservation been a fad in those days, all the remaining public land would have been promptly declared a goose reserve.

Less than a century ago, well-meaning men were making doleful prophecies about the impending extinction of the sperm whale, and on that account the world would soon be in darkness from sundown until sunup. What a pity some power strong enough did not then declare the seven seas a whale reserve!

The idea of thinking for future generations has been tried. About 100 years ago naval reserves of live-oak timber in the Southern States were created to provide the material to build the battleships of the future. After these acres had been held for generations in unproductive idleness they were recently restored to the use of man, and if an individual went to the Navy Department to-morrow to sell live oak for building battleships, he would be considered a candidate for the lunatic asylum.

The doctrine of radical conservation, as applied to coal, is an absolutely hopeless one, for no matter how little or how much is used each year, it will finally all be gone.

RIGHT-MINDED CITIZEN ABHORS WASTE.

Every right-minded civilized man abhors waste, particularly of something that can never be replaced; but the doctrine that this is the last generation of inventors and scientists that will live and that the many forces of nature now going to waste, compared to which all the coal in the world is as tallow dip to a thousand arc lights, that these sources of power will never be harnessed by man, and that the present generation must be starved as we Alaskans are being starved—well, words fail me when I attempt to express my opinion of such criminal foolishness.

These lamenting Jeremiahs who moan over the exhaustion of our natural resources pay all their attention to that section of the country where the population is sparse, while the resources in the section of the country where the population is dense are being used as circumstances demand, without any of their valuable advice and assistance.

One of the problems of our Nation is to restrict the people of our country from congregating in the centers of population; yet these radical conservationists demand the continuance of, and extension of, a system that is depopulating our Territory, in which at present there is only one human being—man, woman, child, Siwash, squaw, and pappoose—for every 7,700 acres.

Alaska is being literally reserved to death. We have forest reserves, military reserves—one of them 100 miles in diameter—coal reserves fish reserves, naval reserves, missionary reserves, church reserves, school reserves, seal reserves, bird reserves, and, I suppose, by this time, bug reserves, and cranks crying for more reserves.

Soon there will be nothing for us sour-dough Alaskans to do but act as cooks and packers for me "lud," the eastern faddist, who comes out to see what has been reserved at his behest and then we will be disappointed, for not one out of a hundred of these fanatics will ever leave the deck of the steamer. In this connection I wish to state that the self-styled leader of the conservation movement has recently visited Alaska. This great musher, this great trail blazer, who has penetrated the impenetrable fastnesses of the mountains, who has communed with nature, knows the trees because when all the world but he and they were asleep he purloined their bark-lark secrets, this marvel of fortitude, after traveling 4,000 miles on Pullman cars and palatial steamships, got within 15 miles of the Matanuska coal fields, about which he and his paid assassins of character have been ranting, on a trail that has been traveled for years by men, women, children, and cripples—still it was too tough for him. He turned around and came back and spent a large part of his time in Alaska around hotel lobbies trying to justify his actions before a hostile and outraged people. If the pioneers of Alaska had been made of no sterner stuff than he, the Matanuska coal fields would never have been discovered. Less than two-hundredths of 1 per cent of the land of Alaska is in private ownership, more than ninety-nine and ninety-eight one hundredths are still in the public domain, and I ask you, in all candor, do you blame us for using rather strong language when our development is retarded by Executive orders, issued at the behest of faddists, who cry that Alaska is being gobbled up?

ALASKAN COAL QUESTION.

In regard to the so-called Alaskan coal question, the practically unanimous expressions of the people of our section are voiced in the following extract from the memorial to the Secretary of the Interior previously referred to:

"Alaskans recognize that the Alaska coal problem is hopelessly perplexing, chiefly because of the vast discharge of wholesale misinformation. Alaskans know that there is no danger of an Alaska coal monopoly. The coal fields are widely scattered and of far less value than advertised in hysterical print. Alaskans generally believe that the coal lands should be disposed of under existing laws for development by private enterprises, relying upon the Government to deal with monopoly should it be threatened. Recognizing, however, that in the present exaltation of the eastern mind through the epidemic of conservation, this is impossible, many Alaskans are inclined to urge that the Government itself undertake the operation of the coal mines. If this could be done successfully by a competent official board, it would vindicate the theories of those who believe that the Government should have absolute control of its remaining fuel supply. If a capable Government commission, with full power to manage business under regulated statutes should be unable to accomplish satisfactory results, the project could be abandoned after a few years.

"It is needless to repeat arguments often iterated to emphasize the folly of continued bottling up of Alaska coal. Alaskan residents are paying exorbitant prices for fuel and the Government is paying unnecessarily high prices for coal transported from the East for naval and other Federal uses on the Pacific coast, while political agitators wrangle over the unknown possibilities of Alaska coal fields.

"The leasing system is unanimously opposed in Alaska, because it is un-American, and, further, because it would intensify rather than diminish the chances of monopoly. None but wealthy corporations could do anything with a lease, and they would demand concessions unlikely to be granted, and which, if granted, would license monopoly. The leasing dream would mean indefinite postponement of coal mining in Alaska."

Large numbers of people in the States advocate the leasing of the Alaska coal fields without a second thought upon the matter. It is not generally known that the leasing of mineral lands in the United States has been tried, proved a disastrous failure, and was condemned by two Presidents of the Nation in messages to Congress.

A high Government official has recently returned from Alaska advocating the leasing of the coal lands there and citing the case of British Columbia as an example of where the leasing system works well. This is not denied, but the cases are vastly different. Does an applicant for a lease in British Columbia have to enter into negotiations with officials in London acting under laws passed by the British Parliament? No. Does he even have to go to Ottawa? No. At Victoria the laws are passed by local people, the negotiations entered into and consummated all right at home.

ALASKAN COMMITTEE REPORT.

I wish at this point to quote from the report of your committee on Alaska affairs made to this session of the American Mining Congress. I very much regret that time does not allow the reading of this report in full. This report represents the work of many months of painstaking labor on the part of that committee, but it will be published with the records of this session. It being probable that some of you at least will not read this report, I take the liberty of quoting from it as follows:

"We are also opposed to making of Alaska the experiment station for new ideas. We are unable to find where the leasing system has ever been successful in the operation of coal fields under any Government. Leasing is perhaps successful to some extent in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, where a market is near at hand and transportation is well provided, frequently by competing lines, and the leases are from individuals. It is not a Government leasing system.

"It has been said that the leasing system works well in British Columbia, Yukon Territory, and in Australia and New Zealand. We can only repeat the statement that a half truth is frequently the most dangerous and misleading falsehood. The system in British Columbia is in no sense a leasing system as is proposed in the United States. The lessee in British Columbia may obtain a lease of 6,400 acres for five years, with a renewal for three years, but is privileged at any time during the lease, or within three months thereafter, to purchase the lands at $20 per acre. It is a significant fact, too, that no mines are operated in British Columbia under the leasing system. All are operating upon granted lands. There is a law for leasing the coal lands in the Yukon Territory. The only attempts ever made to operate under that law resulted in failures. There is not a single coal mine operated in the Yukon Territory upon a lease from the Government. In a similar manner the laws of Australia and New Zealand provide for private ownership at the option of the lessee. It is reported that much coal is mined there under a leasing system, but that is because the operators do not find it necessary to exercise the option given them to purchase the land. They are given that option, however, and are thus afforded the security of private ownership whenever they see fit to exercise the privilege. No such system has been proposed for Alaska. None of the leasing bills introduced in Congress permit the lessee ever to acquire title to the land. The Robinson bill, now pending before Congress, even provides for only a portion of the royalty upon coal mines in Alaska to be expended in the territory, and the balance is to be turned into the Treasury of the United States. It is a rank injustice to compel the residents of Alaska to pay a royalty into the Treasury of the United States upon the coal they consume. Why not a similar royalty from the consumers of coal elsewhere? The consumers of Pennsylvania coal would object to paying such a royalty to the Federal Government, and the consumers in Alaska are entitled to urge the same objections.

"Poor old Alaska has surely had quite enough of the leasing system. It was leased by Russia from 1799 until 1867 to the Russian-American Co. That company was the absolute lord and master, and its leasehold sovereignty absolutely prevented development. Fortunately, nobody was lured there under false premises. Only those went there who did so for the Russian-American Co. A leasing system was not inflicted upon honest, hardy pioneers as is now proposed by the American Government. Fortunately for the United States, Alaska was not colonized or settled by the Russians. Their leasing system prevented it. Otherwise the Russian people would have so well developed Alaska by 1867 that the United States could not have bought it for 2 cents an acre, with its wonderful fisheries and a fur-seal herd of 6,000,000 thrown into the bargain. The first thing we did, however, was to lease that seal herd to a company which in 40 years made a net profit of $5,738,000 and depleted the seal to about 75,000. In the meantime the United States Government spent more money in patroling the seal islands than it obtained from royalties on the lease, and Alaska got absolutely nothing, not a cent in taxation, not a lighthouse, not a schoolhouse, not as much as a flagpole. Now, the United States Government has gone into the sealing business itself, and has already begun to make a profit. But this kind of talk may lead us to advocate the building of railroads in Alaska and the operation of coal mines there by the Government."

Our opposition to the leasing system is based upon another and, we believe, a higher principle. It places the control of our resources in the hands of a power 5,000 miles away—out of touch, out of sympathy, and indifferent to local needs and requirements. It is a return to the system of land tenures that obtained in feudal days, where the landlord was both landlord, lawgiver, and law interpreter. It has been argued that a large number of coal mines of the United States are operated on a leasing basis; but these leases are between man and man, both of them standing equal before the law and having to submit any differences that may arise between them to a court before whom they stand as equals. This system of governmental leasing leaves the question of any differences to be decided absolutely in the hands of the lessor. There is still another objection in the fact that this system will in all probability not stop with the governmental leasing of coal mines. We have seen the Forest Service, organized ostensibly for the purpose of conserving the forests, gradually, stealthily, insidiously, and in many cases without a shadow of law to back their actions, extend their fields of operations. We have seen them assume control of our water power. We have seen them grab our wharf sites. We have seen them meddle with the mines included in the forest reserves to the great detriment of that industry. We deny that a people can be considered a free people who live under a system in which the owner of the land is both the landlord and the law.

Any number of schemes that are probably practical and workable ones in such small compact countries as Switzerland or New Zealand are absolutely unworkable in a country as vast as ours.

The securing of title to a few acres of land in Alaska involves almost endless correspondence with Washington, the unwinding of miles of red tape and generally years of delay; and the matter of issuing patents to Government lands is something in which our officials have the experience of over a century to guide them. To introduce some new system now would, as the Valdez memorial states, "mean the indefinite postponement of coal mining in Alaska."

ABOLITION OF FOREST RESERVES URGED.

One of Alaska's needs is the immediate abolition of forest reserves. The recent and present governors of the Territory have in their reports condemned them. I wish to speak for a moment upon the Chugach reserve, in which I live. This reserve covers thousands of square miles along the southern coast, more than 90 per cent of which is utterly destitute of timber, being barren slopes, glaciers, and mountains above timber line. Less than 10 per cent is covered with a scattering growth of spruce, hemlock, and cottonwood of inferior quality, practically all mature and largely supermature. Not a foot of this timber will ever be exported. In fact, a large part of the lumber used within the limits of this reserve is shipped from Puget Sound. It is only useful for local needs, and should be used by our people without undue restriction.

Forest reserves are supposed to be created to provide timber for future generations, to attract rainfalls, to regulate stream flow, to prevent forest fires, and provide Government revenue.

Let us take up these propositions in turn.

First. What is the use of preserving timber that is falling down and rotting of old age for future generations?

Second. As to rainfall, the area embraced within the limits of this forest reserve receives a rainfall of from 70 to 120 inches per annum. As over 90 per cent of this reserve is destitute of timber and the treeless Aleutian Islands to the west of us receive more rains than we do, the idea that the cutting of the timber needed by our people will have any effect upon rainfall is utterly absurd.

Third. As to stream flow, our streams largely have their sources in the everlasting glaciers, and would flow bank full for centuries without a drop of precipitation.

Fourth. As to forest fires, there never has been a forest fire in this reserve, and never will be, soaked with rain in summer, and covered with snow in winter.

Fifth. As to Government revenue, it has cost the Government $2 for every $1 it has collected so far, besides imposing a cost of thousands of dollars upon our citizens in obtaining permits.

We defy the Forest Service to show one single benefit it has conferred upon the people living in this reserve, upon the people who will live in it in the future, or upon the people of the United States generally.

In conclusion, I wish to state that, in my opinion, there is no Alaskan question any more than there was a Montana question or a Colorado question 50 years ago. All we wish and all we ask is the same rights as have been accorded the pioneers of other Territories in their primitive struggle for development.

PROPOSED ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. CULBERSON. Under the circumstances, in view of the lateness of the hour, I will not insist on taking up the report for final consideration this afternoon. I think, probably, it ought to be read. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Texas if it is intended to take up any other business this afternoon?

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand not.

Mr. KERN. Not unless there is some matter of business which some Senator desires to present to the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to have the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 25, 35, 38, 42, 45, 46, 47, 53, 56, 59, 63, 80, 93, and 94.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 40, 44, 48, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 75, 79, 81, 82, 83, 85, 87, and 88; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities, which commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation, or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "3" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That a final judgment or decree hereafter rendered in any criminal prosecution or in any suit or proceeding in equity brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any suit or proceeding brought by any other party against such defendant under said laws as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto: Provided, This section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken: Provided further, This section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees rendered in criminal proceedings or suits in equity, now pending, in which the taking of testimony has been commenced but has not been concluded, provided such judgments or decrees are rendered before any further testimony is taken.

"Whenever any suit or proceeding in equity or criminal prosecution is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws, the running of the statute of limitations in respect of each and every private right of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said suit or proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "5" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "6"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "6" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "7"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words stricken out by said amendment insert the word "substantially"; after the word "acquisition" and the comma thereafter, in line 16, page 7, insert "or to restrain such commerce in any section or community"; and after the word "or," in line 16, page 7, insert the word "tend"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words stricken out by said amendment insert the word "substantially"; after the word "acquired" and the comma thereafter, in line 24, page 7, insert "or to restrain such commerce in any section or community"; and after the word "or," in line 1, page 8, insert the word "tend"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words stricken out by said amendment insert the word "substantially"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "thereof," at the end of said amendment, add the words "or the civil remedies therein provided"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment strike out only the matter contained in lines 16 to 24, inclusive, page 9, and lines 1 to 17, inclusive, page 10; at the beginning of line 18, page 10, insert "Sec. 8"; after the word "association," in line 21, page 10, strike out the comma, and after the word "company," in the same line, insert a comma; after the words "United States," in line 22, page 10, insert a comma; strike out the figures "$2,500,000," in line 24, page 10, and in line 3, page 11, and insert in lieu thereof in each instance the figures "$5,000,000"; in line 16, page 11, after the word "association," strike out the comma, and in the same line, after the word "company," insert a comma; in line 17, page 11, after the words "United States," insert a comma; strike out the word "one," in line 18, page 11, and insert in lieu thereof the word "two"; and after the word "association," in line 23, page 11, strike out the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 16, page 12, after the word "than," insert the following: "banks, banking associations, trust companies and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change "Sec. 8" to "Sec. 9"; and after the words "accruing from" in said amendment insert the following: ", or used in,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 11. That authority to enforce compliance with sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 of this act by the persons respectively subject thereto is hereby vested: in the Interstate Commerce Commission where applicable to common carriers, in the Federal Reserve Board where applicable to banks, banking associations, and trust companies, and in the Federal Trade Commission where applicable to all other character of commerce, to be exercised as follows:

"Whenever the commission or board vested with jurisdiction thereof shall have reason to believe that any person is violating or has violated any of the provisions of sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 of this act, it shall issue and serve upon such person a complaint stating its charges in that respect, and containing a notice of a hearing upon a day and at a place therein fixed at least 30 days after the service of said complaint. The person so complained of shall have the right to appear at the place and time so fixed and show cause why an order should not be entered by the commission or board requiring such person to cease and desist from the violation of the law so charged in said complaint. Any person may make application, and upon good cause shown may be allowed by the commission or board, to intervene and appear in said proceeding by counsel or in person. The testimony in any such proceeding shall be reduced to writing and filed in the office of the commission or board. If upon such a hearing the commission or board, as the case may be, shall be of the opinion that any of the provisions of said sections have been or are being violated, it shall make a report in writing, in which it shall state its findings as to the facts, and shall issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such violations, and divest itself of the stock held or rid itself of the directors chosen contrary to the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of this act, if any there be, in the manner and within the time fixed by said order. Until a transcript of the record in such hearing shall have been filed in a circuit court of appeals of the United States, as hereinafter provided, the commission or board may at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or any order made or issued by it under this section.

"If such person fails or neglects to obey such order of the commission or board while the same is in effect, the commission or board may apply to the circuit court of appeals of the United States, within any circuit where the violation complained of was or is being committed or where such person resides or carries on business, for the enforcement of its order, and shall certify and file with its application a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including all the testimony taken and the report and order of the commission or board. Upon such filing of the application and transcript the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such person and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the commission or board. The findings of the commission or board as to the facts, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the commission or board, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the commission or board and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The commission or board may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order, with the return of such additional evidence. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

"Any party required by such order of the commission or board to cease and desist from a violation charged may obtain a review of such order in said circuit court of appeals by filing in the court a written petition praying that the order of the commission or board be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the commission or board, and thereupon the commission or board forthwith shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record as hereinbefore provided. Upon the filing of the transcript the court shall have the same jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the commission or board as in the case of an application by the commission or board for the enforcement of its order, and the findings of the commission or board as to the facts, if supported by testimony, shall in like manner be conclusive.

"The jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals of the United States to enforce, set aside, or modify orders of the commission or board shall be exclusive.

"Such proceedings in the circuit court of appeals shall be given precedence over other cases pending therein, and shall be in every way expedited. No order of the commission or board or the judgment of the court to enforce the same shall in any wise relieve or absolve any person from any liability under the antitrust acts.

"Complaints, orders, and other processes of the commission or board under this section may be served by anyone duly authorized by the commission or board, either (a) by delivering a copy thereof to the persons to be served, or to a member of the partnership to be served, or to the president, secretary, or other executive officer or a director of the corporation to be served; or (b) by leaving a copy thereof at the principal office or place of business of such person; or (c) by registering and mailing a copy thereof addressed to such person at his principal office or place of business. The verified return by the person so serving said complaint, order, or other process setting forth the manner of said service shall be proof of the same, and the return post-office receipt for said complaint, order, or other process registered and mailed as aforesaid shall be proof of the service of the same."

And transpose the same to follow amendment 51.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 10. That after two years from the approval of this act no common carrier engaged in commerce shall have any dealings in securities, supplies or other articles of commerce, or shall make or have any contracts for construction or maintenance of any kind, to the amount of more than $50,000, in the aggregate, in any one year, with another corporation, firm, partnership, or association when the said common carrier shall have upon its board of directors or as its president, manager, or as its purchasing or selling officer, or agent in the particular transaction, any person who is at the same time a director, manager, or purchasing or selling officer of, or who has any substantial interest in, such other corporation, firm, partnership, or association, unless and except such purchases shall be made from, or such dealings shall be with, the bidder whose bid is the most favorable to such common carrier, to be ascertained by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by rule or otherwise by the Interstate Commerce Commission. No bid shall be received unless the name and address of the bidder or the names and addresses of the officers, directors, and general managers thereof, if the bidder be a corporation, or of the members, if it be a partnership or firm, be given with the bid.

"Any person who shall, directly or indirectly, do or attempt to do anything to prevent anyone from bidding or shall do any act to prevent free and fair competition among the bidders or those desiring to bid shall be punished as prescribed in this section in the case of an officer or director.

"Every such common carrier having any such transactions or making any such purchases shall within 30 days after making the same file with the Interstate Commerce Commission a full and detailed statement of the transaction showing the manner of the competitive bidding, who were the bidders, and the names and addresses of the directors and officers of the corporations and the members of the firm or partnership bidding; and whenever the said commission shall, after investigation or hearing, have reason to believe that the law has been violated in and about the said purchases or transactions it shall transmit all papers and documents and its own views or findings regarding the transaction to the Attorney General.

"If any common carrier shall violate this section he shall be fined not exceeding $25,000; and every such director, agent, manager, or officer thereof who shall have knowingly voted for or directed the act constituting such violation, or who shall have aided or abetted in such violation, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 or confined in jail not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court."

And transpose the same to follow line 23, page 13.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "11" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "12"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "12" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "13"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "13" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "14"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate number 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Reinsert the matter stricken out by said amendment and insert the word "penal" after the words "any of the" and before the word "provisions," in line 15, page 14; and omit the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "14" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "15" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "16"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "six, and seven," in said amendment insert "three, seven, and eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "16" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "17"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "17" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "18"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Reinsert the matter stricken out by said amendment, inserting the word "sixteen" in lieu of the word "fourteen," in line 5, page 18; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "18" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "19"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the comma after the word "employees," in line 18, page 18; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "19" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Reinsert the words stricken out by said amendment, and in lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", whether singly or in concert," and strike out the comma after the word "advising," in line 12, page 19; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add a comma after the word "information," at the end of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "20" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "21"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 86: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "21" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "22"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "22" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "23"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "23" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "24"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "twenty" inserted by said amendment insert the word "twenty-one"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figure "24" inserted by said amendment insert the figure "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change "Sec. 27" to "Sec. 26"; and the Senate agree to the same.

C. A. CULBERSON,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
W. E. CHILTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
J. C. FLOYD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator from Texas that the report be printed in the RECORD and treated as though it had been read. It would save time and would be just as effective.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Minnesota that the report has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator from Texas to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report.

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], a member of the committee and one of the conferees, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the conference report be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the reading is dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand the Senator from Texas suggested there is nothing further to come before the Senate this afternoon—no business pressing. I believe we ought to be able to stay here this afternoon and dispose of Senate bill 392. I move that the bill be taken up now for consideration.

Mr. NELSON. I would suggest to the Senator from Texas that he ask that the conference report be informally laid aside, so as to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a privileged question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is a privileged question. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 392.

Mr. CULBERSON. Until the unfinished business is disposed of the motion of the Senator from Michigan is out of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is in order at any time to move to take up a bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. The motion would displace the unfinshed business if adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that the conference report is a privileged matter at any time.

Mr. CULBERSON. The presentation of a conference report is privileged, but its consideration has to be passed upon by the Senate each time.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can bring the conference report before the Senate at any time he desires.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is now the unfinished business, and it has not been displaced. Of course, if the motion of the Senator from Michigan is adopted, it will displace the unfinished business, which is the conference report, unless the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course that is true as far as the unfinished business is concerned, if the bill the Senator from Michigan moves is not disposed of on this legislative day.

Mr. CULBERSON. So far as I am concerned, I can remedy the matter by asking unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TITLE TO HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 392.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to present a privileged question to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana will present it.

Mr. MYERS. I submit a conference report on House bill 11745, and ask that it be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11745) to provide for certificate of title to homestead entry by a female American citizen who has intermarried with an alien having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

H. L. MYERS,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
BURTON L. FRENCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MYERS. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a point of order. While it is a privileged matter to present the conference report it is not privileged to be considered at this time, and it can not take me from the floor, on the motion which I made, and I do not yield for that purpose. The conference report goes over under the rule.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Chair if action on the conference report is not privileged, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Montana to present a privileged report.

Mr. MYERS. I will say to the Senator from Michigan and others that there will be no debate on the adoption of the report, and it would have been adopted by this time if there had been no point raised. It will take but half a minute to dispose of it. I do not think anyone will vote against it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I can yield without yielding the floor, I will do so.

Mr. MYERS. I ask then for the use of the floor to make this motion with the consent of the Senator from Michigan without taking him from the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield for that purpose?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know exactly what the situation is. I yielded for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Montana to have the conference report adopted.

Mr. BORAH. I simply wanted to ask a question. I am not going to oppose the motion. I understood from the reading of the report that it is something in the nature of a homestead law.

Mr. MYERS. I will say to the Senator from Idaho, who is seeking information, that it is a conference report on House bill 11745, to provide for certificate of title to homestead entry by a female American citizen who has intermarried with an alien. The bill was amended in the Senate so as to read:

That any female citizen of the United States who has initiated a claim to a tract of public land under any of the laws applicable thereto, and who thereafter has complied with all of the conditions as to the acquisition of title to such land prescribed by the public-land laws of the United States, shall, notwithstanding her intermarriage with an alien, who is entitled to become a citizen of the United States, be entitled to a certificate or patent to such entry equally as though she had remained unmarried or had married an American citizen.

The amendment of the Senate is to insert, in line 8, after the word "alien":

who is entitled to become a citizen of the United States.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not for the purpose of making a motion to adjourn. I want a vote on the motion which I have submitted to the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we had better have a quorum here before we take up that motion. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Myers	Reed
Borah	Hughes	Nelson	Robinson
Bristow	Johnson	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Kern	O'Gorman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Lane	Overman	Sterling
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Page	Thompson
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Perkins	Thornton
Crawford	Lewis	Pittman	Townsend
Culberson	McCumber	Poindexter	Williams
Fletcher	McLean	Pomerene
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Ransdell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators only have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not a quorum having appeared, I think it is too late in the evening to take up an important bill. Therefore I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSEND. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). If my vote is necessary to make a quorum, I will vote "yea." Otherwise I will not vote.

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire again to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and asking that that announcement may stand for the day, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS (after having voted in the affirmative). Mr. President, I had just come into the Chamber, and thought the motion was to take up the bill, and I voted "yea." Understanding that it is a motion to adjourn, I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] by leave of the Senate, and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE];

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr JAMES].

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], but I understand that he would vote as I did, and therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. GORE. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bryan	Lane	Ransdell	Smith, Ga.
Culberson	Myers	Reed	Thornton
Gore	Overman	Robinson	White
Hughes	Pomerene	Shafroth	Williams

NAYS—22.

Bristow	Lea, Tenn.	Norris	Sterling
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Page	Thompson
Chilton	Lewis	Perkins	Townsend
Clapp	McCumber	Poindexter	Walsh
Johnson	McLean	Sheppard
Kern	Nelson	Smoot

NOT VOTING—58.

Ashurst	du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Fall	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Stephenson
Brady	Gallinger	Oliver	Stone
Brandegee	Goff	Owen	Sutherland
Burleigh	Gronna	Penrose	Swanson
Burton	Hitchcock	Pittman	Thomas
Camden	Hollis	Root	Tillman
Catron	James	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Sherman	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Kenyon	Shields	Weeks
Colt	La Follette	Shively	West
Crawford	Lippitt	Simmons	Works
Cummins	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary proceeded to call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I rise for an inquiry. There having been further business transacted since the partial call of the roll, is it not necessary to call the entire roll?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum voted, and the Secretary was simply directed to call the names of absentees.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My point is that it is necessary to call the entire roll now, there having been business transacted since the partial call of the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia desires the roll to be called in its entirety. In the absence of objection, that will be done.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What business intervened to which the Senator from Georgia alluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will pardon the Chair, the roll must be called; the Chair can not make any response to the inquiry while the roll is being called.

The roll call was concluded, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	McLean	Robinson
Borah	Hitchcock	Myers	Shafroth
Bristow	Johnson	Norris	Sheppard
Bryan	Jones	O'Gorman	Simmons
Chamberlain	Kern	Page	Smoot
Chilton	Lane	Perkins	Sterling
Clapp	Lea, Tenn.	Pittman	Thompson
Crawford	Lee, Md.	Poindexter	Thornton
Culberson	Lewis	Ransdell	Townsend
Fletcher	McCumber	Reed	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Forty Senators have answered to their names.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That motion is out of order; there is not a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JOHNSON. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). Again announcing my pair and its transfer to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bryan	Lee, Md.	Reed	Thornton
Culberson	Myers	Robinson	White
Fletcher	Overman	Shafroth
Gore	Pittman	Sheppard
Hughes	Ransdell	Simmons

NAYS—20.

Bristow	Johnson	Lewis	Poindexter
Chamberlain	Jones	McLean	Smoot
Chilton	Kern	Norris	Sterling
Clapp	Lane	Page	Thompson
Crawford	Lea, Tenn.	Perkins	Townsend

NOT VOTING—59.

Ashurst	Brandegee	Catron	Cummins
Bankhead	Burleigh	Clark, Wyo.	Dillingham
Borah	Burton	Clarke, Ark.	du Pont
Brady	Camden	Colt	Fall

Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Swanson
Goff	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Thomas
Gronna	Nelson	Shively	Tillman
Hitchcock	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.	Vardaman
Hollis	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.	Walsh
James	Oliver	Smith, Md.	Warren
Kenyon	Owen	Smith, Mich.	Weeks
La Follette	Penrose	Smith, S. C.	West
Lippitt	Pomerene	Stephenson	Williams
Lodge	Root	Stone	Works
McCumber	Saulsbury	Sutherland

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum having voted upon the last roll call or upon the one preceding, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bristow	Hitchcock	Norris	Shafroth
Bryan	Hughes	Overman	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Johnson	Page	Smoot
Chilton	Kern	Perkins	Thornton
Clapp	Lea, Tenn.	Pittman	Townsend
Crawford	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Walsh
Culberson	Lewis	Ransdell	White
Fletcher	Myers	Robinson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announces that the result of the roll call discloses the presence of 31 Senators.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. OVERMAN. In lieu of that motion, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn subsequent to the motion of the Senator from Michigan——

Mr. OVERMAN. As a substitute for that motion, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment taking precedence of the motion of the Senator from Michigan, the question is, Shall the Senate adjourn?

Mr. TOWNSEND. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as heretofore announced, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JOHNSON (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently, forgetting my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. Not having been able to obtain a transfer of pairs, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. Announcing my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. GORE. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bankhead	Hughes	Pomerene	Smith, Ariz.
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Thornton
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Vardaman
Fletcher	Myers	Shafroth	Walsh
Gore	Overman	Sheppard	White

Colt	Lippitt	Simmons	Weeks
Crawford	Lodge	Smith, Ga.	West
Cummins	McCumber	Smith, Md.	Works
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, September 28, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, September 26, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou to whom millions turn daily with faith, hope, and confidence, and are not disappointed, turn not Thou away from us, but satisfy, we beseech Thee, the longings, hopes, and aspirations of our souls with truth, justice, wisdom, mercy, that our work may bear abundant fruit acceptable unto Thee. In Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TERMS OF DISTRICT COURT—NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 18732 and concur in the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment is only a change in the spelling of one word.

Mr. MANN. It does not require unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent because we have not yet exhausted the rule under which the House has been operating. The Clerk will read the title to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 18732. An act to amend section 98 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill H. R. 13811, the rivers and harbors bill, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the rivers and harbors bill for present consideration of the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 13811. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida what would be his purpose in reference to time for debate and offering amendments, either to-day or later?

Mr. SPARKMAN. As far as I am concerned, I would agree to a reasonable time for debate. I understand that some Members would like to discuss the Senate amendment and perhaps other things not in but connected with the Senate amendment. As far as I am concerned, I expect to address the House briefly on that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Of course, if it came before the House in this way, the gentleman would have the power to move the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that I think this proposition ought to be acted upon before we adjourn. I can readily understand why Members on both sides of the House desire to debate it, and yet if we are going to accept the amendment in the end to make sufficient appropriation to take care of the present improvement, it is economy to act on it at as early a date as possible, because nonaction is tying up some Government work and costing a good deal of money. I suggest that the gentleman from Florida would be willing to go into Committee of the Whole on the amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I desire to say I had supposed that if there was to be any discussion it would be in Committee of the Whole, though that may not be necessary. Some members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee suggested that it go back to that committee, but I do not think any good can come of such a course. I should have no objection to its being discussed in Committee of the Whole, if we can agree upon the time for discussion.

Mr. MANN. It does not seem to me that it ought to be brought up to-day. Why not let it go to the committee and let the committee report it back, and then it would be in order to come up on Tuesday next, when all the Members of the House have had notice. There is not much difference in time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors whether this Senate amendment takes out of the bill the appropriation for the improvement of the Hudson and East Rivers in the city of New York?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It takes out of the bill all new projects, but it takes care of existing and continuing projects.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In other words, does the amendment have the effect of preventing the carrying out of the project to deepen the East River channel and the Hudson River channel?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Some of those are new projects and, of course, they are eliminated by this amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. So that the work can not be done. The gentleman from Florida, I presume, has read, if he has not received, the communication from the mayor of the city of New York in reference to these projects and the absolute necessity at the present time of making an appropriation for the East and Hudson Rivers.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; I have read the mayor's communication on that subject, and I understand the great importance of that particular work. But there are other works provided for in the bill as it left the House also of great impotrance, as far as navigation is concerned; but they were all eliminated, along with East River, in the Senate. I would like to see them all taken care of in this bill, and they ought to have been, but the Senate has cut them out, and the question now is whether we are going to get anything at all at this session of Congress for the purpose of carrying on river and harbor work that has already been begun. In my judgment, it is this bill or nothing.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I would like to ask the gentleman, who has had a large and varied experience in these matters and understands the conditions that attend us in New York, if he understands that if the appropriations are withheld at the present time for the improvement of the East River there will be not only grave danger of having some of the work that is now going on there removed, namely, the subway improvement, the tunnel, but also increasing at some future time the cost of doing that work?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am not responsible for that condition.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But is it not so?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; it will inconvenience the city of New York a good deal and delay an important work. They want to run a tunnel under Coenties Reef, and it is important the reef be first removed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. None of these projects are in the bill; they are all cut out.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I understand the Senate amendment cuts them out, and that is what I am discussing now. I want to know why they were cut out.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will have to pass that up to some one at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Florida if we can agree upon a time for debate, and if he will agree also that amendments may be offered? If so, how much time will he be willing to grant for debate?

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am willing to try to agree as to a reasonable time for debate. I understand, though, that a motion is always in order to concur with an amendment. I would be perfectly willing to try to agree to some time with the gentleman or with anyone else who wants to discuss it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Can we agree upon a time when we shall take it up?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that next Tuesday would be a suitable time. I myself have no objection to that date.

Mr. FREAR. In this division of time, is it all to be apportioned to those who are in favor of the bill, or on this occasion can others be heard? That was not the case when the bill was first discussed.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should suppose that within proper limitations anybody who wanted to talk could be heard.

Mr. FREAR. What will be the division of time?

Mr. MANN. The control of the time is by unanimous consent.

Mr. FREAR. I do not know who would have control of the time.

Mr. MANN. That would be arranged by unanimous consent. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. This being a Senate amendment to the river and harbor bill, and the river and harbor bill being a privileged bill reported to the House, if it should go now to the committee and be reported back from the committee would it not still retain its privilege to be called up at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would; yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to reserve the right to object. I want to ask the gentleman a question. What is the request now being made for unanimous consent?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The request was for unanimous consent to take up the river and harbor bill and concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BORLAND. At once; forthwith?

The SPEAKER. Substantially so.

Mr. MANN. The request submitted was to take up the river and harbor bill for the consideration of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair understands.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand the Senate amendments provide for an appropriation of $20,000,000, to be expended by the Engineers of the Army upon works which are now under construction. In the case of the Missouri or Mississippi Rivers, where a continuous project has been adopted by the committee, and a number of jobs are being carried on at different points, some of them by contractors and some of them by Government force work, does this bill contemplate that only existing jobs now let shall be continued, or that the program of work as outlined for next season shall also be continued?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Under the provisions of this bill the Secretary of War, with the assistance of the Chief of Engineers, is to distribute this $20,000,000 among the different projects that have been adopted and upon which work is now being prosecuted and not completed. Of course, the Chief of Engineers will have the matter in hand, and can expend it in any way he sees proper upon projects covered by its provisions.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to ask this question: On the Missouri River, which is a project adopted by the committee and by the engineers, there are now 13 different jobs being carried on between Kansas City and St. Louis. Seven of those——

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARLIN. Is it necessary to have unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and move to concur?

The SPEAKER. It undoubtedly is, when he have not got through with the rule yet.

Mr. MANN. It would be, anyhow.

The SPEAKER. Without deciding that question, it is necessary now.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that this discussion is not resulting in any good. Unanimous consent is not going to be given for the consideration of this matter. Why go on and consume time?

Mr. BORLAND. We do not know that unanimous consent will not be given.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that.

Mr. GARNER. I am sure it is not going to be given.

Mr. BORLAND. We do not know that at all. We think unanimous consent may be given.

Mr. GARNER. We know it will not be given.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman wants to object, that is the end of it.

Mr. GARNER. I have no desire to object, Mr. Speaker, but why throw away an hour in discussing a matter that is useless, when it is not going to be consented to?

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will bear with me about a minute——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has his remedy.

Mr. BORLAND. On the Missouri River there are 13 jobs on which work is being prosecuted under that project. Seven of them are under contract——

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the chairman of the committee if he has anything to do with the determination of the disposition of the appropriation, in view of the fact that it is all placed in the hands of the engineers, and the Secretary of War can grant anything? It is surely a waste of time.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri for a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida has yielded to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin later.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, if I may continue, I will call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this fact, that on one project, the Missouri River between Kansas City and St. Louis, there are 13 jobs now being carried on. 7 of them by contract work and 6 by force work. As I understand now from telegrams from the engineer, they will have to stop that work on the 1st day of October on all 13 of these separate jobs that are being carried on. Now, the contractors who have 7 of those jobs have their work laid out for next season. Is it intended that they shall go on under this bill with the preliminary work for the next season?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is all left to the engineer, or, rather, to the Secretary of War.

Mr. BORLAND. Is that possible under this Senate amendment?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, it is possible; yes.

Mr. LLOYD. In this Senate amendment the Mississippi River Commission is given control over the expenditures to the mouth of the Ohio. What is the effect of that amendment so far as the commission is concerned north of the mouth of the Ohio? As I understand it, the Mississippi River Commission now has authority to Rock Island. What will become of the work between Rock Island and the Ohio River?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think they can, under the Senate amendment, go above Cape Girardeau on the Mississippi River. As the bill left the House there was a provision in it that permitted this to be done, but I fear the amendment does not retain the provision. Still it is a matter of construction, and I may be wrong.

Mr. LLOYD. This goes only to the mouth of the Ohio. It does not go to Cape Girardeau.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There is no doubt that it goes to Cape Girardeau. That was fully discussed in the Senate, and attention was called to the verbiage in which the mouth of the Ohio River was mentioned, and there was no doubt but it included Cape Girardeau.

Mr. LLOYD. What will be the effect of the provisions for the upper Mississippi River? Those are continuing orders, are they not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No. As I said, I do not think any work can be done under the Senate provision in the matter of levee building above Cape Girardeau, yet I may be wrong as to that. It will depend upon the construction given to the river and harbor act of 1913.

Mr. LLOYD. What will be the effect of the improvement of the river under the 20-year contracts?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That will be under the jurisdiction of the engineers and the Secretary of War.

Mr. LLOYD. And may be provided for if the Secretary of War sees fit to do so?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. RAINEY rose.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, to demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia demands the regular order. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN]?

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] objects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the river and harbor bill, under the rule, be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair is going to do. It will be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin, after to-day's session, for 10 days, on account of sickness in his family.

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 630 (H. Rept. 1169).

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution further proceedings in the consideration of bills as provided for in House resolution 536, adopted August 14, 1914, shall terminate, and that H. R. 12741 shall be held and recognized to be privileged as are bills from standing committees of the House now privileged under the rules of the House: Provided, That there shall be not exceeding four hours general debate, to be equally divided between those who favor and those who oppose the same, one half of such time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. FOSTER, and the other half by the gentleman from Utah, Mr. HOWELL. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole, the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendations as the committee may make and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit. All debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for the termination of bills provided for in House resolution 536. The only bill that was left among the number mentioned in that resolution was the bill (H. R. 12741) providing for the treatment of radium-bearing ores, known generally as the radium bill. I was very anxious that that bill might be considered—in fact, I was in hopes that it might have been considered long ago and have become a law before this time; but conditions have arisen since this report was made whereby it is thought not best to press the bill for consideration at once. I have therefore asked that this rule be passed, providing that the bill may be made privileged, and at a future time in this Congress we may be enabled to call it up for consideration. I am frank to say to the House that I do not know, of course, whether this bill could be taken up during this Congress or not, but I feel that I would like to have the opportunity of doing so, if it is possible. I am anxious to pass it. I am a friend of the bill and do not want to see it defeated at this time, which might be the case, owing to the appropriation in the bill.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman know anything about the truth of the reports in the newspapers that this bill has already been delayed until all of the radium ores of any importance have been taken up?

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is probably not correct.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman says "probably not correct." Does the gentleman admit that there is a probability that it is correct?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, a good many of these claims have been taken, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and when this matter was first discussed in the newspapers and throughout the country there was a great rush to locate these claims, but it is claimed there is still plenty of them left. Those who oppose the bill say it is in abundance. At that time there was one firm in this country manufacturing radium; practically all of the product came from this one firm. They have located a large number of claims, and they have a lot of those claims now. I do not know whether we will be able to get sufficient ore or not, but I think that under this bill we will secure enough to get what the Government needs for its hospitals and some to spare. I will say this: That nearly all of the ore that has been taken out of the mines in Colorado and Utah has been shipped to Europe. A gentleman who came from Europe just before the war broke out informed me that while traveling through Europe he saw considerable quantities of American carnotite ore stacked up at chemical works ready to be reduced to secure radium for foreign hospitals. The Governments in some of those countries in Europe in which radium is located have already taken charge of radium-bearing ore in the several countries. They do not permit it to be mined outside of the Government, as their supply is not large, and so the Government controls it.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. If this is of such importance, as unquestionably it is, why has consideration been delayed and delayed in order to permit the consideration of bills of vastly less importance?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it is one of those legislation conditions which can not be avoided; many times very important bills can not be brought up for consideration.

Mr. COOPER. Why postpone it now? It ought not to be postponed one minute.

Mr. FOSTER. The only reason why I have asked this might be done at this particular time is that this provides for an authorization of an appropriation of $450,000; and with financial conditions as they are now I feared the bill might fail for that reason, and I want it to pass when it is considered, and would rather wait a little while than to have it fail now.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman think that an appropriation of only $450,000, when we are about to collect $100,000,000 of revenue by a new tax, should suffice to prevent consideration of a bill of such tremendous importance as is this bill for the conservation of radium-bearing ores in Government lands?

Mr. FOSTER. I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that the bill should become a law at the earliest opportunity; but in view of the existing conditions I think, and the committee thinks as well, that it is best to let it go for a more opportune time. I hope that in the near future we will be able to take it up and pass it. I do not feel now like asking Congress to make an appropriation of this amount, when we are levying a tax.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. FOSTER. I will. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I agree with my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] that it is not expedient or wise at this time to consider this bill with a view to its immediate passage. I think this is a time when we ought to exercise very strict economy, but I doubt the advisability at this time of making privileged a nonprivileged bill which can be called up at any time during the short session of Congress. We have been here in session now since a year ago last spring, in continuous session, and if we ever have any hope of being away from here next summer that hope must be based upon the passage of the appropriation bills at the short session of Congress next winter. Some of the appropriation bills this year were not passed until after July 1. Some of the appropriation bills last year were not passed until after July 1, but if we are away from here next summer it will be because all the appropriation bills have become laws on the 4th day of March next, at noon. For the House now to make a bill which is now nonprivileged privileged at the next session of Congress, to be called up at any time, may seriously interfere with the business of the House at the short session of Congress. I take it that the Democratic side of the House in control of the committees will be prepared as soon as Congress meets at the regular session in December to bring some of the appropriation bills to the House for consideration at once. I have no doubt that that is the intention, and I hope it will be the case. Now, it is proposed to insert here the privilege of calling up this bill at any time. Well, we had one bill made privileged at this session of Congress, to be called up at any time. That was the dam bill, I believe, which hung over the House for weeks and months. Nobody knew if it was going to be taken up; nobody knew how long it would consume if it was taken up. If the other side of the House, of course, want to take the responsibility of making unprivileged matters privileged, to take up the time at the next session of Congress, in advance now, they have the power to do so; but the wisdom of it, it seems to me, is to be greatly doubted. If the gentleman will permit, I will offer an amendment to the resolution, to strike out all of the resolution after the provision which rescinds the existing rule, and then if the Committee on Rules at the next session of Congress finds that there is time in the House, they have the same power to bring in a resolution making that bill privileged as they have now. But to start in now to make bills privileged at the next regular session of Congress seems to me unwise.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think it possible that there are a number of Members who may not understand precisely the situation in regard to this bill. Some time in June last the Committee on Rules reported a resolution for the consideration of five bills—that is, making those bills in order—and included in the resolution a provision that that order should be the continuing order until disposed of, making certain exceptions—for instance, appropriation bills, conference reports, bills affecting the bonded indebtedness, and revenue bills. That resolution was adopted, and one of the bills that was included was withdrawn by unanimous consent of the House. The other three bills have been considered and passed by the House, and now there is left the last bill, commonly known as the radium bill. Under that resolution, which has been adopted by the House, it is the order of business and will take precedence over anything except conference reports and bills affecting the bonded indebtedness and revenues of the country and appropriation bills. Now, it has been deemed wise by the author of the bill, the chairman of the committee which reported the bill, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], to withdraw it at this time, but he does desire to retain the privileged character of the bill in order that if the exigencies of the situation will permit him in the future to call it up, that it may have a status and privilege which is, in fact, a little bit lower than it has now. If the resolution now presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] shall not prevail, then the order of business is to take up the radium bill. It is not desired by the gentleman from Illinois or by his committee, or desired by the House at this time, I think, to take that bill up in preference. Now, that is a statement of the conditions actually existing in regard to this rule.

Of course, if it be adopted it will make the bill privileged, but that is all. At any time if the committee responsible for the bill should desire to call it up and the House should not desire to do so, it can vote down the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House upon it. It takes away from it the high privilege, which it has now of being a continuing order, and simply places it on the plane of a privileged bill. I thought it fair to make that statement in order that gentlemen might understand it fully.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. COOPER. May I have three or four minutes?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin four minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced on the 31st of last January. It was favorably reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining to the Committee of the Whole House on the 3d of February. A rule was introduced in June to take the bill up for consideration as the fourth of the Government land bills It is entitled—

> A bill to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes.

In its report of last February the Committee on Mines and Mining says:

> From the information brought before it, the committee is convinced of the great public need of the legislation herein proposed.
> At present, on account of the tremendous demand for the material abroad, there is no means of keeping radium ores or radium in America except by overbidding the excessive price now being offered for them in European markets; and this means that the people of this country must buy back from foreign countries at speculative and exorbitant prices the very radium which was their own and which their Government has allowed to become subject to foreign exploitation.

A moment ago, in reply to my question, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, said that the mining and treatment of radium-bearing ores and the production of radium was largely in the hands of a monopolistic combination. And so it is proposed to allow this business to be exploited by a private monopolistic combination and to make no effort to stop the exploitation, although, as the committee reports, it is of great importance that the United States should encourage and regulate the mining and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the Government in order to secure an adequate supply of radium for use in Government and other hospitals in the United States. In its report the committee further says:

> It has already been shown that foreign Governments and municipalities are prepared to pay prices for radium far in excess of the cost of production and manufacture, and they have already obtained more than half of the available ores produced in the United States. It was in France, Germany, and Austria that the value of radium was first appreciated. Here a demand for it was first established and processes for extracting it from these ores were developed. Meanwhile our own Government has been giving away its deposits of radium-bearing ores, which even though limited are the most extensive known, and allowing them to pass into the ownership of a foreign corporation, a few American companies acting as shipping agents for other foreign corporations, or to an American company which sells its radium largely to foreign purchasers. The high price of radium salts—by far the larger part of this price representing a profit to the manufacturer—is taking radium out of the country, and even if it stays in the country, the present price makes its use so expensive that the material can hardly be expected to be available to people of small means, except in so-called charity cases.
> Accordingly, it seems extremely important that the United States Government shall make such provision as may be necessary to obtain supplies of radium requisite to meet the more urgent needs of the American people.

Yet in the face of a report filed in this House last February and containing such statements the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks that practically nothing be done. Now, I desire to know the reason for this attitude of the gentleman from Tennessee, a member of the Committee on Rules. The report last February of the Committee on Mines and Mining asserts that this bill is of the utmost importance to the poor people of this country who are afflicted with certain diseases, and who can not buy radium because of its great price. That committee says that the Government of the United States ought to retain control of this inestimably valuable ore in its own lands in order to supply radium for use in Government hospitals, and yet the committee reporting all this last January and February has done nothing, and now proposes to do nothing, to pass the bill and prevent the further private monopolistic exploitation of this very valuable ore. I would like to know why. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I beg to say just a word in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin. I realize the great importance of legislation of this kind. But I want to say at the same time that this does not defer the consideration of this bill indefinitely. I assure the gentleman it is my intention to call up this bill just as soon as conditions are more favorable for appropriating this money, and I hope it may be taken up before this session closes. However, it was thought best that it should be deferred for the present.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman states the facts, but he does not give any reason at all for the action of the committee. Why can it not be taken up to-day, as the House supposed it would be taken up, in regular order after the other three Government land bills had been disposed of?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that I could convince the gentleman of a particular reason why it should be done any more than I have given as to the appropriation of $450,000 at this time. I think it ought to have been taken up a long time ago, but I know it is not always easy to do as we wish.

Mr. COOPER. What influence has prevented it? Has this private monopoly which has taken so much of these lands and is very much opposed to this bill had anything to do with the prevention of its consideration?

Mr. FOSTER. I would not say it has had anything to do with it.

Mr. COOPER. Of course the gentleman would not like to say it, but will he deny it?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I emphatically deny it.

Mr. COOPER. Does not the gentleman think this bill is of as pressing importance now to the people of the United States as is the Philippine resolution, which it is proposed shall take its place?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I think it is of great importance.

The gentleman can not say too much to me, so far as the importance of this legislation is concerned, but others may differ with me on that point on both sides of the House.

Mr. COOPER. The importance of the bill could not be more strongly stated, for the gentleman from Illinois is not only a Member of this House in exceedingly high standing on both sides of the aisle, but he is also a distinguished physician and an honor to his profession, and knows what the truth is concerning radium and this proposed legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. I thank you; and I regret conditions are not such that we can pass it now.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a suggestion, and I would like a couple of minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the criticisms of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] are made in the best of faith. I am sure he is not going to accuse the committee of having any evil intentions in not pushing this matter at this time.

I am a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, and we took up this matter for consideration last winter; I have forgotten the exact time, but I presume the time he gave is the correct date. It turned out that while we were considering this matter and taking testimony, having before us such physicians as Dr. Kelly, of Baltimore, and Dr. Abbott, of New York, eminent surgeons, who have had some experience in treating diseases with radium, especially cancer, the moment it was known that Congress had begun an investigation of the matter, a certain firm, with headquarters at Pittsburgh, having already sent their agents out through Colorado and Utah, wired them to locate all the claims possible.

Now, my understanding of the situation is—and we might as well face it—that before it was physically possible for this bill to be brought before the House, practically all of the radium-bearing ores had been located and filed on.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. HAMLIN. And it is just a case now of trying to lock the barn door after the horse is stolen.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield for just one question for information?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. How or under what law did that corporation called "foreign" by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], and stated by you to be established in Pittsburgh, locate these claims? And is it not time to stop any further acquisition of these valuable radium lands?

Mr. HAMLIN. Under the existing law, allowing people to locate mineral claims.

Of course, the purpose of this bill is to withdraw certain radium-bearing or carnotite-ore lands from the operation of the general law. But before it was possible for the House to consider this bill, according to the information I have, practically all of the radium-bearing or carnotite-bearing ores have already been located by private parties, and therefore I can not see that any great damage will now be done if we were to defer the consideration of this bill at this particular time.

Now, if we could have considered it four or five months ago, or six months ago, then perhaps it would have been a very good thing for us to have done so.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to an interruption?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman from Missouri think that the United States is still the owner of lands in which radium can be found?

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand that there are perhaps some ores that are yet available.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman think that these private prospectors do not know that?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am inclined to think they do know it.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman propose to delay the consideration of this bill and give them more opportunity to secure these lands?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think they have practically all the good radium-bearing lands already located and filed on.

Mr. COOPER. But the gentleman says that the Government still owns some that they have not got hold of?

Mr. HAMLIN. Naturally, I suppose there are some yet to be located.

Mr. COOPER. And yet it is still proposed to delay the passage of this bill, although they know the existence of these lands. The gentleman proposes, then, to give them more opportunity to get them?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think likely they now have all they want or all that they think valuable. I do not think any harm will come if we defer the consideration of the matter for a while longer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. FOSTER. No. I am going to move the previous question. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] moves the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks for a division. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Eighty-two gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifty-seven gentlemen have arisen in the negative. On this question the ayes are 82 and the noes are 57. The previous question is ordered. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] demands a division. Those in favor of the resolution will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Eighty-three gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifty-five gentlemen have arisen in the negative. On this question the ayes are 83 and the noes are 55.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-four gentlemen have risen in the affirmative—a sufficient number—and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the resolution embodying the rule will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 114, answered "present" 3, not voting 120, as follows:

On the vote:

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas (for rule) with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN (against).

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, and listening, when his name should have been called?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I was standing in the door of the cloakroom.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. May I vote "present"?

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman can not vote at all. The Chair can count the gentleman if necessary to make a quorum.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 606, a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 606 (H. Rept. 1170).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 18459, "A bill to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands." There shall be not exceeding eight hours of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and one-half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. At the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, and after being perfected the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendation as the committee may make; whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit. All members speaking upon the bill or amendments offered thereto shall have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD, and all members shall have the right to print remarks for not exceeding five legislative days: Provided, That all debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] if there is a desire for debate beyond the regular time?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, there is a desire for considerable time for discussion of the rule, more than I thought on yesterday. I have had requests for as much as an hour on this side of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, of course it will be impossible for me to control the time except by unanimous consent so as to allow an hour's debate on that side of the House. I am willing to enter into any reasonable agreement——

Mr. MANN. Under the circumstances I think we can agree, even that the previous question may be considered as ordered on the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think there will be no disposition to ask for a roll call on the previous question, and that the previous question may be considered as ordered at the conclusion of the debate upon the rule.

Mr. MANN. And that the gentleman have two hours' time, and give one-half of it to this side, and with the previous question ordered we will not have even the right to amend the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the rule may proceed for not exceeding two hours—one-half of the time to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]— and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that there shall be not to exceed two hours' debate on the resolution or rule—one half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the other half by himself—and that at the end of the debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman proceeds, although we have agreed to the previous question, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the rule provides that the general debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill. Of course I have no objection to the gentleman confining the debate, but we are getting to a point where a great many Members of the House, particularly on the other side of the aisle, wish to extend remarks for various purposes. We have had a great many such requests lately. I wonder if there is going to be any opportunity, beyond yesterday, when gentlemen will have the right to insert in the RECORD what I should denominate political speeches? Because, if no such order is to be extended generally, I want to say that I do not think permission will be granted in many special cases.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it was the idea of the Committee on Rules that debate upon this bill ought to be confined to the bill, and it was thought that those printing would recognize that idea. I think there was unanimous consent on the revenue bill that all Members should have permission to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I think there was for seven days, and that would cover this case. I have noticed that rules lately provide that instead of leaving it to the gentleman that has charge of the time to do what is the common practice, whether it is advisable or not, to yield a short time for some gentleman to ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD. Under this rule, if gentlemen were granted leave to extend they would not be permitted to insert anything except it had reference to the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Personally I think speeches on this proposition should be confined to the bill. I have no objection to entering into some sort of an agreement on some other matter whereby gentlemen can print in the RECORD political speeches, but I think the debate on this ought to be confined to the bill. I think we ought to adhere to the rule.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. ADAIR. Permission was given on the revenue bill for extending remarks in the RECORD. Does that apply to that particular bill or to subjects outside?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama to answer that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Leave to print under that rule is to be confined to the subject matter of the bill. I do not think it wise at this time to grant leave to print on all subjects. Any gentleman who desires leave to print and states upon what subject he desires to print has been treated very liberally on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, so far as the Committee on Rules is concerned, it has looked at the bills that it presented resolutions for the consideration of, and has not considered general political debate. The Committee on Rules has presented this rule with the provision that the debate shall be confined to the bill, and, so far as I am personally concerned, during the consideration of the bill I shall insist on the debate being confined to the bill. Upon the question of general political debate at some other time I will be glad to take it up.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman wish to ask a question about this particular matter?

Mr. FESS. I do.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. In reference to confining debate to this question. This has been a political question ever since 1900. Your platform has had something in it in reference to the Philippines every year. Suppose we want to refer to the attitude of both parties on the Philippine question; that does not pertain to this bill, and somebody might rise to a point of order. Who is going to decide whether you are debating the bill or not?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This says "the subject matter of the bill." I think that is pretty broad. I think that would let in, so far as my personal opinion is concerned, any legitimate discussion on the Philippine question.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman's idea is that it would exclude political speech on other subjects?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is my idea.

Mr. FESS. I would agree to that myself.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It would exclude, for instance, discussion on the currency and on the tariff, but I think it would permit a discussion of the Philippine question. By the way, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if this is coming out of my time?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I reckon I can stand it. Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for the consideration of House bill 18459. It conforms with the suggestion made from various quarters as to the amount of time desired for general debate; that is, eight hours. It does not interfere with conference reports or appropriation bills or with revenue bills or other bills privileged under the rules of the House. It is a very liberal rule. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the rule itself is liberal. It gives all the time for general debate that was suggested and it leaves opportunity for amending the bill. But it occurs to me that this is an inopportune time to take up and discuss any question that involves in the remotest degree our foreign relations or any question that could extend to our foreign relations.

I should like in the discussion of this bill to make some observations that I would not feel at perfect liberty to make at this time. I feel in regard to the Philippine Islands that, so far as this bill is concerned, it does enlarge in a proper way their local self-government, gives them an opportunity for the exercise of the schooling they have had and whatever they have learned upon the question of self-government, and they are apt in that school. But there are questions involved in the discussion of the Philippine question presented in this bill looking to the ultimate independence of the Philippine Islands that should be predicated upon treaties with foreign countries, questions of our foreign relations with other countries that, in my judgment, ought not to be discussed at this time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I see no immediate necessity for the adoption of this rule and for taking up this bill for consideration now. I do not believe that this bill can become a law before the adjournment of the Sixty-third Congress. Even if that were possible before the 4th of March next, I think it would be wise for the country and for Congress to delay to as late an hour as possible the consideration of the questions involved in this bill. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the minority of the Committee on Insular Affairs are entirely satisfied with the nature and character of the rule, but they do protest most vigorously against the consideration of this legislation at this time. We are nearing, we hope, the close of this present session of Congress. It is a singular fact that this bill is called up for consideration at this time. There is not a Member of the House, I presume, who is not surprised that the bill is called up. There must have been some reason which Members generally do not understand why at this particular time this bill is called up for consideration under a special rule. Most of the Members of Congress are tired. They are anxious to get away. They have had their minds engrossed with other measures. It is impossible that the bill shall now receive consideration from the membership of this House. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLINE). The House will be in order. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, those gentlemen in the back part of the House do not comply with the request of the Speaker for order, and I insist that order shall be obtained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. Gentlemen in the back part of the Chamber will be in order. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible—the condition of this House to-day shows that it is impossible—for this House to give consideration to this bill. There are only a handful of people here now when it is called up. The very fact that it is called up empties the House, and the few gentlemen who are present will not give consideration to it. It is impossible for the Chair to require them to listen or give any consideration to the measure. That is the condition under which the bill is called up before the House. None of the Members are asking for the consideration of this bill. There is no demand from the country at large that this bill should be considered.

When it has been suggested within the last few days that this bill was to be pressed for consideration by this Congress, the press with almost absolute unanimity all over the land deprecated the fact. There is no reason why we should consider it at this time; there is no demand on the part of the people for consideration of the measure now. Mr. Speaker, that is not all; if it shall be considered that this action is taken for the reason that the Filipino people are demanding the passage of the bill, then upon that proposition I venture to state that the Filipino people do not desire the passage of this bill. I know how assiduously gentlemen have sought to create the impression that the Filipino people were in favor of the passage of the bill; but the fact, I think, is otherwise. A slight consideration of the bill is sufficient to show that the Filipino people can not be satisfied with the bill. The Filipino people are demanding independence, so these gentlemen all tell us, and they are demanding immediate independence, so we are told. This bill does not give them immediate independence, and it does not give them independence at any time, unless certain undefined requirements shall be complied with in the estimation of some future administrations or Congresses that may be called upon to pass upon their qualifications. So it can not satisfy them. As a matter of fact, we know that meeting after meeting in the Philippine Islands, attended by thousands of Filipinos, have protested against this bill as a violation of the pledges of the Democratic Party to the Filipino people in not giving them, if not immediate independence, at least a definitely stated time when independence would be granted. It does not comply in any sense with the demand of the Filipino people for independence, absolute or qualified.

It is, of course, understood that this bill is, first of all, a political measure. It is intended not for the relief and benefit of the Filipinos, but for the relief and benefit of the Democratic Party in the United States. The minority members of the committee desired to formulate this bill, as it ought to be formulated, in an entirely nonpartisan spirit and upon the merits of the case. There is no doubt but that it would be for the benefit of the Filipino people if certain changes in existing laws could be made, and we would have been glad to take up and consider such measure or measures as would really have been for the benefit of the Filipino people. But that was impossible because of the fact that it was necessary, as the majority of the committee determined, to reaffirm the Baltimore platform and place that in the bill as an integral part of it.

Prior to the formation of this bill the committee was engaged in the formation of a bill for the government of the island of Porto Rico. That island, as should these islands, ought to have a change in its existing form of government. It has outgrown its old clothes and ought to have a new suit. So the committee took up that proposition. We were urged to do so by the Governor of Porto Rico, who said it was necessary for the benefit of their people and essential to their prosperity that we should immediately consider and pass a law of that kind. Therefore the committee went to work and formulated a bill. There was no difficulty about it. A subcommittee was appointed, consisting of the chairman, the ranking member on the Democratic side, and myself, and we formulated a bill for Porto Rico without the slightest difficulty. That bill was reported to the full committee and by that committee reported to this House, and it has been upon the calendar for months, but nothing more has been accomplished. That was long prior to taking up this Philippine question at all. I know, because the chairman has so told me, that he has done everything that he could to get the consent of the leaders of this House that the Porto Rico bill should be considered. But, no, there was no political advantage, real or imagined, that could result from the passage of that bill. No consideration could be obtained for it, and that bill, reported months before, on the calendar now, lies slumbering there, and will remain without action during the remainder of the session.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Do you consider that a political platform has any binding force and effect on the members of that committee?

Mr. TOWNER. I do, and so does my party; but you do not, and neither does your party. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I do not yield any further. Mr. Speaker, it is unwise to discuss at this time the Philippine question. There is no more vexed question that can arise affecting the international interests of the United States. There is no question more delicate or more important than the question of whether or not the United States is to hold or desires to hold the Philippine Islands, or as to what effect the holding of the Philippine Islands will have upon the international problems of the Far East. There is no question whatever that a discussion of these matters at this time is unwise, and certainly ought not to be indulged in. We have been told by the President, and it has been echoed by everyone of his supporters who has spoken upon the subject, that we should exercise the utmost caution in these perilous times regarding questions that may affect our foreign relations, and since this bill has been presented to this House questions have arisen in the Far East vitally affecting American interests and vitally affecting our relations to the Philippine Islands, and through them to every nation that has any interest in the Orient.

It would be unwise now for us to take up and discuss frankly, as we ought to be allowed to do, these questions. With this view I introduced a resolution before the committee, which is as follows:

Whereas since the introduction of the Jones bill (H. R. 17856), and since the commencement of its consideration by this committee, a European war of unprecedented magnitude, involving all the great powers of Europe, has begun; and

Whereas the developments of the last few days have shown that Japan will become involved in the conflict, and that active war will soon be in progress in the Far East; and

Whereas the location of the Philippines within the active area of these operations will make any action by this committee or Congress touching the future of the Philippines inexpedient and unwise so long as these conditions exist: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That further consideration and final action by the committee on said bill be postponed until the next session of this Congress, which will commence December next.

In my judgment it would have been the part of wisdom to have passed that resolution. In my judgment it would be the part of wisdom to do so now. The resolution was voted down in the committee by a strictly party vote. Since then the scope of war in the Far East has been greatly enlarged. England has come actively to the aid of Japan in the taking of Kiaochow. The allies have taken possession of practically all the islands that were controlled by Germany in the Pacific. There has been already considerable change of the geography in the Far East as the result of this war. If Germany shall succeed in this conflict, what will be the consequences? You know very well the field of operation will be transferred from Europe and the Atlantic to the Far East and the Pacific. It will be at least an active war between Germany and Japan. If it shall be considered from our attitude and action that the Philippine Islands are of no consequence and value to the United States, that she has no particular interest in keeping them; if it shall be determined by the warring powers that the United States has so little interest in the Philippines, that it would not make any very serious protest as to what becomes of the Philippine Islands; then they may readily fall a prey to the first power that thinks it of advantage to take them. They would probably become the scene of warlike operations and be overrun with contending armies. It is not difficult to imagine what that would mean to the Philippines. But what would it mean to the United States? It would certainly mean war with the first nation or nations that set foot on the Philippine Islands, or in any way violated their neutrality as a part of the United States. Doubtless there are many Americans who have very little interest in the Philippines; but there is not one man even on the Democratic side of this House who would allow any nation on earth to take from this country by force and without its consent one single foot of American soil. [Applause.] So that it is unwise in the extreme to go into a question of that kind at this time. But our friends suggest that we ought to take up this matter for the reason that the Philippine Islands are now in a condition really of distress. They are suffering from the result of the European war, as well as the United States and other nations. The majority of the committee say:

The enactment of such legislation at this time is not only warranted upon general grounds, as has hereinbefore been set forth, but owing to greatly disturbed international conditions at the present time has become quite imperative. Under existing law, the Philippine government has no power to enact tariff legislation or to raise the rate of income taxation or to issue bonds. These powers reside only in the Congress of the United States. A large part of the insular revenues has heretofore consisted of tariff receipts. These have been greatly reduced in consequence of the prevailing war conditions in Europe. There is a condition of free trade between the United States and the Philippines, and the fact that a number of the countries with which a large part of Philippine trade and commerce are carried on are now at war necessarily reduces to a minimum the income derived from customs duties.

While it is true that the foreign trade of the Philippines for the first half of the present year shows a gratifying increase as compared with the corresponding period a year ago, and while it might be reasonably expected that this advance in prosperity under normal conditions would continue, the development of a European crisis which seriously affects the trade and commerce of the Philippines with the belligerent nations of Europe has seriously reduced the yield of customs duties. Under these conditions, and with the provisions of the existing law such as to compel the insular government to look to congressional action, it is obvious that some means of relief must be devised by Congress, or else that the government of the islands must be vested with the full power necessary to enable it to meet the serious situation now confronting it.

Then the committee goes on to say:

This committee is of the opinion that the Legislature of the Philippine Islands will be more fully able, if empowered to do so, to provide a remedy than is Congress.

It will be observed, gentlemen, that Congress has the power now at this time as an emergency measure to change the law either with regard to tariff legislation or to raise the rate of income-tax legislation or to issue bonds. We could do any of those things now at this time and pass them as an emergency measure. We know that it will be practically impossible to get this bill through this Congress at all. This bill will not receive any consideration when it goes to the other House during this session, and it is not expected it will——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. I will ask for a little more time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, in absence of the chairman, I will yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman is extended five minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. There is no question that this Congress will not pass this bill during this session of Congress. It is exceedingly unlikely, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has said, that it will receive consideration or be passed during the winter session by the Senate, but even if it should be passed at this time, even if it should be passed immediately as an emergency measure, what will be the consequences then? The gentlemen of the majority say it will be better if they allow the Philippine Legislature to meet this emergency, but the Philippine Legislature will not be voted for or even elected until next June, and the Philippine Legislature will not go into session at all until next October. More than a year will elapse before anything can be done in this emergency to help the Filipino people by passing this bill. It is not expected that this bill will help the Filipino people in this emergency. I think I am justified in saying that that is a mere pretense, because it can not help them, and these gentlemen must know that it can not help them. Members on this side will be ready and glad to do, as they have always done, anything really in the interest of the Filipino people. It is not likely that any benefit could come to the Filipino people from raising their tariff rates.

It is not likely either that any benefit could come to them from a system of income tax or the passage of another war-tax bill. That would not help the Filipino people, because they can not stand that character of taxation. There is but one measure of practical relief that can help the people of the Philippines at this time, and that is to enlarge the limit of their indebtedness. I introduced a bill in Congress, and it is now pending, to increase the limit of their indebtedness from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000. The limit now under the present law for the issuance of bonds by the Philippine people is $5,000,000, a small amount for such a country as that, and they have exercised their privilege up to the limit. They ought to have the privilege of issuing bonds to tide them over this emergency. That is what they desire and that is what will help them. Such a law can be passed as an emergency measure, and would be unopposed. Such a bill will go to the Senate and be considered there as an emergency measure, and passed in 15 minutes' time. Such a bill can become a law quickly and render quick assistance. This Democratic political measure can not be considered by the Senate at this session, and will probably never become a law. It will be of no benefit to the Philippine people, and I doubt whether it will be of benefit even as a political measure, if the people understand it. And so for that reason——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. TOWNER. And for that reason I say this bill ought not to be considered and ought not to pass at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee has used 8 minutes and the other side has used 31 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], the ranking member of the minority of the Committee on Insular Affairs, has very earnestly and eloquently appealed to the House to postpone consideration of this Philippine bill and has advanced a number of reasons, or alleged reasons, why this course should be taken. He will be candid enough to admit, I know, that he would be just as much opposed to the bill if it were called up in the next session of this Congress or in any subsequent Congress as he is to its consideration at this time. He characterizes the statements in the report of the committee with reference to the urgency for the passage of this legislation as mere pretenses. Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand the views of the minority written by the gentleman himself and from these views I find that he is upon record as declaring that there is great need just now for legislation that will immediately and materially benefit the Filipinos. The gentleman therefore admits that there is urgent need for some legislation which will give present relief to the financial and business situation in the Philippines. I hold that the legislation proposed in this bill will supply that which the minority admit to be necessary, and that it will do so speedily; that it will enable the Philippine government to deal with the unfortunate conditions with which it is admittedly confronted. The revenues of the Philippines consist largely of customs receipts, and the same causes which have so disastrously affected the customs receipts of the United States have affected even to a larger degree proportionately those of the Philippine Islands. It is therefore absolutely necessary, Mr. Speaker, that something shall be done for the relief of the Filipino people. The Congress of the United States must either lend them out of hand a sum of money sufficient to meet their needs or it must inaugurate and pass for them the necessary remedial legislation or else confer upon them, what they do not now possess, the power and authority to legislate for themselves. This bill proposes to give them this power. As is stated in the report of the committee, the Philippine government, under existing law, can not change the tariff laws that obtain in the islands, can not pass an income-tax measure and can not borrow a dollar of money. Its hands are completely tied, and Congress must do one or the other of the things which I have specified or else permit that government to starve. It must either untie the hands of the Filipinos and permit them to legislate for themselves, as this bill proposes, or it must loan them the money out of the United States Treasury or else legislate here and now for them.

The gentleman from Iowa—and I desire to call his particular attention to this—has stated in his report and has reiterated that statement to-day upon this floor that the claim that this bill will enable the Filipino government to deal with the emergency which confronts it, to use his own language, is a mere pretense, for the reason, as he alleges, that the legislature elected under its provisions will not be elected until June of next year and will not convene until the following October. The gentleman surely has not read the bill that he thus undertakes to criticize, for I would not charge him with willfully and deliberately misrepresenting the facts. Mr. Speaker, this bill contains this language in its twelfth section, and I read from the bill itself:

All local legislative powers in the Philippines, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be vested in a legislature which shall consist of two houses—

And so forth. Then follows this important proviso, which, strange to say, must have escaped the attention of the gentleman from Iowa:

Provided, That until the Philippine Legislature, as herein provided, shall have been organized, the existing Philippine Legislature shall have all legislative authority herein granted to the government of the Philippine Islands—

And so forth. So that it thus clearly appears that the present legislature, which convenes on the 16th day of next month, 20 days from now, is empowered under this bill to enact legislation to meet the emergency which it is admitted exists, and that if it is enacted into law the Philippine government will not have to delay the passage of sorely needed remedial legislation until the legislature provided for in it convenes a year from next October.

I think the gentleman from Iowa, in all fairness and in justice to himself and to his colleagues, will now admit that his argument, which I have thus shown is founded upon alleged facts which do not exist, must fall to the ground. I think the gentleman will admit that this bill clearly provides that until the new legislature is elected and organized the present legislature is empowered to do any and all the things that I have stated it may do, and which are essential for the relief of the Filipino people. So much for this strenuously presented argument.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman also said there was no demand anywhere for this legislation. I have shown, I think, that there is an urgent need for it. I have shown from the report of the minority itself that it is there admitted that there is urgent need for it. I have shown, too, that there is nothing in the contention that it can not be afforded under this bill. The gentleman from Iowa also said that the Filipinos themselves are not asking for this bill, but, on the contrary, are demanding an immediate independence measure. The gentleman is absolutely mistaken and woefully misinformed if he believes any such thing as that. I have received copies of as many as 100 resolutions adopted in the various municipalities and Provinces of the Philippine Islands urging the passage of this identical bill. The sentiment in the Philippines in favor of its passage is well-nigh universal.

I hold in my hand a copy of a cablegram which I will read. It has been urged in some quarters that there were religious organizations opposed to the passage of this bill. This is the cablegram:

The Philippine clergy, which does not concern itself in local and transitory political contests, but is interested only in the stability of public institutions, favors urgent approval of the Jones bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman favor the House with a quotation of the complete cablegram that was sent at that time?

Mr. JONES. I have read the complete cablegram as it was given to me. If it contained another word, I have never heard of it. I have seen what purported to be an exact copy of this cablegram; in fact, the cablegram as delivered by the telegraph company.

Mr. MILLER. I assure the gentleman that that is only one paragraph, and an entirely misleading one.

Mr. JONES. This is the cablegram as it was delivered to me.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I will be glad to have the representative of the islands [Mr. QUEZON] make a statement as to this cablegram.

Mr. QUEZON. I received that cablegram myself, Mr. Speaker, and that is the only thing that there was in the cablegram.

Mr. MILLER. If I may be allowed——

Mr. JONES. Do you wish to ask a question?

Mr. MILLER. I would like to add just a sentence in connection with what the gentleman has said.

Mr. JONES. I do not care to have the gentleman make a statement in my time.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman has full time. It would seem, unless I made an explanatory statement, that I had accused the gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON] with not having given the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] the complete cablegram, and therefore I would like to make a statement.

Mr. JONES. Not in my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] also says there is no demand anywhere for this legislation. I know, on the contrary, that the Filipinos of the civilized and Christianized Provinces of the islands, who constitute nine-tenths of the inhabitants of those islands, have expressed, through resolutions adopted in the municipalities and throughout the Provinces, their earnest approval of this bill, and that they ask for its passage. I am aware, too, Mr. Speaker, that a small party or a clique recently sprung into existence in the Philippines has held a meeting in Manila or somewhere else and has declared that this bill did not meet its approval because its members desired immediate independence. But I am prepared to say, because the information comes to me from leading Filipinos resident in the islands, including the distinguished speaker of the Philippine Assembly, that the people who attended this meeting do not represent in any sense the Filipino people, and I have received a stack of cablegrams from all over the islands repudiating the action of these demagogues who seek to make political capital for themselves out of the fact that the bill does not grant the Filipino people that immediate independence desired by them as a whole. So, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is absolutely mistaken when he says that the sentiment of the Filipino people is not in favor of the passage of this bill. Not only are the Filipinos in favor of it, but the business element, as represented by Americans and other foreign residents of the Philippine Islands, are anxious for its immediate passage.

The gentleman also said that a number of newspapers in the United States have expressed opposition to its passage at this time. I do not doubt this, but those papers would doubtless oppose its passage at any time. I would ask the gentleman if he has read the letters written by Mr. Fairchilds, published in the New York newspapers, the Journal of Commerce for one, in reply to the newspaper comments to which he has referred? This gentleman represents one of the largest, if not the largest, foreign interest in the Philippine Islands—a corporation that has invested $4,000,000 of its money there and is desirous of investing much more as soon as it knows definitely what the disposition of the American Congress is in respect to the future political status of those islands. He has replied to these editorials, and he is not a Democrat, either. He is a business man, residing in the Philippine Islands, and he says that, so far from this being an inopportune moment for declaring the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political existence of those islands, such a course is imperatively demanded.

And that is the opinion and the wish of the business men of the Philippine Islands, of the clergy of the islands, and of the masses of the Filipino people. The foreign-complications bogy which the gentleman has now conjured up to frighten Congress and prevent its doing its plain duty did not exist when the opposition of the gentleman from Iowa to the consideration of this bill was first made manifest. He has always opposed its consideration, and because it contains a declaration as to the future political status of the Filipino people. The gentleman has said here to-day and upon other occasions as well that a measure which contained no promise of future independence could easily be agreed upon.

The gentleman says that the Democratic Party does not regard its party pledges as does the Republican Party, and he would like to substantiate and to prove this baseless aspersion upon the Democratic membership of this House by frightening them into repudiating a solemn pledge of their party. In one breath he denounces this as a partisan measure, which for that reason should be abandoned, and in the next he undertakes to chide Democrats for not living up to their party pledges.

I say that if the Democrats of this House were to listen to this sort of talk from the gentleman from Iowa they would justify his unjustifiable and—I say it in no unfriendly spirit—his untruthful statement that the Democratic Party does not live up to its pledges. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Nothing could prove that more to the satisfaction of the gentleman, and nothing could prove it more to the shame of the Democratic Party, than for it to refuse to consider a measure upon the ground that it sought to carry into effect a pledge contained in the Democratic national platform.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman says this bill is a partisan measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] says that this is a partisan measure; that the Republicans would have been willing to have considered it from a nonpartisan standpoint; that it is a bill brought in here in obedience to the dictates of the national platform of the Democratic Party, and therefore is a purely political measure; and he seeks to win Democratic votes for its defeat by saying the Democratic Party does not live up to its party pledges.

Such an appeal as that may have its effect with the minority, but I can assure my friend that it will have no weight with Democrats.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman admits in his minority report that this is a conservative bill. He says that he approves of many of its provisions, whilst he disapproves of others. But the report which he wrote does not give the House one particle of information by which it can be enlightened, since he neglects wholly to mention a single feature which he approves and fails to indicate one which he disapproves. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, in the temporary absence of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] he asked me to control the time on this side. I wish to be notified at the end of 10 minutes, if I consume that much time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, there is one marked contrast between this rule and the rule that the House adopted on the day before yesterday. This rule, so far as the rule itself is concerned, is one that no one can take any exception to. It provides for eight hours' general debate, debate under the five-minute rule, and unlimited right of amendment.

That is upon a bill of comparatively little importance to the American people, while upon the bill which was passed yesterday, imposing a tax of $105,000,000, affecting all of the people of the United States, they permitted seven hours of general debate, with no right of amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this rule, not because I am against the bill—I have not examined it sufficiently to come to any conclusion upon that point—but I do think it is an inexpedient time to discuss or consider legislation of this character, and there is not a man upon that side of the aisle who does not know that this bill will not become a law, if it is passed by this House, during this session of Congress. And permit me to say that it is my judgment that this bill is not presented at this time with any idea of its becoming a law, but there is another purpose in the presentation of it just now. It has been generally understood—understood in the Committee on Rules—that in what were supposed to be the closing days of this session emergency legislation, as determined by the administration, should have the right of way, and it was expected that all that character of legislation would be considered before this Philippine bill would be presented at all. Now, I am violating no confidence in saying that the Committee on Rules has acted upon another rule, and it is expected that it will be presented immediately following the passage of this bill, and that rule makes privileged and brings up for consideration what is known as the ship-purchase bill, a bill providing for the sale of bonds to the extent of $30,000,000 and appropriating out of the Treasury $10,000,000. Now, why was not that legislation brought on immediately following the war-tax bill? There is a very good reason for it, Mr. Speaker. It would have been embarrassing, indeed, to gentlemen on the other side, after passing the war-tax bill upon the claim of the President of the United States that we could not sell bonds for the purpose of taking care of the Treasury because it would disturb the money market, to bring on, immediately after the roll had been called and that bill had been gotten out of the way, the ship-purchase bill, providing for the sale of $30,000,000 of bonds to buy ships. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that the rule for the Philippine bill was reported out before the report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on the shipping bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; and the gentleman also knows that that rule was also reported out before the rule was reported out on the war-tax bill; yet the war-tax bill came in ahead.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the rule give precedence to this bill over private claims, or over Calendar Wednesday, or District business?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; it simply makes the bill privileged.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not seeking to bring the matter to a hasty conclusion at all?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is very apropos of the remark which the gentleman has just made that this rule was reported out before the revenue bill was reported out. The revenue bill was a highly privileged bill under the rules of the House.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; and they did not need to have a rule from the committee at all for the consideration of the revenue bill; yet they came to our committee and got the rule.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of it is clear. This is a long bill. There will be a long debate upon it. It is expected that the consideration of this bill will occupy one or two weeks' time, and it is hoped that the American people, with that length of time intervening between the war-tax bill and the ship-purchase bill, will forget to connect up the two very closely. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. The only days on which this bill can be properly considered under the rules, and under the terms of this special rule, will be on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays of each week, will they not?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that connection, I assume that it will not be considered on those days ahead of the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Or of the conference report on the anti-trust bill?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not.

Mr. STAFFORD. So this bill is likely to be before us for two or three weeks, or perhaps until after the election.

Mr. LENROOT. It is plain to be seen that gentlemen hope it will relieve them of a good deal of embarrassment when the ship-purchase bill does come up, although I have been given to understand that the administration regards the ship-purchase bill as an emergency measure, and I have heard no information that the administration regards the Philippine bill as an emergency measure.

One other consideration: It was generally understood up to three or four days ago that when what was called emergency legislation had been passed through the House—the war-tax bill and the ship-purchase bill—there would be a speedy adjournment or, if not an adjournment, that the House would practically cease its labors and take recesses of three days at a time. The newspapers of yesterday stated—and I have no reason to doubt their correctness—that within the last 72 hours a new program has been promulgated by the administration, a program that will call for a continuous session of this body from now until December, and the bills that are proposed to be put through are stated in that program, among them a bill affecting revenue cutters, which I suppose is to be regarded as an emergency bill, two or three other bills, and it is also stated that the Democrats will make a determined effort to secure the passage of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] for the loan of Government funds to cotton planters in the South. When this program shall be entirely unfolded, and when we realize all that the program means, I wonder if it will finally develop that the real purpose of this war-tax bill, taxing the people $105,000,000, in addition to taking care of the national banks of this country, was to provide funds for the cotton planters of the South?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman appears to have no sympathy whatever for the cotton planters of the South. That is very manifest from his remarks.

Mr. LENROOT. I have sympathy for the cotton planters of the South.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman shows it by the insinuation he has just made.

Mr. LENROOT. But I do not think the cotton planters of the South have any more right to come and make a demand upon the Federal Government than the corn planters of the country had some years ago, when they could get practically nothing for their corn during a certain memorable administration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Does the gentleman have any more sympathy for the cotton planters of the South than he has for the taxpayers of the entire country?

Mr. LENROOT. No; not a bit. But there is another reason——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's 10 minutes have expired.

Mr. LENROOT. I will take five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. For a question.

Mr. DECKER. Can the gentleman look me in the face and say that he thinks that the Democratic Party expects to pass the Henry bill?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I would not say that. I am stating what the effort would be on the part of a very considerable part of the Democratic majority.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is an additional reason for this new program for keeping Congress here constantly in session, and I want to commend our Democratic friends for showing most excellent judgment in the preparation of this new program. A few years ago, Mr. Speaker, there was a song which was very popular, and its title was, "I Am Afraid to Go Home in the Dark." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I am inclined to think that every Democrat who voted for that bill yesterday and the infamous rule of the day before can well say "I am afraid to go home at all." You are much safer here than you are at home after that performance. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Indeed, I doubt if there is a Democrat who voted for that bill who is not ashamed to face his constituents from any platform in this campaign. [Applause on the Republican side.] But with that excellent judgment that they have displayed in this new program, and knowing the straits that they are in, I, out of abundance of charity, hope that they may profit by it. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back three minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON].

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, if before listening to the remarks made upon this floor this afternoon I had not already believed that the passage of the Philippine bill is a matter of paramount importance to us, I should now be convinced that it is. Each of those who have spoken, in comparing this bill with others now on the calendar, says that it is of no importance. This bill proposes, Mr. Speaker, among other things, to give to the people of the Philippine Islands the means by which they can meet the difficulties that have arisen on account of the war, yet Members assert that it should be put aside and given no consideration whatever. It is true that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] has said that the Congress can pass for the Philippine government such measures as will relieve that government of the embarrassment in which it finds itself as a result of the war. But would Congress do it? If, as stated by some gentlemen, matters affecting the Philippines are of no importance or at least of less importance to the American people than the radium bill, for instance, how can we confidently expect that the Congress will enact such emergency measures as are needed should this rule be defeated?

As the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs said, we have found ourselves, since the war broke out, without the means of supporting the government of the Philippine Islands. You will therefore either have to give us the funds we need or grant us the power by which we can raise those funds.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am ready to take such funds as may be generously given to us by the American people through Congress, but if you should ask me which I prefer—the power of imposing upon my own people new taxes to enable them to meet the present emergency or a present from the American people—I should say I would rather have the power to impose the taxes upon my own people than to receive such a present.

Any people not ready to take care of themselves, to assume the burden of government, are not entitled to be free. [Applause.] And it is because we want to be free that we prefer to assume the burdens of new taxes rather than to receive presents from the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUEZON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. I judge, then, and I hope that I am correct, that the gentleman would be strictly in favor of the passage of my bill, which extends the limit of indebtedness from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000.

Mr. QUEZON. Certainly; but I should prefer to have the Philippine bill adopted, because it gives us the means necessary to meet the emergency. Suppose we are granted by Congress only the power to increase our bonded indebtedness. The government of Porto Rico is trying to sell its bonds, and can not dispose of them. We may be able to sell our bonds, but I am afraid we shall be in a position similar to that of the people of Porto Rico, and that we shall not be able to sell the bonds. If we do not sell the bonds, what are we to do? This bill not only permits the Philippine people to increase their indebtedness but gives them the power by which they can amend the revenue laws of the Philippine Islands; and so I say that this bill is a better means of meeting the emergency than the one proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are other reasons why this bill should be considered. The American people have been in the Philippine Islands since 1898. In 1902 the Congress of the United States enacted a law entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the government of the Philippine Islands." The title of the act itself shows that the government created by that act was to be of a temporary character. Everybody understands why at that time the Congress of the United States was not in position to enact a bill that would create a stable government in the Philippine Islands.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from the Philippine Islands has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. QUEZON. You had been in the islands only a very short time. You did not know the condition of the country, and, not knowing the facts, you could not very well have enacted a law that would be permanent in character and that would meet all the conditions there. This act has been in force since 1902, and we have been living under a temporary government created by a confessedly temporary law.

Are any gentlemen ready to admit that during these years, from 1902 to 1914, Congress has not been able to learn the conditions in the Philippines, and thus to enact legislation that will have a more permanent character than that enacted in 1902? But it is said this is not the right time to consider this legislation, because of the European war. Gentlemen, in this legislation you are not establishing an independent government for the Philippine Islands. No international relations are in any way touched upon in this bill. You are simply rearranging the internal affairs of a country still under the sovereignty of the United States. Can anyone seriously pretend that because of the war the American people can not say what kind of government they wish to establish in the Philippines? It is true that this bill has a preamble stating what the policy of the United States will be in the future as regards the Philippine Islands. And this is the very best of all times for making such a statement. Russia is at war, and she has said what she is going to do with Poland. Japan is at war, and she has said what she is going to do with Kiaochow. Most of the nations of Europe are stating their purposes regarding colonies they have or had. Why, then, does this war, wherein you are fortunately not engaged, prevent you from making a like statement? I myself believe that the war is the best of all reasons for making this statement to-day, since when the days of peace come and consideration of general international relations is begun, the great powers of the earth will remember what the United States wishes and proposes to do with regard to the Philippine Islands, and will give such plans due weight. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have a suggestion to offer, and I hope that this will not come out of my time. First, I will inquire how the time stands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee has 28 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Kansas 19 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is my desire to close the debate in possibly a three-minute talk, perhaps only two. I have this thought in mind, which I will suggest to the gentleman from Kansas and see if we can not agree upon it. I would like to know if we can not agree that when I close debate the time remaining of the two hours set apart for debate on the rule unused should be added to the general debate on the bill and a vote on the rule be taken at the conclusion of my remarks. It is evident that the Members of the House do not care to proceed further with this matter to-day.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course I want it understood that the vote on the rule will follow my remarks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will say that I have promised to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. FESS. He would prefer to speak upon the rule, and if the gentleman from Tennessee will yield at this time, I would be very glad to yield him that time now, or perhaps a little longer time if he should desire it, and then the remaining time could be added to the debate on the bill, as suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. This is not coming out of my time.

Mr. MANN. The question I desire to ask has reference to the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then that should properly come out of my time, Mr. Speaker. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, under the terms of this rule would it be possible to bring up anything in the House on Monday, Wednesday, or any other day until this bill is disposed of?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is the construction the Committee on Rules places upon it and which I think will be placed upon it by the Speaker. In the rules which have heretofore been adopted, where it is intended to supplant other matters, the words "and shall be the continuing order until concluded" have been used. Those words are not used in this rule.

Mr. MANN. No; but this rule says that immediately upon its adoption the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Speaker has always held that where such language was used it did not require a motion; that a demand for the regular order would resolve the House automatically into the Committee of the Whole. I am merely trying to avoid trouble in the future. There is the conference report upon the antitrust bill, which may be before the House before this bill is disposed of, and there is the river and harbor bill which may be before the House before this bill is disposed of. I do not know whether it is intended to shut out Calendar Wednesday or District Day next Monday, but there is no such exception made in the rule. If that is not the intention, it seems to me that the rule ought to be amended in those respects.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that it was not the intention of the committee to interfere with Mondays, Wednesdays, or Fridays.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman say that on Monday or Wednesday or Friday a demand for the regular order will require the Speaker to declare that the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have not thought so, because it does not say that it shall be the continuing order.

Mr. MANN. I know; but it does not say anything about it. It simply makes it the continuing order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And because every special rule which has been heretofore adopted by which it was intended to supplant those days did say that it should be the continuing order.

Mr. MANN. The question will undoubtedly be raised, unless the rule is corrected. I will say to the gentleman. I have no objection to making the rule conform to that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I again inquire how the time stands, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee has 25 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas has 19 minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent that any time on either side not used on the rule shall be added to the time for general debate on the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to two things that the distinguished representative from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON] mentioned a moment ago. The first was that the necessity for action now is due mainly to the war and to the running low of the resources, and to there being no way to replenish the treasury of the Philippines. That was not the cause when the bill was introduced in 1912, and was not the cause when this bill was written and considered in the committee. This bill was written and considered before there was any thought of a war in Europe, and it is just as unreasonable to say that the Philippine solution now is demanded because of the war as it is to say that the emergency tax of yesterday was imposed because of the war.

The war is a wonderful convenience in the legislation of this Congress, it seems. The other point I want you to specially note is that he says that it does not involve anything international, and he asked this question: Has not Japan said what she proposes to do in reference to certain holdings in east China? I would like to suggest to this body that it makes little difference what a nation says in the opening what its purpose is to be. The original purpose will not determine what is going to be done. The result of the struggle will determine what will be done. No matter what the purpose of Japan now is, she is in war, and when that war in Europe ends she may do differently from what she originally purposed, as a logical result of the war, just as we, when we went in the Spanish War, did entirely different from what we originally purposed to do. You can not make an agreement between nations where war is entered upon, go into the war, see conditions entirely changed from what they had been by the result of the war, and then hope to fulfill the agreement that had been entered into before the war. No matter what may be our policy to-day, if there should occur any indiscreet event to amount to any disturbance, and I hope there will not be, that policy can not mean anything. Probably no war in history ever ended as the initiatory power had expected. I would like to recall to the Members of this House that the Spanish-American War was not chosen. It was not the choice of the President of the United States. Well do I remember how he tried to avoid it. Not until the destruction of the Maine did he lose control of the public mind. The people of the country allowed the newspapers to impress them with the necessity of immediate action that something be done at once, and Members on this floor and at the other end of the Capitol were charging President McKinley as a weakling because he did not rush into complications that he feared might produce a world-wide war. McKinley had tasted war and knew what it meant, and did not want to take a step needlessly that would lead to needless war. And here in this RECORD which I hold in my hand, two months to the day after the Maine was blown up, are the words of one of the most distinguished gentlemen that the Old Dominion ever produced, giving a most powerful argument that something must be done, and done at once, in which he criticizes the President because the President, as he says, wanted to wash his hands of the responsibility of war by turning it over to the Congress. This distinguished Senator continued:

> The President has relegated the issue to Congress; he has handed it over to us and said that he awaits our action. It was our responsibility before he said so; it is doubly our responsibility now that he has washed his hands of it and has left us without any specific recommendations.

Why was it that President McKinley did not want to take the step? Because he was not only afraid of war, but the fruits of war. The American people forced him into it, thoughtless of the possibilities pertaining to its progress or of its results. One of the results of that war unforeseen by anyone at the time is the unhappy Philippine problem. We did not accept the Philippines because we wanted them. They were an inevitable consequence of war. The Republican Party did not want them as an inheritance, and I do not think the Democratic Party wanted them, but the Congress allowed themselves to be forced into war and the Philippines came as a result. When the war closed we had this problem on our hands; we compelled Spain to relinquish them and we assumed their protection.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield? Ever since that day they have been an issue before the country.

Mr. FESS. That is where the issue came in 1900. It was declared to be the paramount issue in that campaign. The Democratic Party in their platform made a certain declaration—I only have 10 minutes, and I am afraid my friend will ask me the same sort of a question he asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] a while ago. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GORDON. I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. FESS. I do not want to embarrass my colleague, and I choose not to embarrass him by yielding. [Laughter on the Republican side.] In 1900 the Democratic Party made an issue out of the Philippine question. They declared in favor of immediate independence. The Republicans resisted such contention. We had those islands on our hands. We would have been very glad to have relieved the Nation of the problem, but we had a duty to perform to the people whom we had relieved from Spanish control. We went into that war not because we wanted Cuba or Porto Rico or the Philippines, but because public opinion forced it upon a humanitarian standpoint, as expressed by Democrats and Republicans, in the press, and in the forum. As a result this problem falls to us. From that day we have been in a dispute as to which would be the better plan of disposition. In 1900 our Democratic friends declared for independence; the Republicans for the performance of a duty. In 1904 the Democratic policy was a virtual repetition of 1900; the Republican policy was continuance of duty. In 1900 the people sustained the Republican policy, as they did in 1904. In 1908 the Democratic policy again was announced to get rid of that responsibility, which is virtually the heart of their contention. We felt then, as we feel now, that we could not afford on behalf of the Filipinos to shift the responsibility. Everybody knows that they are of no advantage to us. To retain them under our protection is not for us, but for them. The United States does not want them for the purpose of exploiting them.

This Government has never done that. What we do in connection with these peoples is not for us, but for them. We have built roads, we have built railroads, we have built schools for them, we have stimulated a civilization there, which is not to be ignored and which ought to be appreciated. There can be no question about that, whether the Filipinos appreciate what has been done or not. We did not want them originally for our use, and we do not retain them for ourselves. We retain them for the benefit of the people whom the young man who has a seat on the floor of this House represents.

Mr. QUEZON. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. QUEZON. When the gentleman said we built roads, we built schools, does he mean to say that the American people paid for those roads and those schools?

Mr. FESS. I mean to say that the American administration built those roads.

Mr. QUEZON. Not from United States funds?

Mr. FESS. No; they were built under the administration of this Government by using the resources of the Philippines for their benefit. How many roads did you build? How many were built under the Spanish régime? And you were under that Government for 400 years and you have been under this Government only since 1898, since when there has been a rejuvenation of the islands. I doubt whether there is a case in history where such progress has been made. [Applause on the Republican side.] You ought to be appreciative of what has been done. Now, Mr. Speaker, this question has been forced at this time. I say it is unwise, it is ill-advised, it is unnecessary, and if gentlemen on that side of the House respect at all the wishes of the President when he said that we ought not to say or do anything that might involve us in international complications when the powers of Europe are at war, they will certainly hesitate to press this question at this juncture. If the President meant anything, he certainly meant that we ought not now to discuss a question that has been an international one from the day it was opened until the present time. The issue has been before the Nation quadrennially, and in every campaign the present policy toward the Philippines has been urged and agreed upon, and it seems to me that it is necessary for this Nation to continue its protection of these peoples. No man will say that has no international significance. Whatever you might say when all the world is at peace, our utterances should be tempered when most of the world is at war.

I am not free as a Representative of my people at this time, especially with war in Europe, to say what is in my mind, because I think I can see the necessity of respecting the wishes of the head of the Government and not say anything that might be misinterpreted. My friends, the greatest war that was known to man up to this time was the Civil War, when men of the same blood, the same religion, the same laws, the same language were at war, and yet there never was more than a million and a half soldiers in the field at one time in that awful conflict. But now, at this moment, we have a war with almost all Europe involved. These nations have 10,000,000 soldiers in the field and with a possibility of 7,000,000 more going into the field. Germany alone can put 6,000,000 in the field and the combined powers in the allied forces can more than duplicate them easily. And not only is there a war with 10,000,000 warriors in action——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio five minutes more.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman think that if we retain the Philippine Isalnds in their present condition as a dependency of this country, and we should unfortunately become engaged in a general war, the Filipinos would be the first helpless victims of that war?

Mr. FESS. There is only one thing that we want to do now, and that is to keep out of this war. [Applause.] Retaining the Philippines is not putting us in the war, but to suggest to the Filipino now that we intend to give him independence may provoke a difficulty that other nations may take advantage of.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman explain just how?

Mr. FESS. That is one of the things your President does not want anybody to talk about, and while you obey him in all his wishes I will try to obey him in this, even though his party unwisely provokes every Member on this side of the House to ignore him.

Mr. BORLAND. Our President has not put any veto on this bill. The gentleman is wholly mistaken.

Mr. FESS. The President has called Members from this floor to the White House and asked them not to speak on certain questions. I can be specific if it becomes necessary.

Mr. BORLAND. He does not take the view that the gentleman does, that we must not discuss the Philippine Islands.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, there are 10,000,000 soldiers in the field in this European war. They are not fighting as the soldiers fought in the Civil War. They do not use weapons that were used then, the most modern at that time. They use guns that shoot 600 times a minute and machine guns that simply have no respect for human life. An army is like chaff in the wind when raked by these weapons of destruction. And the war is not confined to the land. It extends to the sea, with 700 sea monsters on one side and over 1,200 on the other, each one a floating fortress, carrying a small-sized army to operate the guns that can lay waste the coasts. And it is not confined to the surface of the sea. They fight under the water by squadrons of submarines, as was suggested by the destruction of three of the vessels of a belligerent by one submarine but the other day. And it is not confined to land and sea, but the fight is taking place in the air, through the squadrons of the air, the monoplane or biplane as against the Zeppelin, all of which are yet untried. This is modern warfare, and strange as it is and hard as it is to believe, this moment the nations are breathless, awaiting results. Now, with all Europe in war, including an oriental country of wonderful ambition as among the nations of the East, we are here and now raising a question that might be of interest in the international balance, that we had better keep quiet about and hold our peace while it is not too late. Whatever might be the Government's future policy on the Philippines, this is not the time to discuss it. It will do no good, and it may do harm not only to the Filipinos, but to ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON].

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few explanatory remarks. The gentleman from Ohio has said that we of the Philippines ought to be grateful to you, because you have built roads, schools, and railroads for us. I want it, first of all, understood that if I represent my people at all I can say for them that whatever good has been done by the American people in the Philippine Islands is fully and gratefully recognized. [Applause.] But when it comes to the statement that you have built roads and schools and railroads for us, then the fact that I am not familiar with the English language forces me to ask this question: Do you mean to say that one who has not paid the money for the building of the roads and schools has a right to say that he is himself building those roads and those schools? Every school in the Philippine Islands, Mr. Speaker, is built with the money of the Filipino people, and this money is drawn not simply from taxation but also from voluntary contributions. The best indication how civilized and how progressive my people are is found in the fact that we are building schools and roads by voluntary contributions. We are all helping to raise the money that has been used for roads and schools. Now, if the gentleman means to say that these schools and these roads have been built with the consent, and, perhaps, under the direction of the American administration of the Philippine Islands, and that we should be grateful for that, then I am ready to agree with him.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DONOVAN. Was this great fashionable road that was built for the officers, these people with gilt lace, and so forth, these handsome Yankee soldiers, paid for by the Filipino people?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir; paid for by us.

Mr. DONOVAN. I suppose the great doctor from Ohio will claim that is a credit to the American people.

Mr. QUEZON. The gentleman calls my attention, doubtless, to a road 20 miles long, more or less, which has been built in the Province of Benguet, but which has not been very much used by the Filipino people themselves.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes left.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman know how many American men and American women are engaged there now in teaching school and attempting to develop the Philippine Islands at this time, especially in the schools?

Mr. QUEZON. I believe that the educational report for 1913 said that there were about 700 American school-teachers there, and about 4,000 Filipino school-teachers.

Mr. GORDON. They are all getting paid for it, are they not?

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman from the Philippines permit an interruption?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I know the gentleman does not want to do any injustice to his own school-teachers. There are 8,000 Filipino teachers.

Mr. QUEZON. Yes; the gentleman is correct. But my point is that we are paying those school-teachers.

Now, as to the road to which my attention has been called, nobody can deny that it was primarily built for the use of American employees of the Philippine government. I do not wish to indulge in criticism of the American administration in the Philippine Islands for having built this road. They say it was necessary for the health of American employees. I think it was. The American administration had to take care of those employees. The fact is, however, that if we did not have those American employees we would not have needed to build this road, because we did not need it for ourselves. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUEZON. I yield to anyone.

Mr. MILLER. Is it not a fact that the present Philippine Legislature, the lower branch, consisting entirely of Filipinos, and the other branch containing a majority of Filipinos, has made an appropriation to construct a road to this very same place, Benguet?

Mr. QUEZON. Oh, Mr. Speaker, this suggestion simply shows the common sense and the sense of duty of the Philippine Legislature. That is a case where we found a road already built, for which we had expended several million dollars, and it was a question of either throwing away all the money already spent or of spending a little more for its maintenance. We had to choose the lesser evil. If we had had the decision in the first place, we should never have built that road.

Mr. FESS. Now, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from the Philippine Islands yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. Do you mean to state to the American people that if the American administration had not been in operation there would have been the same progress for your people that you now have?

Mr. QUEZON. I said that if the American officials had not been in the Philippine Islands we would not have built that road. Now as to your question: This is, of course, purely a matter of conjecture and speculation, but I say "yes." [Applause on the Democratic side.] I will tell you why. As to the advance of the Filipino people in education, does the gentleman pretend to tell me that this would have been possible if those people had not themselves deserved education? [Applause on the Democratic side.] And does the gentleman pretend to tell me that you can educate any people if those people have not the mental capacity to profit by education? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Your answer has no reference to the question I asked you. I want to ask another question.

Mr. QUEZON. Then I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. I did not ask you about the road. I asked you about the advance of your people. Do you mean to say that your people would have advanced as high as they have done if the American administration had not been there?

Mr. QUEZON. I do, and I say it for this reason: The reason why the people have advanced in education is two-fold—first, that they want to educate themselves, and, second, that they are capable of learning; and I may say, third, that they are ready to spend money for that education.

Mr. FESS. How many people were in the schools in 1898?

Mr. QUEZON. Nobody. We were at war then.

Mr. FESS. How many had been in before that?

Mr. QUEZON. I have not the figures just now. There were not as many as there are to-day, but I want to tell the gentleman this: The public schools in the Philippine Islands are voluntarily attended by our boys and girls, there being no system of compulsory education in the Philippines. All the Americans who have been in the Philippines—and I invite the testimony of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], who has been there—will testify to the fact that——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to yield to me for a question, but he refused to do so. Now, I have no ill feeling against the distinguished gentleman from Ohio. Of course, I think he is a political Bourbon, who never learns and never forgets. He is a Republican of the vintage of 1872. [Laughter.]

The question I desired to put to him when he was explaining to the House that the Philippine Islands were forced on us was, By whom were they forced on us? I wished to ask him to explain how they were forced on us. I will call a witness from his side of the House, the late Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, who resigned the high office of Speaker and his membership in this House because his country and his party had been disgraced by the Philippine policy it had entered upon. He said, "You bought 10,000,000 yellow bellies at $2 a head." [Laughter.] That is the way you got them. Everybody knows it, and it is a matter of history. They were not forced upon the people of this country except by the administration then in power, and I say that this whole Philippine enterprise is one of the most disgraceful chapters in the history of the United States.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. I will not; and the man who does not admit that——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. You will yield to me, will you?

Mr. GORDON. No, sir; I will not yield. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. GORDON. Any man who is not ashamed of this Philippine enterprise is not familiar with the history of the United States, in my judgment. The gentleman brags here about building roads and things, and yet the gentleman knows that the Filipino people have been taxed to death to pay for them and to support a lot of carpetbag officials that you sent over there besides. [Laughter.] We imposed upon the people of the Philippine Islands, when those people were weak and exhausted by the destruction and devastation of war, an export tax which absolutely took all the profits out of their products. One of the good things that this Congress has done has been to repeal that tax.

Now, it is not necessary to get mysterious about this. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] seems to be afraid to have us discuss this proposition. He says we must all keep still. So far as I am concerned, I do not feel under any obligations to keep still about it. [Laughter.] As one American citizen, I want here and now to publicly repudiate any sympathy with this Philippine enterprise. I never had any for it, and I am proud to say that the party to which I belong is in no way responsible for it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. How about Bryan? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GORDON. That is one of the gravest mistakes Mr. Bryan ever made, in my judgment, when he helped you fellows to ratify that treaty. [Laughter on the Republican side.] But he did it in the interest of peace, as he thought. But I say it was a mistake. Why, this Philippine history is a thing that every decent American ought to try to forget, and the way to forget it is to unload our responsibilities and get out of there just as quickly as we can decently and in order, and in the meantime let us try to treat those people fairly. They are our wards. We took them over by force, in violation of every principle of American government that we ever professed. When gentlemen stand up here on this floor and talk about them being forced on us they say what is not true. The facts of history disprove it. They were not forced on us. We bought them.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. What would the gentleman have done with the Philippine Islands at the conclusion of the treaty of peace with Spain?

Mr. GORDON. I would have done with them just what I would do now—set them up in business for themselves and let them work out their own destiny. I would do just what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. MILLER. Is the gentleman, then, in favor of this bill?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. What part of the bill proposes to set them up for themselves?

Mr. GORDON. It is a step in that direction. Of course, when we bought them and took them over we assumed certain responsibilities. We can not unload those responsibilities as easily as we could if we had never assumed them.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is very courteous. Will he permit one more question?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman think it was better for the Philippine Islands that they came beneath the American flag rather than to have remained beneath the Spanish flag?

Mr. GORDON. I have never been in the Philippine Islands. The gentleman who represents those people says not, and I am inclined to think he knows more about it than the gentleman from Minnesota does. But that has nothing to do with this discussion. We are here to legislate for those islands, so far as we can. We have taken them over, and now the thing to do is to get rid of them as quickly as we can, and escape further responsibility for maladministration on the other side of the earth.

Mr. MILLER. Is the gentleman authorized to quote the gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON] as stating that it would have been preferable if the Philippine people had remained under the Spanish flag?

Mr. GORDON. No; I did not hear him say that, and I do not think he said it.

Mr. MILLER. I understood the gentleman to say so.

Mr. GORDON. They were fighting pretty hard to get out from under the Spanish flag when we went over there and grabbed them. I have never heard any man who represented the Philippine people say that they wanted to remain under the Spanish flag. As a matter of fact, they had successfully revolted from Spanish rule at the time we got in there and took them over. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, this is a day and an occasion that has been too long delayed. The war of the United States on the Philippine people was one of the darkest chapters, if not the darkest chapter, in the history of our Government. We Democrats, as distinguished from you who belong to the Republican school of politics, still adhere to that fundamental democratic principle that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed. The line of demarcation between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party begins at this very point. When the Battle of Manila was fought the great Admiral sent back to the President of the United States the word that the Philippine people were more capable and competent to govern themselves than the people of Cuba, for whose freedom this Government had gone to war. I take decided issue with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] when he proclaims that the American policy inaugurated in the Philippines after the Battle of Manila was not inaugurated with the approval of the then President of the United States, William McKinley, and those around his council table, in spite of the word sent back from Manila by Dewey to leave those people to themselves and let them work out their own destiny. The line is again drawn between the Democrats and the Republicans, the fundamental mistake that the gentlemen on the Republican side of the aisle make is that the Philippine people could not have governed themselves, and that they could not have made progress comparing favorably to that they have made, if they had been permitted, after the Battle of Manila, to take charge of their own affairs, and if Dewey had been ordered to turn his ships away and to bring the fleet back to the United States.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. I have only five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HELM. I assert, and I believe the statement will stand the test, that the mistake you men make is in assuming that the Philippine people were and are not capable of self-government. I cite you, as an example, to the man who has spoken to you here [Mr. QUEZON], who comes from the very jungles of those islands—from the Island of Luzon.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is not a jungle; that is the best of the islands.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. HELM. No. I would like to do so, but I have not time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HELM. The Philippine people have the capacity to govern themselves. They were in revolt against the Spanish régime. The Spaniards had stood across the path of progress of the Philippine people. They had been denied the advantages that they now have, not because of their incompetency but by the will of Spain, and there is where you gentlemen make your fatal mistake. If these people then and there had had the right to maintain and conduct their own government, they would have made measurable progress, if not all the progress that they have made since the Spanish régime was done away with in the islands. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 13 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How much time has the gentleman from Kansas?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is the adoption of a rule that provides for the present consideration of the Philippine bill. I did not intend to speak upon this rule, but I feel it my duty to make a brief reply to the eloquent remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. I regard the gentleman as a man of learning, ability, and patriotism; but I have noticed that he is also possessed of political shrewdness. He bases his opposition to the consideration of this bill not upon the merits of the bill but upon his alleged fear that something may be said in the discussion of the bill that will be inconsistent with the desire of all good Americans to preserve a position of strict neutrality toward all the nations engaged in war. I can not see anything in this bill, a legitimate discussion of which would call forth any remarks that would tend to mar the friendly relations existing between this country and any other nation. Briefly stated, the purport and effect of this bill is to give a larger scope of self-government to the people of the Philippine Islands. It is the acknowledgment of the doctrine, not new in this country, that no man is good enough to govern another man without that man's consent. It is a step toward the vindication of the doctrine proclaimed to all the world by the Declaration of Independence, that document which proclaimed not only our national independence but the primal rights of all mankind; that document the spirit of which goes forth, as Sumner says, "breaking bolts, unloosing bonds, opening prison doors, visiting all who are downtrodden, whispering that there is none so poor as to be without human rights which every man is bound to respect, none so degraded as to be beneath its beneficent influence, none so lofty as to be above its restraining power, while before it despotism and oligarchy fall on their faces like the image of Dagon, and the people everywhere begin to govern themselves." This is not a new doctrine in the United States nor one which will give surprise or offense to any other nation.

The gentleman from Ohio surely did not mean to infer that those on this side of the House are not as anxious as those on that side of the House to save this country from bitter embroilments and strife. After the events of the recent past it is a strange warning to come to us from that side of the aisle. It sounds strange to us who, while the Mexican situation was acute, sat here calmly while we were accused of weakness and lack of patriotism and almost of cowardice.

The gentleman has pictured the horrors of the present war; he has not painted the picture too dark. There are men living in our land to-day who have tasted the horrors of war, men who wore the tattered gray and marched to the tune of "'Way Down South in Dixie," faced the belching cannon, endured the pangs of hunger for what they thought was right; men who wore the blue and marched to the tune of "Yankee Doodle" and fought for the preservation of the Union and the Stars and Stripes. The Civil War was an awful war, the horrors of which we younger men can never know. But the war that is now being waged is one which, for destruction and disaster, staggers the minds of even the men who followed the fortunes of Lee and Grant. In the Civil War hundreds of thousands faced hundreds of thousands in deadly conflict. In the present war millions against millions surge back and forth, leaving lines miles long of dead. They are fighting under the sea; they are fighting in the air. They are dying over there; they are dying by platoons, by battalions, by the thousand—aye, I fear, even by the million. The disaster of this war can not be measured by the numbers slain. We do not sorrow alone for those who fall in the awful charge never to rise again. Think of the mothers who mourn for the brave sons who are never coming back; the fathers who shall never see again those whom they bade goodby with stern and solemn faces and saw them march away to war. Think of the wives who will mourn for husbands dead, sisters who will miss the brother's smile, of the orphans who will know no more a father's help and guiding care; think of the poverty, the squalor, the sickness, the despair that will follow in the wake of this awful war. Think of the burdens of taxation that will fall on the shoulders of countless millions yet unborn.

When we contemplate the tidings of horror and disaster that come from across the sea there is not a man, woman, nor child that is not grateful to our President, who, supported by the men on this side of the aisle, has made it possible for us to say, "We are at peace with all the world." We were not afraid to fight with Mexico. With all our wealth, with all our arms, with all our ships, we could have swept swiftly over the hills and plains of Mexico and placed again the Stars and Stripes over the halls of the Montezumas. We could have trampled with the iron heel of war from one end to the other of unhappy Mexico, leaving famine and desolation in our wake; but the man in the White House was thinking of the mothers whose boys would never come back, of those who would go through life maimed and halt; he was thinking of the burdens and the sorrows that war would bring to the people whom he had been chosen to guide. He was also thinking of the people of Mexico—people distracted by strife, bowed down by oppression, impoverished by wrongs; people who, like us, hunger when they have no food, bleed when they are wounded, and grieve when they are wronged. He was thinking of these people as well as his own. Unmindful of the taunts that came from that side of the aisle, heedless of the darts of derision that came from the public press, imperturbed by the tempests of prejudice and passion stirred up throughout this country by sinister interests, he kept the even tenor of his way and has demonstrated that watchful waiting is better than war.

Since the present war came with such suddenness to a startled world, the foreign policy of this great man has been the policy of peace. When the rumbling of marching men was first heard, and the awfulness of the coming tragedy was first realized, this great leader, with heart bowed down by his own great sorrow, yet sorrowing for those whom he did not know, sent to the contending nations an appeal for mediation and peace. To his own people, who have learned to honor and trust him, he sent forth a message requesting that in thought, in speech, and in action they observe an attitude of strictest neutrality.

This message should be heeded by all Americans, from the humblest to the highest. It should be heeded by the multitudes as they go their daily ways. It should be heeded by the preachers, the lawyers, the doctors, the teachers, and by those who gather and disseminate the news, and, above all, it should be heeded by the men who sit in this Chamber and help to make the laws.

A government can not be neutral unless its people are neutral. The people that compose this Government come from every land and clime. Many come from the lands now torn by war. The ties of blood and kindred bind them in bonds of sympathy to the land from which they or their forebears come. Yet by the bonds of patriotism and interest they are bound to the flag of their adoption. For this flag in the past they have rendered, and in the future will render, if need be, the last full measure of devotion. It is fitting that out of regard each for the other, our people should heed the President's plea for neutrality. It is especially fitting that we, the representatives of them all, and responsible for the harmony, the happiness, and prosperity of them all, should heed the President's plea, and say nothing inside or outside of this Chamber that would weaken the friendship between this Nation and any other nation engaged in war. The gentleman from Ohio has referred to this request of the President for neutrality as a reason for not discussing this bill at this time. We on this side of the aisle appreciate our duty in this regard. We believe, as I said in the beginning, that there is nothing in this bill that should prevent any legitimate discussion of its merits at this time. We have faith in the patriotism of the men on this side of the aisle—yes, and we have faith in the patriotism of the men on that side of the aisle—that for the sake of mere partisan advantage or personal gain they will not go far afield in this discussion and say things that should not be said at this time. I have faith in the patriotism of the men in this House. I believe we all realize the solemnity and seriousness of the crisis that confronts the world, and I believe it is the desire of each and every one of us to rise above partisanship at a time like this. While from different quarters of the world we hear the noise of carnage and despair, it is our desire to do our best to preserve for our people the blessings of prosperity and peace. While we realize that political gloom and chaos, crumbling kingdoms, and changing dynasties may result from this war, we will keep the beacon light of liberty and order burning on this the highest hilltop of the world.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to use any more of my time with the understanding that the six minutes will be added to general debate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eight minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I intend to use two minutes, and then I ask unanimous consent that the unused time on the rule may be added to general debate on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that whatever time is not consumed on the rule shall be added to the time for general debate on the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair wishes to state to the House that it is positively against the rules for any Member to sit in his seat and interject remarks into another man's speech. It is not treating the man who has the floor fairly. The House is gradually drifting into that habit, and the Chair hopes that it will not be indulged in. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the debate has taken a wider range, and a more humorous range, than I had anticipated when I presented the rule. This is a very important bill. There have been many things said on the Republican side of the House in the argument that are not justified. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] suggested that there was some devious method being pursued in presenting this rule at this time. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, one intention from the moment this Congress assembled until now has been that a bill along the line of this should be presented and acted upon.

The only arguments that have been made against the consideration of the bill are these: First, the gentleman from Iowa, the gentleman from Wisconsin, and other gentlemen say that there is no possibility of its passing, and so there is no use considering it. Why, Mr. Speaker, there is no possibility of its passing unless the House considers it well. That we propose to do, and so that argument is disposed of. The second argument is that it is not wise to bring it up at this time because, forsooth, some gentlemen may make unwise speeches. Well, sir, there is certainly no legitimate connection between this bill and the troubles now convulsing the European countries.

Why is it inopportune for the party now in power to take a step toward carrying out that which it has declared for the last 14 years it would do? Why is it inopportune, because a war is convulsing Europe, for this country to say that one of its dependencies, thrust upon it under circumstances with which we are all familiar, shall be given an opportunity to take a step toward autonomous republican government? This last suggestion which gentlemen make reduced to its final analysis is this: There is no legitimate or logical argument to be made connecting the European war and this bill. There is no legitimate or logical connection between the conditions which exist in Europe and the propositions contained in this bill. But, nevertheless, do not bring the bill in, because, if you do, we may make speeches by which we will make ridiculous spectacles of ourselves. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There will, I think, be nothing indiscreet said upon this side of the House during the discussion of this bill. If anything indiscreet be said upon that side, it will not have a legitmate connection with this bill, and the responsibility will rest upon the individual who says it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it would be improper or indiscreet in discussing our relations with the Philippine Islands to discuss our relations with Japan and the relations which may exist between Japan and the Philippine Islands?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not see how it is possible for a bill providing that in the course of time the Philippine Islands are to be granted absolute self-government and independence, and that now a step shall be taken in enlarging the autonomy of their government, to be in any way connected with our relations with Japan.

Mr. MANN. If we make a declaration in favor of Philippine independence, does the gentleman think it would be improper to discuss the relations which may exist between Japan, the Philippine Islands, and the United States and the control of the Pacific Ocean?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr Speaker, I can not control the speeches made by gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. I was trying to get the gentleman's opinion as to whether he thought I would be doing an improper thing if I made a speech upon those subjects.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I simply say that, in my opinion, there is no occasion for making such a speech, and no legitimate reason for making such a speech on this bill. The gentlemen can discuss the matter according to their own ideas. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that nine minutes will be added to the time for general debate on the bill, under the unanimous-consent agreement. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 61, noes 44.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] will take the chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Under the rule does the House automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole or does it require a motion?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the rule makes it go into the committee automatically.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the Chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18459) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] in the chair.

The Clerk reported the bill by title.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18459, and had come to no resolution thereon.

IMPORTATIONS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have some figures in reference to importations which I would like to have inserted in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing certain figures about importations.

Mr. MANN. And a short speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 18732. An act to amend section 98 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, September 28, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Also, petition of Miss Bessie Hupp and 24 others, of Oklahoma City, Okla., and Mrs. M. E. Manwaring, of Oklahoma City, Okla., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

SENATE.

MONDAY, September 28, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art the God and Father of us all. Thou dost take within Thy care and within Thy great purpose all men and all nations and all ages. Thou art the center and source of all power and of all greatness and of all good. We come to Thee in the discharge of the sacred and important duties of this hour and lift our hearts to Thee for Thy blessing and guidance; that we may be saved from every selfish purpose; that we may be given a clear insight into every duty; that we may be given courage for all the obligations of life. Grant that the service we render this day may be first of all to God and then to our Nation and to the world, and may all that is done be with the approval of the God and Father of us all. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, September 24, 1914, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5798) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Earl A. Bancroft from Glenwood Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Mantorville, Minn.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 657) to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects in the State of Montana, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 18732) to amend section 98 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In behalf of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], I desire to present two telegrams in reference to the so-called revenue-tax bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., September 23, 1914.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Chicago Real Estate Board, the largest and oldest in the world, representing thousands of realty owners, protests most strenuously against the proposed taxes in the so-called war-tax measure on real-estate conveyances, mortgages, contracts, leases, etc. Our commodity bears the heaviest burden of local taxation, never is concealed, and in this State is taxed twice when mortgaged; and we likewise protest against the proposed real-estate brokers' license of $50.

THE CHICAGO REAL ESTATE BOARD.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, September 17, 1914.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The National Association of Life Underwriters in convention assembled, representing over 103,000 agents of over 100 legal reserve life insurance companies of all sections, and in the name of our 25,000,000 policyholders, protest vigorously against the reported proposal to impose a Federal stamp tax upon our policyholders. We shall do our utmost to arouse them against this additional exaction among America's thrifty and provident self-taxing citizens. No European countries, even under pressure of war, so far as known, have resorted to taxing life insurance. Why should America, at peace, increase the cost of protecting their families in addition to the present burdensome taxes of 48 States? We submit that taxing only the legal reserve companies, even those purely mutual, and excluding very properly assessment and fraternal associations and therefore increasing the cost to the 30,000,000 policyholders upon whom this additional tax will solely fall, is unjustified and indefensible. When England exempts money paid for life insurance from her income tax should peaceful America tax it? We earnestly request that at a time when a decreased cost of living is demanded so vital an agency for thrift and preventive of dependency as life insurance will not be increased in cost, especially by a Congress that wisely struck from the income-tax bill the provisions taxing life insurance. This Government has already the discreditable distinction of being the only one in the whole world to tax life policyholders. Surely the present Congress will not increase this burden.

ERNEST J. CLARK,
President National Association of Life Underwriters.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have received a letter, transmitting a petition from the banking and currency committee of the New Jersey Bankers' Association. I ask that the petition may be printed in the RECORD and properly referred.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Federal Reserve Board:

The banking and currency committee of the New Jersey Bankers' Association, acting under authority conferred by that association, and at the request of the national banks of northern New Jersey, respectfully petition your honorable body to review the assignment of the banks of northern New Jersey to the Federal reserve district No. 3 (Philadelphia) and to alter the district lines so that the banks in New Jersey north of the northerly line of the counties of Ocean and Mercer shall be included in Federal reserve district No. 2 (New York). This would involve transferring the banks in the counties of Monmouth, Somerset, Passaic, Morris, Middlesex, Union, Hudson, Sussex, Hunterdon, Essex, Bergen, and Warren, in the State of New Jersey, from the Federal reserve district No. 3 (Philadelphia) to Federal reserve district No. 2 (New York)

We present to you herewith petitions signed by 123 member banks in the counties above mentioned, asking for this change and authorizing us to represent them. The capital and surplus of the banks signing these petitions is $31,226,427; their deposits, $156,465,000. Nine banks did not sign petitions, the capital and surplus of those not signing being $1,177,500 and their deposits $5,310,000. These figures are taken from the published report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1913, those being the latest official figures available to us.

Northern New Jersey is allied so closely with New York, both commercially and financially, that the banks of that section should be assigned to the New York district, in compliance with the Federal reserve act, section 2, which says:

"That the districts shall be apportioned with due regard to the convenience and customary course of business, and shall not necessarily be coterminous with any State or States."

The volume of checks drawn on any particular city which are received on deposit by a bank show very accurately the amount of business which is done by the community in which the bank is located with the community on which the checks are drawn. Taking this method as a basis, we find that the commercial business of northern New Jersey with New York is fully ten times as much as the commercial business of that section with Philadelphia, and throughout that section of the State the ties, both commercial, financial, and social, are almost entirely with New York City. The industrial enterprises of northern

New Jersey, especially those located in the large cities of Hudson, Passaic, Essex, Union, and Middlesex Counties, do a very much greater volume of business with New York than with Philadelphia. Most of these concerns have offices in New York City, while but few of them have offices in Philadelphia. We append tables showing the population and industrial importance of northern New Jersey.

We are advised by the banks of northern New Jersey that of the checks which they receive on deposit drawn on the cities of New York and Philadelphia from 85 per cent to almost 100 per cent are drawn on New York City, and on account of the large volume and amount of these checks payable in New York City it is essential that they be sent directly there in order to insure prompt presentation and prompt notice in case of nonpayment. It is impracticable to send these checks to New York by way of the Philadelphia reserve bank. This very same question will arise in connection with the very heavy volume of checks payable in northern New Jersey which are received on deposit by the New York City banks. An analysis of figures which were received by the Comptroller of the Currency from banks of northern New Jersey during the month of June last will demonstrate the close relationship existing between New York City and northern New Jersey, and will show that this relationship is much more active and close than that existing between northern New Jersey and Philadelphia. In taking these figures into consideration it must be borne in mind that the comptroller's figures separate New York City from New York State, but do not separate Philadelphia from the State of Pennsylvania. We give below figures covering the month of June furnished by five representative institutions in Newark, N. J., showing the volume of checks on Newark received from New York City and from Philadelphia and the currency shipments between Newark and New York, there being none with Philadelphia:

On local banks, received from New York City	$19,096,489
On local banks, received from Philadelphia	2,351,506
Currency shipments to and from New York City	2,034,000

At present many of the banks in northern New Jersey maintain accounts with Philadelphia banks, but these accounts are not maintained by reason of the natural flow of business there, but are due entirely to the fact that New York City banks have for many years charged exchange for the collection of country checks, whereas Philadelphia banks have been willing to collect these checks at par. Prior to the time when the New York Clearing House adopted the rule requiring its member banks to charge exchange on country checks the banks of northern New Jersey, with very few exceptions, carried no accounts in Philadelphia, and the figures will demonstrate that immediately after the imposition of this exchange charge by the New York Clearing House the deposits of country banks with Philadelphia banks increased very materially. With equal facilities provided by the banks of the two cities, practically all of these accounts kept in Philadelphia by the banks of northern New Jersey would be eliminated, as there is not a sufficient volume of business on the territory naturally covered by Philadelphia to warrant the maintenance of these accounts. These facts will also account for the considerable volume of business received by the banks of northern New Jersey from the banks of Philadelphia, as checks on northern New Jersey from all over the country are by reason of the exchange charge imposed by the New York clearing house diverted to Philadelphia rather than through their natural course by way of New York.

The relations existing between the banking institutions of northern New Jersey and the banks of New York City have always been most intimate, and the transactions between that section of New Jersey and New York City are carried on in a very large degree through personal contact, resulting in mutual advantage. On account of this close relationship no artificial barriers should be erected, and if erected, will prove injurious to the banks of northern New Jersey.

A considerable number of the banks in northern New Jersey at certain times in the year purchase commercial paper. This is all purchased through New York brokers, and is usually passed upon by New York banks before being purchased.

The bankers of New York City are in very close touch with the credit standing of northern New Jersey corporations, and are thus in much better position to advise with the directors of the Federal reserve bank of New York City regarding conditions in northern New Jersey than are the bankers of Philadelphia.

Many of the industries of northern New Jersey maintain bank accounts in New York City as well as in New Jersey, sell their paper in the New York markets, and are otherwise financed there. This further results in very close and accurate knowledge by the bankers of New York City of the credits and needs of the industries of northern New Jersey.

The very large commuting element in the population of northern New Jersey alone causes a very considerable flow of business to and from New York City. Many considerable towns in northern New Jersey are inhabited almost entirely by people who are in business in New York City. We are advised by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. that during the past year on their lines east of and including New Brunswick 11,051,715 passengers were carried to and from New York City. The Central Railroad Co. advised us that on their lines in northern New Jersey they have at least 12,000 commuters from points in northern New Jersey to New York City, and, in addition, they carry about 35,000 passengers to and from New York City and New Jersey points each day. The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. advise us that the number of passengers carried between stations in northern New Jersey and New York City during the month of June, 1914, was 1,421,537. The Erie Railroad Railroad Co. advise us that in June, 1914, they carried 1,555,314 passengers between stations in northern New Jersey and New York City. These figures show that over 60,000,000 passengers per year are carried between New York City and northern New Jersey points, and this does not include the traffic from points in Hudson County which reaches New York City by other means than the railroads. The retail purchases of a large portion of the commuting element of the population are made in New York City, and much of the wholesale and retail business throughout northern New Jersey follows the same course.

A large proportion of the business of many banks located in the commuting cities and towns of northern New Jersey are accounts of New York business men residing in those town and cities. A recent agreement, which has been entered into by many of the country banks located near New York City provides that the New York Clearing House banks will take checks on these banks at par, the local bank agreeing to remit for them in New York Clearing House funds at par on receipt. These checks are therefore readily received in New York, but if northern New Jersey were in another Federal reserve district than New York City this arrangement would probably be terminated, and it is unlikely that New York City banks would receive these checks freely if they had to collect them through the Federal reserve bank in New York City, and from that bank through the Federal reserve bank in Philadelphia. This would result in the transfer of many of these accounts of New York men in the local banks to banks in New York City.

Efforts are already being made by New York City banks to secure the accounts of business men and industrial concerns located in northern New Jersey, the New York banks using the argument that the New Jersey banks being attached to the Philadelphia reserve bank district will interfere with the availability of deposit accounts in New Jersey banks. This will probably result in the diversion of considerable business from New Jersey banks to the banks of New York City if the present assignment of the northern New Jersey banks is continued.

Access to New York City from northern New Jersey is rapid and easy, and to Philadelphia is much longer, and frequently more difficult, as few portions of the northern part of the State have direct train service to Philadelphia, while all have direct train service to New York City. From certain sections in the northern part of New Jersey it is impossible to reach Philadelphia, transact business and return the same day, whereas New York City can be reached from every part of northern New Jersey with time for the transaction of business and return within convenient hours of the same day. Thus from Newton, the county seat of Sussex County, a trip to Philadelphia, by way of New York, which is the quickest route, would involve leaving Newton at 9.10 a. m., reaching Philadelphia at 3 p. m. The only other route to Philadelphia, without going through New York City, involves leaving Newton at 9.10 a. m., reaching Philadelphia at 4.17 p. m., with three changes of cars. On account of the large number of commuters living throughout northern New Jersey the train service to New York is very frequent and good, making a trip to that city practically as convenient as going from one part of New York City to another. Hudson County and, to a lesser extent, Essex County, on account of the tube connections with New York City, are practically a part of New York City for banking and business purposes, fully as much so as is Brooklyn, and the same condition is to a very large extent true as regards the other near-by counties.

Six banks in Hudson County are associate members of the New York Clearing House and clear their checks there every day. We give below several examples of the time of transit from down town in New York City to points in New Jersey, as contrasted with the time of transit to points within the city limits of New York City:

Newark, 20 minutes by Hudson & Manhattan Railroad.

Exchange Place, Jersey City, 3 minutes by Hudson & Manhattan Railroad.

Hoboken, 9 minutes by Hudson & Manhattan Railroad.

Bayonne, 26 minutes by Central Railroad from Liberty Street.

Elizabeth, 30 minutes by Central Railroad from Liberty Street.

Passaic, 35 minutes by Erie Railroad from Chambers Street.

Paterson, 45 minutes by Erie Railroad from Chambers Street.

Ninety-sixth Street, New York City, 16 minutes from city hall by subway.

Two hundred and forty-second Street and Broadway, 42 minutes from city hall by subway.

One hundred and eighty-first Street and Boston Road, 40 minutes from city hall by subway.

One hundred and twenty-fifth Street and Broadway, 22 minutes from city hall by subway.

St. George, Staten Island, 20 minutes from Whitehall Ferry.

Mariner's Harbor, Staten Island, 43 minutes from Whitehall Ferry.

Tottenville, Staten Island, 78 minutes from Whitehall Ferry.

Jamaica, borough of Queens, 20 minutes from Pennsylvania Station, Thirty-third Street.

Jamaica, borough of Queens, 40 minutes from down town, New York City.

Flushing, borough of Queens, 22 minutes from Pennsylvania Station, Thirty-third Street.

Flushing, borough of Queens, 42 minutes from down town, New York City.

Far Rockaway, borough of Queens, 45 minutes from Pennsylvania Station, Thirty-third Street.

Far Rockaway, borough of Queens, 65 minutes from down town, New York City.

The matter of telephone service also enters into this question of convenience, as connections with New York City are much quicker, more satisfactory, and cheaper than telephone connections with Philadelphia.

The members of your honorable body fully realize that the money transactions in our section, especially those running into large figures, necessitate the use of checks payable in New York City, resulting in our banks being constantly called upon for New York certifications. Checks which are not made payable through the New York Clearing House will not fulfill the requirements. As a consequence, if our reserve is kept elsewhere than in New York City, large balances will have to be maintained by us in New York banks, not only at a loss in earnings, but also to the detriment of all the manufacturing communities in this section, because of the diminished loaning power of the banks.

Accounts will also have to be kept in New York City to cover currency transactions, most of which are now handled by messenger and which run into very large amounts. Many of our banks have currency transactions with New York City aggregating in the neighborhood of $500,000 a month, and the currency shipments of at least two of the banks in Jersey City average over $1,000,000 a month, all handled by messenger.

A great bulk of the coupons are payable in New York City, including those of a large number of the municipalities and corporations located in northern New Jersey, and the collection of these coupons by our banks will necessitate accounts in New York City if we are not connected with that reserve district.

A very considerable amount of foreign exchange is dealt in, both buying and selling, by the banks of our section of New Jersey, and this business has all been done through New York on account of the better facilities and closer rates that can be obtained there, and it would be a serious disadvantage to our banks to interfere in any way with the trend of this business to its natural center.

If it has been thought to obviate the difficulties which we anticipate will arise through our being put in another than our natural district by some method of clearing checks, why should you not adopt the simpler and surer method of putting us in the district in which we belong through common association, natural trend of business, both banking and commercial, and by physical contiguity? It should not be necessary to devise means of overcoming the difficulties created by our being placed in a district artificially created in direct opposition to the natural flow of trade.

The recent election of directors for the Federal reserve bank of Philadelphia demonstrates the impossibility of electing any representative banker from New Jersey as a member of the board of that bank. This is a serious condition for the bankers of northern New Jersey, as the bankers of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania are not closely in touch with the needs and credits of northern New Jersey, whereas lack of such representation, if we were affiliated with the New York reserve bank, would not be material, owing to the close knowledge of our locality and of its needs and credits by the bankers representing New York City on the board of the Federal reserve bank of New York.

It is most desirable for the success of the Federal reserve system that the State institutions should become affiliated as members. If the present handicap due to the assignment of northern New Jersey banks continues, it is very improbable that any State institutions will become members. Positive statements to this effect have been made to us by a considerable number of the more important State institutions in the northern part of the State, and these statements carry all the more weight as their reserves are freed by legislation from restriction to any one locality and follow the natural channels of business. If the State institutions of northern New Jersey remain out of the system, the member banks will be at a serious disadvantage in competition with them under present conditions.

At the time the organization committee was holding hearings in New York we took a poll of the banks of New Jersey and reported to that committee that the banks of the counties mentioned above desired to be affiliated with the New York City district, and the poll which the committee later took will confirm the facts which we laid before them at that hearing.

The figures of the banks of northern New Jersey, in accordance with their report to the Comptroller of the Currency on June 30, 1914, are as follows:

Capital	$16,307,000
Surplus	16,183,500
Undivided profits	7,938,239
Individual deposits	157,522,332
Bank deposits	17,115,557

If the northern New Jersey banks are continued in the Philadelphia district, it will very seriously interfere with the smooth conduct of their business under the Federal reserve act, will take from them many of the advantages which they would otherwise gain through membership in the Federal reserve system, and will prevent the fullest possible development of the system in this part of the State. It is directly contrary to the currents of trade and banking, and as such can not help being injurious to the State and its industries. The banking business of a section does not originate with the banks themselves, but arises out of the commerce of their section and follows the course of trade, and anything which tends to disturb the flow of banking business along with the natural flow of general business can not but be injurious. Any action which places the national institutions at a disadvantage in their competition with the State institutions should not be continued, as it is wise to encourage the greatest possible development of banks under national charters.

Respectfully submitted.

tional Bank of Terre Haute; the Parker Banking Co., of Parker; the First National Bank of Medaryville; the First National Bank of Columbia City; the Northern Wayne Bank, of Economy; the Union County National Bank, of Liberty; the First National Bank of Brownstown; the Home National Bank, of Thorntown; the State Bank of Westfield; the Indianapolis Clearing House Association; the American Trust & Savings Bank, of Evansville; the Old State Bank, of Evansville; the West Side Bank, of Evansville; the Evansville Clearing House Association; and the Indiana Bankers' Association, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the proposed tax on capital, surplus, and undivided profits of banks, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of the Reserve Loan Life Insurance Co., of Indianapolis; the Lincoln National Life Insurance Co., of Fort Wayne; and the People's Life Insurance Co., of Frankfort, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the proposed tax on life insurance policies, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Indianapolis Telephone Co., of Indiana, remonstrating against the proposed tax on telephone messages, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of Charles J. Daum, of Evansville, Ind., remonstrating against the proposed war tax on brokers, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the C. Bayer Cigar Co., of Fort Wayne, Ind., remonstrating against the proposed tax on cigars, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present a petition signed by a large number of cotton producers of Montague County, Tex., praying that some plan be devised whereby they may realize on a full product of cotton. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD, omitting the signatures, and that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, as producers of Montague County, Tex., do hereby ask our mother Government to tide us over this crisis in the cotton market by devising some plan whereby we may realize on a full product of our cotton.

We hereby ask our Government to devise some plan whereby we can get money direct from our Government without paying our banks such a high rate of interest.

We do ask our Government to advance us as much as 12 cents per pound, middling basis.

We furthermore ask, if we can not get money direct from you, that you set a reasonable rate of interest at the banks, not exceeding 5 per cent.

Mr. ASHURST presented a petition of the inmates of the Arizona State Prison, praying for the removal of certain restrictions on prisoners' mail, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. VARDAMAN presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from the Port Gibson Bank and the Mississippi Southern Bank, of Port Gibson; the Bank of Hattiesburg; the First National Bank of Greenville; the Bank of Yazoo City; the Citizens' Bank & Trust Co., the Delta Bank & Trust Co., the Exchange Bank, and the Security Savings Bank, all of Yazoo City; of W. S. Webster and J. B. Small, of Winona; and of the Merchants and Farmers' Bank, of Columbus, all in the State of Mississippi, remonstrating against the proposed tax on capital and surplus of national banks, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental & Commercial National Bank, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit interlocking directorates, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Lloyd T. Binnford, of Memphis, Tenn., remonstrating against the proposed tax on life insurance policies, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PERKINS presented memorials of the Merchants' Exchange and of the Chamber of Commerce of Oakland, Cal., remonstrating against the proposed tax on wine, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of the Clearing House of Pasadena; the California National Bank, of Sacramento; the Peoples' Savings Bank of Sacramento; and the Clearing House Association of San Francisco, all in the State of California, remonstrating against the proposed tax on capital and surplus of banks, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange No. 332, Patrons of Husbandry, of Mountain View, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the extermination of the dove, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange No. 332, Patrons of Husbandry, of Mountain View, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide Government ownership of telegraph and telephone service, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented the memorial of C. W. Godard, of Sacramento, Cal., remonstrating against the proposed tax on motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of White Pine and Plains, in the State of Montana, praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EDWARD B. KELLEY.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6939) to reimburse Edward B. Kelley for moneys expended while superintendent of the Rosebud Indian Agency in South Dakota, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 798) thereon.

THE OIL INDUSTRY.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent to call up at this time Senate resolution 442. It is a resolution which I submitted September 5, regarding the oil situation in New York, Ohio, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania, and it has been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, committing the investigation to the Interstate Commerce Commission instead of to a special committee of the Senate. I do not think there will possibly be any objection to it, and we can dispose of it in a minute. I therefore ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator if there is any expense attached to the investigation?

Mr. CHILTON. None whatever. It merely requests the Interstate Commerce Commission to make the investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not read the resolution, but as it had been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I thought there must be some expense attached.

Mr. CHILTON. None whatever, as reported. The part which provided for an expenditure of money has been stricken out by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate were, on page 3, line 1, after the words "Resolved, That," to strike out:

A committee of five Members of the Senate is hereby created, its members to be appointed by the President of the Senate, for the purpose and with direction.

And to insert:

The Interstate Commerce Commission be requested.

On page 1, line 15, to strike out "committee" and insert "commission."

On page 4, line 11, to strike out "committee" and insert "commission."

In line 19, after the word "information," to strike out "such committee" and insert "the commission."

After line 23, to strike out the words:

Said committee is authorized to sit in the recess of the Senate, and at any point in the United States, to employ such counsel, clerks, and stenographers as it may find necessary, to summon and swear witnesses, send for persons and papers, and to do any other thing necessary to the success of the investigation committed to it.

On page 5, line 4, to strike out "committee" and insert "commission."

In line 6, after the word "completed," to strike out the remainder of the resolution, in the following words:

And shall make reports from time to time as required by the Senate. All expenses incurred by said committee hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be requested to make thorough investigation of the conditions prevailing and that have prevailed in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio, or elsewhere, affecting the production, transportation, and marketing of crude petroleum, with especial reference to the manner in which the market for same has been created, maintained, and controlled, and by whom, and the effect of such market and the maintenance and control thereof upon the inducement of capital to seek investment in the oil business, and especially in the development of new fields.

Said commission shall also ascertain what connection or relation of any kind has existed or now exists between or among any two or more of the pipe-line companies which have been or are now transporting crude oil within said fields, together with what, if any, common ownership, interest, or control has at any time existed or now exists between such pipe lines or any of them, and the various agencies that have purchased crude oil in said States since 1890, and what disposition such agencies have made of the crude oil so purchased, and to whom it has been turned over for refining and manufacture, and under what conditions, with the object of ascertaining for the information of the Senate whether the charge is true that substantially the same interests have operated the pipe lines, made the market, bought the crude oil, refined it, and fixed the price of the refined products, and whether in such respect the laws of the United States have been violated.

Said commission shall also inquire into and ascertain if it is true that said pipe-line companies, or any of them, have recently stopped taking all or any part of the crude oil produced by independent producers into tanks to which such pipe-line companies have connected their pipe lines, and whether it is true that said purchasing agencies, or any of them, have recently stopped purchasing all or any part of the crude oil so produced by independent producers in said States, together with any information the commission may be able to obtain as to the reasons for such refusal to run and purchase oil, and what effect the same is having upon the oil industry, and especially properties already developed in the States named.

Said commission shall report to the Senate its findings, together with the evidence taken, when its work hereunder is completed.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. On behalf of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], I move, in line 7, on page 3, to insert "Oklahoma" after "West Virginia," so as to read:

In the States of New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Oklahoma, and Ohio, or elsewhere.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee recommends striking out the preamble. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken out.

Mr. GORE. I desire to call up Senate resolution 457, submitted by me on the 24th instant.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to considering the resolution at this time, but after it is disposed of I shall have to call for the regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Texas wants to get consideration of the conference report directly, I think the best plan would be for him to call for the regular order at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of the Senator from Oklahoma is not now in order, because it is a resolution coming over from a preceding day, and the morning business is not yet closed It will be handed down by the Chair when we reach that point.

Mr. GORE. I undertook to call it up at this time because really it is a companion resolution to the one just adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PITTMAN (for Mr. NEWLANDS):

A bill (S. 6537) granting a pension to Mabel De Chaine; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THORNTON:

A bill (S. 6538) for the relief of the heirs of Antoine Bayard (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. SHERMAN):

A bill (S. 6539) granting a pension to Cora Alward;

A bill (S. 6540) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Wardle;

A bill (S. 6541) granting an increase of pension to Alfred J. Adair;

A bill (S. 6542) granting an increase of pension to William Porter; and

A bill (S. 6543) granting an increase of pesion to Henry Clay; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 6544) granting a pension to Frank Sutterfield; and

A bill (S. 6545) granting an increase of pension to James W. Sargent (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona:

A bill (S. 6546) granting an increase of pension to Hannah M. Bates (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6547) granting an increase of pension to John E. Penn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 6548) for the relief of the estate of Addison G. Lee, deceased (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LEE of Maryland:

A bill (S. 6549) for the relief of George Berry Dobyns; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON (for Mr. BURLEIGH):

A bill (S. 6550) granting an increase of pension to Joseph N. Stockford; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) ceding to the State of California temporary jurisdiction over certain lands in the Presidio of San Francisco and Fort Mason (Cal.) Military Reservations; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOHN J. BOESL.

On motion Mr. STERLING, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying S. 3467, granting a pension to John J. Boesl, Sixty-third Congress, first session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE STANDARD OIL CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 457, submitted by Mr. GORE on the 24th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be requested, as soon as organized, to investigate the following matters and report its findings to the Senate:

1. The relation now existing among the several branches or companies into which the Standard Oil Co. was resolved after its dissolution in pursuance of the decision of the Supreme Court.

2. The relation between the producing, purchasing, transporting, and refining agencies of the Standard Oil Co. or its branches and the methods and practices on the part of such agencies toward the independent producers, transporters, and refiners of oil.

3. The efforts of the Standard Oil Co. or the companies into which it was divided to control the price of crude oil and the price of its refined products, as well as the results of such efforts.

4. The capital and declared dividends of the Standard Oil Co. for three years prior to dissolution, and as to the capital and declared dividends of the several companies into which it was resolved since the date of its dissolution, together with a comparison of such earnings with the earnings of independent oil-refining companies.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

STANDARD BOX FOR APPLES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. JONES. There has been a motion pending to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 4517) to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes, was passed. The bill was recalled from the House and the motion to reconsider has been pending for some time. I think it will take only a minute or two to dispose of it. I should like to have it disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Who made the motion to reconsider?

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], in order that he might offer a couple of amendments to the bill which the friends of the bill think would practically emasculate it. So I hope the motion to reconsider will be defeated.

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be returned to the House of Representatives.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN CONNECTICUT AND MASSACHUSETTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3550) ratifying the establishment of the boundary line between the States of Connecticut and Massachusetts, which were to strike out all after the title down to the enacting clause and to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Congress hereby consents to the establishment of a boundary line between the States of Massachusetts and Connecticut, heretofore agreed upon by said States, which boundary line is shown by duplicate maps, one copy of which has been deposited with the secretary of state of Massachusetts and another copy in the library of the State of Connecticut, and which boundary line has been fixed and determined according to the terms of an act of the Legislature of the State of Connecticut entitled "An act establishing the boundary line between Connecticut and Massachusetts," approved June 6, 1913, which act has been sent to and received by the State of Massachusetts, and an act of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts entitled "An act to establish the boundary line between the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the State of Connecticut," approved March 19, 1908, which act has been sent to and received by the State of Connecticut each of which acts contains a full description of said boundary line.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask immediate action on the amendments of the House, if there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are they satisfactory to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McLEAN. The change made by the House, I understand, is merely to eliminate the preamble in accordance with the law. There is no change in the substance of the bill, and I certainly hope that the amendments will be concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator from Texas withhold his motion for a minute until I ask consent to take up a brief matter—House joint resolution 241, for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers? There is no quorum on that board and there are a great many important matters needing attention. I have a statement from one of the members of the board to that effect.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from Washington if the joint resolution will provoke discussion?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think none at all. I can not imagine that there will be any objection to it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will withhold the motion for the present.

Mr. JONES. I wish to call the attention of my colleague to the fact that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has objected to it heretofore, and he is not present this morning.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not know that. I did not know there had been any objection to it.

Mr. JONES. He objected to it a time or two.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator knows that to be the case, I will withdraw the application until the Senator from Ohio is here.

Mr. CULBERSON. I renew my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate resume the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from Missouri pardon me for one inquiry?

Mr. REED. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who has charge of the bill providing for a retired list for volunteer soldiers, what is the disposition as to that bill? I understood it was to be resumed this morning.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The consideration of the bill was to have been resumed this morning if it could have been placed before the Senate. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] secured recognition to call up the conference report, and in order for me to get the bill up at this time it would be necessary for me to supplant the motion that has been made and carried. I realize that that would be difficult for me to do, because there are some Senators who profess to be friends of this measure, and I have no doubt they are, who have said they would not like to displace a conference report with it.

I have tried the best I could from the first to accommodate myself to Senators. I have not pressed the bill unduly. I tried on Saturday, when a Member of the Senate proclaimed that there was nothing for the Senate to do. I tried at that time to get it up, but the quorum was broken, and it was impossible.

Mr. LEWIS. May I understand——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood that the Senator from Missouri yielded to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I only desired to be assured——

Mr. REED. I yielded to the Senator from Illinois for the purpose of an inquiry.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator from Missouri. I was only attempting to ascertain in behalf of myself and others interested that the volunteer retirement bill would not come up to-day, or, if to-day, not until after the conference report was disposed of. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to say to the Senator that I shall take advantage of the first opportunity to get this bill up to-day or any other day. If I could arrange a day certain when it would come up I am sure the Senate would be accommodated. I should like to, but I feel certain I can not.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this bill is entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes." I shall endeavor to show that, if it passes in its present form, the title ought to be amended to read:

"An apology to unlawful restraints and monopolies."

I may be pardoned for briefly stating my position on the various phases of this legislation.

ATTEMPTS TO RESTORE CRIMINAL PENALTIES AND OTHERWISE TO STRENGTHEN THE BILL.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee I insisted from the first on retaining all of the substantive provisions of the House bill except section 3. The section not being before the Senate, I need not further discuss it.

I voted for and insisted upon the retention of every criminal penalty.

When the committee struck out section 2, which sought to prohibit trusts and monopolies from crushing smaller competitors by temporarily cutting prices in the trade territory of a competitor, thus driving him into bankruptcy and out of business, I insisted upon its restoration.

When the committee struck out section 4, which prohibited the owner of an article from stipulating in the contract for lease or sale that the purchaser or lessee must buy his other supplies or goods from the seller or lessor, I contended for the restoration of the section. I renewed this contest upon the floor of the Senate, and when my efforts were defeated by a majority of one I brought forward the same question a second time. Again the Senate refused to restore the section, but the direct result of that contest was the introduction of a substitute section drawn by Senator WALSH. Indeed, the known fact that the Walsh substitute would be offered probably accounts for the majority of the Senate voting against the restoration of the section.

The Walsh substitute prohibited the class of contracts referred to, but limited the prohibition to articles covered by patents. This substitute was offered to meet the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Henry against Dick, rendered March 11, 1912, which I had cited, and which clearly demonstrated that contracts of the character referred to had been held to be legal when they were made with reference to a patented article.

But the Walsh amendment did not contain any penal clause. Upon the floor of the Senate I offered an amendment making the practice referred to a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment for one year, or both, in the discretion of the court. The amendment was adopted.

When the committee struck out various other sections of the bill I protested against that action.

I supported the proposition to make the final judgment or decree of a court "heretofore or hereafter rendered" prima facie evidence in other proceedings.

I supported the proposition not only to prohibit corporations from owning stock of other corporations, if the Government could prove that such acquisition would lessen competition, but I opposed the insertion of the word "substantial," and sought to have such stock ownership absolutely prohibited.

I offered an amendment providing that no corporation other than common carriers having a capital stock and surplus in excess of $250,000,000 could engage in interstate commerce. The amendment was rejected.

I offered an amendment, which appears as section 25 of the bill as it passed the Senate, providing that whenever a corporation shall acquire or consolidate the ownership or control of the plant, franchises, or other properties of corporations, copartnerships, or individuals, so that it shall be adjudged to be a monopoly or combination in restraint of trade, the court rendering such judgment shall not only decree its dissolution but shall appoint receivers and wind up its affairs, and shall divide it so as to restore competition. This amendment was passed in the Senate and stricken out in conference.

I supported an amendment extending the statute of limitations in actions brought against trusts to six years. This amendment has been stricken out in conference.

I have supported every proposition contained in the House bill imposing criminal penalties for trust practices. I have done this because I have believed for years that men who engage in the business not of honest trade but of crushing and destroying business rivals, not of seeking to serve the public for an honest profit but of practicing extortion by the power of combination, should be classed as common criminals, and should be so treated.

I have been further impelled to this course by the fact that the Democratic platforms for years have loudly demanded the imposition of criminal penalties.

I have insisted that the jurisdiction to enforce the provisions of this supplemental trust legislation should not be taken from the courts, but that at least the courts should retain jurisdiction to enforce the provisions of the act, even though a concurrent jurisdiction might be vested in various boards and tribunals.

If my attempts have not been altogether or at all successful, I at least have the satisfaction of knowing that my course is fully justified by the platforms of the Democratic Party, by my own conscience, and, I believe, by the enlightened opinion of the people of my own State

Mr. President, I have said this much of a personal nature, because I want the Senate and so much of the country as is interested to know that the attitude I am assuming here to-day I have maintained from the first.

A Dough-Bullet Bill.

THE CONFERENCE REPORT STRIKES OUT ALL CRIMINAL PENALTIES FOR TRUST PRACTICES.

If the allies had undertaken to stop the German invasion with dough bullets, the soldiers of the Kaiser would have occupied Paris in 24 hours.

So far as its antitrust features are concerned, this is a dough-bullet bill. The powerful and intrenched monopolies can not be driven from their fortifications with that kind of ammunition. The task requires solid shot.

This measure has been loudly heralded as the Clayton antitrust bill It should be now known as the "conferees' capitulation bill." Presumably it was brought forward as the legislative crystallization of the years-old Democratic promise that the trusts should be exterminated root and branch. The people were led to believe that the Democratic Party, now in full possession of all branches of the Government, by this bill intended to make private monopoly, which has hitherto been characterized as "indefensible and intolerable," both unprofitable and dangerous.

In its inception this legislation was a challenge to the field of battle. In its finality it is a sort of Hague propaganda promulgated under white flags to the soothing melodies of "Peace on earth, good will toward the trusts."

The doctrine of extermination has given place to the policy of diplomatic negotiations to be conducted by various boards, with the express understanding that, whatever the result, no law violator is to be hurt, no trust magnate is to be sent to jail, no rude sheriff or marshal is to lay his callous fingers upon the perfumed collar of a captain of industry.

Mr. Rockefeller, like another Richard, can thus soliloquize:

> Now is the winter of our discontent
> Made glorious summer by these conferees,
> And all the clouds that loured upon our house
> In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
> Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
> Our bruised arms hung up for monuments,
> Our stern alarums changed to merry meetings,
> Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
> Grim-visaged war hath smoothed his wrinkled front;
> And now, instead of hiding out in Europe
> To 'scape the fearful process of the courts,
> We caper nimbly in the stock exchange
> To the lascivious pleasing of the ticker.

THE SHERMAN ACT HIGHLY PENAL.

The Sherman Antitrust Act has been upon the books for 24 years. During all that time it has disturbed the dreams and troubled the waking hours of trust magnates.

With brutal frankness and shocking candor it declares that "every person who shall make any contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, or who shall monopolize interstate trade or commerce, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both." By positive command it directs the Department of Justice to enforce its drastic, harsh, and ungentle provisions.

We are now about to prescribe a new procedure which does not contain a single criminal penalty for trusts—not one.

The New Method of Dealing with Trusts.

COMMISSIONS SUBSTITUTED FOR COURTS—INVESTIGATIONS AND ORDERS FOR INDICTMENT AND IMPRISONMENT.

Previous to the enactment of this legislation there was but one road the officers of the law could travel in pursuit of a conspirator against commercial independence.

We have by this bill provided another legal highway, the great length and numerous meanderings and sinuosities of which eventually lead to certain hybrid tribunals called commissions, without power even to enter a final decree. They can neither levy a fine, enforce a mandate, nor send a single culprit to jail. They can not even tax the costs.

After time has for years run its weary course and the ingenuity of counsel has at last failed to furnish an excuse for misconduct or find escape in legal technicality, the worst fate the trust can suffer under this bill is that it may be directed to stop some particular practice, in which event the trust magnate's disappointment is palliated by the consoling reflection that he retains the loot, is in no danger of the jail, and is free to devise some new and equally safe plan of plunder.

Accordingly, having provided the two roads where there was but one, and thus afforded a sometimes reluctant Attorney General the choice of alternatives, it is easy to understand that the one just now created will be most generally employed.

We refuse to lay the knife to the root of the cancer. For the old surgery which cut out the diseased part we have adopted a system of painless poultices as undisturbing to the patient as absent treatment secretly administered.

I venture the prediction that the new procedure will be welcomed by the trusts, because it affords a means of avoiding prosecution in real courts where painful results may follow. Whenever a law violator shall hereafter feel himself in danger of a criminal prosecution, he naturally will rush to some one or the other of the commissions, procure the filing of a charge against him, and thereupon cry, "Sanctuary!"

How the Clayton Bill was Emasculated.

The genesis and progress of this legislation are alike interesting and instructive.

When the Clayton bill was first written it was a raging lion with a mouth full of teeth. It has degenerated to a tabby cat with soft gums, a plaintive mew, and an anemic appearance. It is a sort of legislative apology to the trusts, delivered hat in hand, and accompanied by assurances that no discourtesy is intended.

Before discussing the disintegration of the Clayton bill, I advance these observations:

If the Sherman Act was in itself sufficient to destroy monopoly and prevent restraint of trade, then it needs no change. Amendment of the trust laws can only be justified upon the theory that in some important respect the law has failed to protect against the trust practices under which the people have suffered. If, then, there is a class of evils employed by powerful combinations which oppress the people, which are contrary to sound public policy, and destructive of commercial liberty; if these devices are employed by those who are willing to sacrifice the general welfare for their private emolument and profit, such practices should be denounced by the law, and the perpetrators thereof punished as are other criminals.

If, however, the practices are of so innocent a character as to produce but trifling annoyance, it is a grave question whether legislation is either necessary or desirable.

It is not the business of Congress to undertake to accomplish the impossible task of eradicating every slight or trifling embarrassment. It is our duty to reach the great evils.

After 24 years of experience under the Sherman Antitrust Act it has been concluded that evils of a grave nature do exist which can not be effectively reached under it.

It is recognized that certain vicious practices are constantly employed, not only by existing monopolies, but by those who are engaged in creating monopoly.

These practices are all inherently unjust, oppressive, and wicked; they are perpetrated willfully, deliberately, and premeditatedly; they are not the result of accident, misunderstanding, or mistake; they are as coolly entered upon and cruelly executed as is the plan of a dynamiter who manufactures a bomb to destroy life and property.

There are four well-known devices, each of which has long been employed by the great combinations and trusts of the country to destroy competition. To eradicate these evils the House passed the Clayton bill. If the press is to be credited, so great was the confidence of the President in the learned chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, Mr. Clayton, that he was requested to remain at his post in Congress until the bill could be completed.

The result of his labors was an act defining, prohibiting, and penalizing four of the most oppressive practices of monopoly.

Section 2 prohibited price discriminations done for the purpose of destroying or wrongfully injuring the business of a competitor.

Section 4 denounced tying contracts in general. This is the device by which a manufacturer controlling a patented or staple article compels all who purchase or lease it to agree to purchase other goods or supplies from the seller, thus aiding him in restraining the trade of rivals and enabling him to create a monopoly.

Section 8 prohibited a corporation from owning the capital stock of another corporation where the effect would be to substantially limit or lessen competition.

It also prohibited holding companies where the effect of their stock holdings was to substantially lessen competition.

A violation of any of these sections was punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Section 12 broadly declared that whenever a corporation should violate any of the provisions of the antitrust laws the responsible directors and officers should be guilty of a misdemeanor.

It will be observed that these four sections—2, 4, 8, and 12—applied to trusts and monopolies. They were calculated to reach the principal devices employed by monopoly to crush rivals and despoil the public.

The criminal provisions have been stricken out as to sections 2, 4, and 8. Section 12 is emasculated, as I shall show.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to interrupt the Senator here to say that I do not understand that any one of these sections applied to trusts and monopolies. I understand that the bill was not intended to reach the practices of trusts and monopolies. The members of the Judiciary Committee, at least, did not intend that it should. It was the common belief that the practices of actual trusts and monopolies are already amply taken care of by the law. It was intended to reach the practices that were not the practices of things that have developed into trusts and monopolies, but were practices of trade which, if persevered in and continued and developed, would eventually result in the creation of a monopoly or a trust.

It seems to me that the Senator will hardly be able to justify by the language of the bill the statement now made, that these sections were intended to suppress the practices of trusts and monopolies.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as the bill came from the conference committee it undoubtedly was not intended to suppress the practices of trusts or monopolies; and, in my opinion, it is not calculated to suppress anything, except the rising indignation of the public, by for a time deceiving it into the belief that we are doing something we are not in fact doing.

Mr. WALSH. I referred to the bill as it was presented to us from the House, not to the conference report.

Mr. REED. I make the prediction, notwithstanding the apology of the Senator for the form of this bill——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the remark that the Senator from Montana is apologizing seems to me quite aside from the question. I am apologizing for nothing. I simply challenge the statement of the Senator, now made solemnly, that these four sections were intended, as the bill came from the House, to suppress the practices of trusts and monopolies. As the bill came from the House it was believed and understood that the practices of actual trusts and actual monopolies were already provided for by the law. It was to suppress those practices which, if persevered in and developed, would eventually result in the creation of a monopoly—trusts in their very incipiency, before they had reached the stage where the Sherman Act would take hold of them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, every one of these practices results in a restraint of trade; but the restraint may, nevertheless, be hard to prove. Every one of them tends to monopoly, yet, again, that fact may in a particular case be difficult of legal demonstration. Until they have reached the point of restraint of trade no harm has been done. The purpose of this bill was something more than the Senator would have us believe. I propose to proceed to discuss it in my own way. A little later on I shall refer again to the plea in confession and avoidance which has just been entered.

It is now confessed, therefore, by one of the sponsors of this bill, that it is not intended to touch the trusts and monopolies. I say that the people of the United States have expected us "to touch trusts and monopolies," and I am glad to be met in the early part of this discussion with an admission that we have not laid so much as a finger upon them.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM VIOLATED.

I was remarking when I was interrupted that these four practices had been condemned by Democratic platforms. I shall undertake to show not only that they were condemned but that we specifically pledged the application of criminal penalties to them by our platforms. I might also say that Republican platforms have strongly tended in the same direction. The only platform I know of that has ever proposed to treat these concerns in any other way than by criminal penalties and drastic legislation was the Bull Moose platform, which to-day might be read as a requiem at the dying bedside of that emaciated, discredited, and almost forgotten animal. Inspiring that Bull Moose platform, which is so faithfully followed by this bill, was the Hon. George W. Perkins, author of the Harvester Trust and various other combinations. I shall have more to say of that later.

The Democratic platform of 1912 read as follows:

A private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable. We therefore favor the vigorous enforcement of the criminal as well as the civil law against trusts and trust officials, and demand the enactment of such additional legislation as may be necessary to make it impossible for a private monopoly to exist in the United States.

We favor the prevention of holding companies, of interlocking directorates, of stock watering, of discrimination in price, and the control by any one corporation of so large a proportion of any industry as to make it a menace to competitive conditions.

We condemn the action of the Republican administration in compromising with the Standard Oil Co. and the Tobacco Trust, and its failure to invoke the criminal provisions of the antitrust law against the officers of those corporations after the court had declared that from the undisputed facts in the record they had violated the criminal provisions of the law.

In that section of the platform which begins by anathematizing the trusts and monopolies as indefensible and intolerable and which concludes with a condemnation of the administration of the Department of Justice for not enforcing criminal penalties—between that beginning and end the platform named the four practices specified in this bill, all of which now appear without a criminal penalty being provided.

We also added a further clause to that section of our platform. Let me read it:

We regret that the Sherman antitrust law has received a judicial construction depriving it of much of its efficacy, and we favor the enactment of legislation which will restore to the statute the strength of which it has been deprived by such interpretation.

The very purpose of this legislation was to redeem that platform pledge. It was to restore the strength of the statute and to make it more drastic and all-embracing. It was the purpose of this legislation to extend the criminal penalties to acts which standing by themselves, under the old law, might not be reached because the complainant might not be quite able to prove that trade had actually been restrained or the actual existence of a monopoly.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will it trouble the Senator if I interrupt him there?

Mr. REED. Not at all.

Mr. WALSH. I simply wish to say that the Senator has now expressed quite accurately my idea of this legislation. It is to reach these practices in the case of corporations and others against whom you can not get proof enough to establish that they constitute a trust or monopoly. The Senator has now very accurately expressed my idea of the scope of this legislation.

Mr. REED. And it was also intended to make it so that when an institution like the Standard Oil Co., for the purpose of destroying a rival, cuts the price of oil below the point of the cost of production, by simply proving that fact, together with the fact that the cutting was purely local and not general, you would have made out a good case.

It was intended to reach the trust and deprive it of the power to exercise an enormous control through interlocking directorates.

It was intended to prevent it from owning a majority of the stock of a lot of other corporations, thus controlling a string of corporations and keeping them under one management.

It was intended to reach all of the practices I have named. It was for these purposes the bill was drawn and the criminal penalties attached. It was not intended, as the Senator would have us believe, to reach only those innocent and small institutions which may be doing something that really injures no one. Such institutions call for no legislation.

Criminal penalties were embraced in every one of the four sections of the Clayton bill which I have heretofore set out. As that provision came to us all of them contained this language:

Whoever shall violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

The criminal penalty has in every instance been stricken from the antitrust sections of the bill.

The trusts of the country under this bill can not be fined, can not be imprisoned, can not be sent to jail, can not be punished in any way except by the command "please stop doing what you are now doing."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to understand the Senator's statement.

Mr. REED. Criminal penalties have been reserved in the bill, but they do not touch industrial monopoly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator mean that a trust can not be punished criminally?

Mr. REED. Under this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh.

Mr. REED. That is what I said.

Mr. OVERMAN. What does this mean——

Mr. REED. I know what the Sherman Act means.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course.

Mr. REED. I can almost repeat the Sherman Act verbatim from memory. If the Sherman Act is sufficient unto itself, why need we have even mentioned the word "trust" in this bill? I am complaining because you pretend to pass antitrust legislation, and from that pretended antitrust legislation you have taken the criminal penalties.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, he was one of the many advocates of not touching the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. REED. Certainly, I was opposed to doing anything that would impair or destroy that law.

Mr. OVERMAN. And he admits a trust can be punished and put in the penitentiary now. Then, what is the use for us to pass any legislation regarding the trust itself? This is intended to prevent the formation of a trust.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, Senators will have great difficulty in imposing upon anybody by attempting thus to becloud the issue. I have already said with great distinctness and clearness that the Sherman Antitrust Act does have criminal penalties. I have said with great distinctness and clearness that if it covers trust practices completely and absolutely we do not need any new legislation. I have said with equal distinctness that this new legislation was in its inception supposed to reach certain practices more easily than they could be reached under the old law, and that as to the new legislation you have taken out every criminal penalty applicable to the trust. You preserve them as to railroads and corporations selling to railroads, and the omission of criminal penalties for the trusts is somewhat curious when we find them preserved as to other corporations. Criminal penalties, I remark again, have been preserved in the bill, but in no case do they touch the industrial monopoly. From every section, denouncing the evil practices of these masters of the commercial world, has been drawn the last fang and claw which by any possibility might draw even a drop of blood from the veins of monopoly. The Clayton bill when it started upon its journey was a criminal statute. The remedies proposed were chiefly fine and imprisonment. As the measure comes to us from the conferees it is not, so far as the trusts are concerned, penal; it is merely prohibitive, and the prohibition is to be effectuated through various nonjudicial boards, without power themselves to prohibit or punish.

The bill has been otherwise emasculated. It has been rendered, in my opinion, so far as trust legislation is concerned, absolutely valueless. Let me trace these changes. And, Mr. President, in view of the fact that there are very few Senators in the Chamber, and as a bill of this kind does not appear sufficiently important to elicit their distinguished consideration, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Jones	Perkins	Smoot
Bristow	Kern	Pittman	Sterling
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Poindexter	Swanson
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Thornton
Crawford	Lewis	Reed	Townsend
Culberson	McCumber	Shafroth	Vardaman
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Walsh
Gore	Myers	Shields	Warren
Hitchcock	Nelson	Shively	West
Hughes	Overman	Smith, Ariz.	White
Johnson	Page	Smith, Ga.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent from the Senate on important business. He is paired on all votes with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] on account of illness.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CLARK]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence, by the leave of the Senate, of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr GALLINGER]. He is paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

I wish also to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

I wish also to state that the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is necessarily absent and that he is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. PAGE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS], by leave of the Senate, and to state that he has a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who was suddenly called from the Chamber on an emergency matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

Mr. STONE, Mr. ASHURST, and Mr. MCLEAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

AMENDMENTS FAVORABLE TO TRUSTS.

TRUSTS PROTECTED AGAINST USE OF DECREES AS EVIDENCE.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the original Clayton bill contained certain other provisions of great force and virtue which have been practically destroyed in the conference or in the Senate, but especially in the conference.

Section 3—conference section 4—gave every person injured by anything forbidden in the antitrust laws the right to sue and recover threefold damages.

Section 4—conference section 5—as it left the Senate gave the Government or a private complainant the right to use in evidence any final judgment against a monopoly either heretofore or hereafter rendered.

Under these two sections private citizens or the Government could sue and avail themselves of every decision, decree, and finding rendered up to the date of trial and they could be introduced in evidence, and the work of traveling over the same ground at enormous labor and expense obviated.

The conferees have practically destroyed this valuable right by providing that judgments heretofore obtained can not be used in evidence. Not content with that emasculation, they have added this indefensible and detestable provision:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees rendered in criminal proceedings or suits in equity now pending in which the taking of testimony has been commenced but has not been concluded: Provided, That such judgments or decrees are rendered before any further testimony is taken.

When the conferees eliminated the word "heretofore" they cut off from use as evidence the findings and judgments rendered in the 82 great trust cases which have been heretofore decided against the trusts. These cases embrace such important suits as the Standard Oil case, American Tobacco case, Joint Traffic Association case, Northern Securities case, the Lumber Co. case, the Harvester Trust case, and many others, a list of which I herewith furnish, and which I desire to have printed as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

LIST OF CASES DECIDED UNDER THE SHERMAN ANTITRUST ACT IN WHICH THE GOVERNMENT WAS SUCCESSFUL.

United States v. Jellico Mountain Coal Co.

United States v. American Coal Products Co. et al.
United States v. The New Departure Manufacturing Co. et al.
United States v. Thompson et al.
United States v. International Harvester Co. of America.
The Eastern States Lumber Dealers' Association case.
The Bituminous Coal case.
The Alaska Transportation cases.
The Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association case.
The National Wholesale Jewelers' Association case.
The Thread case.
The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. case.

Mr. REED. Briefly and broadly speaking, the above cases embrace the entire field of trust litigation; they cover the practices and relate to the conduct of the principal trusts of the United States. These trusts are still in existence. They are still following the very practices denounced by this bill, many of them now liable to the private citizen and to the Government for infractions of the law; and yet, after the Government has gone to the expense in all these 82 cases of collecting the evidence, of proving a case, and of obtaining judgment, the conferees provide that the evidence, judgments, and records can not be used against any one of the already convicted criminals.

Why is that restriction put into this bill? Why did the conferees thus destroy the vitality of the bill? Why so tender to the convicted Standard Oil Co.? Why should we now deny to a citizen or to a State having further litigation with that company the right to use the record already made? Why should a State or a citizen, finding itself or himself oppressed by that great monster of the commercial world, be forced again to gather the testimony now on file? Why compel future litigants to do again the work performed by my State? Missouri sent its attorney general to the city of New York, there to be met by the refusal of the officers of the Standard Oil Co. to testify. He was compelled to go into court and obtain an order for the arrest of the recalcitrants, to spend eight or nine months of time in dragging from their reluctant lips and from their musty files evidence of their iniquity. Why should this evidence not be used by other litigants? Why should the Standard Oil Co. be thus favored by the conferees?

Mr. President, I raise the question of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Swanson
Bristow	Lewis	Reed	Thompson
Colt	McCumber	Shafroth	Thornton
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Townsend
Gore	Nelson	Shields	Vardaman
Hitchcock	Overman	Shively	Walsh
Jones	Page	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Kern	Pittman	Smith, Ga.	West
Lea, Tenn.	Poindexter	Smoot	Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. ASHURST, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. STERLING responded to their names when called.

Mr. WHITE, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. SIMMONS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, Senators evidently are engaged in something else this morning, and in recognition of that fact I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request for the yeas and nays seconded? [A pause.] Not one-fifth of the Senators present have seconded the request for the yeas and nays. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to determine. Those in favor of the motion to adjourn will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] It is quite evident the motion is lost.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know what the regular order is.

Mr. CULBERSON. There is a standing order, as I understand, that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can not be a standing order to that effect.

Mr. CULBERSON. It has been frequently understood heretofore that there was such an order. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. CHILTON, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. LANE, and Mr. STONE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, why should not this Government or any State of the Union or any private citizen, having been wronged by the Harvester Trust, and required to prove the fact that a trust exists, be allowed to lay down in court the transcript of the evidence secured by months of labor and toil, together with the decree of the court, against that company? Why should not the dealer in agricultural implements in the State of New Jersey or in the State of Arizona or in any other State, when he finds that the Harvester Trust has by some of its practices injured him in his business, be allowed in his suit for damages to lay down the record and decree in order to make his case, so far as the facts covered by the decree are pertinent? Why should he, having been injured but a few hundred or thousand dollars, be obliged to spend tens of thousands of dollars in traveling over a road that has already been painfully pursued by the Government? Why should he be obliged to take depositions all over the United States, to chase down the reluctant witnesses, and finally to bring into court the identical evidence which has already been gathered by the Government and solemnly preserved of record? What tender sentiment for the Harvester Trust inspired the conferees to deprive the people of the United States of that privilege which was written into this bill when it left the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAPP in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Has the entire section with reference to this matter been cut out, or has it simply been modified?

Mr. REED. It has been modified by striking out the word "heretofore." As the section read, it provided that a decision heretofore or hereafter rendered could be used in evidence. The conferees struck out the word "heretofore," and then—as I stated while my friend the Senator, I think, was temporarily absent from the Chamber—they added a clause cutting out substantially all of the pending cases. When they took out the word "heretofore" they cut off as evidence the 82 great trust decisions already rendered. When they added the proviso to which I shall presently call attention they substantially cut out all of the 46 cases now pending.

That provision is as follows:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken—

That clearly relates to the future and covers every case that may ever be brought where there is a consent judgment—

Provided further, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees rendered in criminal proceedings or suits in equity now pending in which the taking of testimony has been commenced but has not been concluded, provided such judgments or decrees are rendered before any further testimony is taken.

But I return to my theme, if the Senator will pardon me, and shall come again to this particular phase of it.

Why should a tobacco dealer in any State of the Union who believes he has been robbed and despoiled by the practices of the Tobacco Trust, and who desires to bring a suit for treble damages, be compelled to travel up and down the earth to produce the same witnesses and bring forward the identical evidence that has already been gathered by the Government, preserved in bills of exception, approved by the final decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and solemnly crystallized into a decree by that great court? Why this tenderness for the Tobacco Trust? Why deal so gently and so kindly with these concerns that have ridden roughshod over the law; that have defied the courts for an entire lifetime? By what process of reasoning do the conferees justify their act in eliminating from evidentiary value the decisions already rendered?

Of course their action will be very pleasantly received in the office of every trust attorney in the United States. With this section in the bill as it passed from the Senate every man desiring to sue any one of the 82 concerns that have been convicted would have at hand the evidence that would make out the main body of his case and would be put to no greater exertion than is necessary simply to prove the damage he has suffered. The fact that the concern is a monopoly, the fact that it is engaged in a conspiracy against trade, the fact that it exists for the purpose of destroying competition, the fact that it has an enormous capital, vast resources, an army of agents—all of these things will be at hand; and he can lay down the decree in a court where his case is on trial and thus will have made out the hardest part of his case. But the conferees have relieved the tobacco company of that danger.

Mr. President, if the Government of the United States has a further controversy with the institutions concerned in and a part of the Joint Traffic Association, which was convicted in a suit brought on January 8, 1896, why should it be compelled again to find and introduce the same evidence which it has already once introduced?

Why should any city, town, or village desiring to purchase cast-iron pipe through which to conduct water to its inhabitants, upon discovering that the Cast-Iron Pipe Trust has a monopoly in that section of the country, and is engaged in charging extortionate prices, be compelled to go back and prove ab initio that that concern is a trust, to bring forward evidence as to the kind and character of organizations under which it operates, and to produce witnesses to swear to its various methods of procedure? Why should this be necessary, when in the case of the United States against the Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. all that evidence was accumulated, carefully sifted by the trial court, scrutinized and analyzed by the appellate courts, and finally its reception approved by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Of course the manager of that trust is delighted when he reads this conference report. He knows now that if anybody sues him that individual must spend thousands and perhaps tens of thousands of dollars again gathering the evidence, plodding wearily over the land, hunting for witnesses who are skilled in dogging subpœnas.

Why should a man or a State seeking to reach the National Association of Retail Druggists be compelled to produce anew the same evidence the Government has once gathered—evidence taken with the attorneys of that concern in court, evidence taken when it was given the full and complete right to defend itself?

Why should a citizen now being oppressed be forced to go out and get that same evidence? Of course the Retail Druggists' Association is delighted on this balmy autumn afternoon to know that the danger has been removed by 8 or 10 men sitting in conference.

Why should some shipper, finding that the old Reading outrage is still being perpetrated and desiring relief, be compelled to tread the wine press alone, although the vintage has already been trampled by the Government and a decision upon the law and facts rendered?

To compel the private citizen to collect this evidence again is to deny him justice and to permit the monopoly already convicted to go untouched by the lash of the law. Why this tenderness for this particular trust?

If the Union Pacific Railroad Co. were again to get into litigation with the Government, involving a question of combination, why should not the existing decree, so far as it is pertinent, and the evidence which has been collected be utilized again by the Government?

If Mr. Frank Hayne and Mr. James N. Patten were again to undertake to run a corner in cotton, why should not the evidence already taken in their cases, if pertinent to the issues, be available?

When the United States tried and convicted the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Co. and had it fined $51,000 because it was a criminal, why should we be so gentle and tender with that criminal, if it again violates the law, as to deny the Government the right to use the evidence heretofore taken, if pertinent to the case?

The Government had a long battle with the General Electric Co. It made its case so firm that the company knew there was no possibility of escape, and so it consented to a decree. Of course that decree was not entered by the consent of an innocent concern. It was entered because guilt was so overwhelming and the evidence so conclusive that there was no escape. The lawyers had looked for every loophole, they had seized upon every technicality, had examined every avenue of escape, and seeing none, this beneficent institution consented to a decree. Now, because of the conference amendment, a citizen wronged by the practices the Government inveighed against in its petition can not use this solemn admission of guilt, lest the tender sensibilities of the confessed criminal shall be wounded. The institution ought to banquet those who are so kind to it.

There were some enterprising gentlemen under the name of W. P. Palmer et al. who entered into a combination under the title of the Weather Proof & Magnet Wire Association. They were violating the law. Of course they knew they were violating the law. They were indicted in some seven cases. Sometimes there were 33, sometimes 38, sometimes 17, sometimes 15, sometimes 14, and sometimes 10 defendants. They contended until contention was not only useless but dangerous, and then 36 defendants entered pleas of nolo contendere, and were fined $128,700. Now, a citizen wronged by this combination, robbed by these criminals, can not under this report of the conferees, if it becomes a law, introduce in evidence the record showing their plea of guilty.

Mr. President, I might continue to read case after case until I had read the eighty-six, and I could continue to iterate and reiterate what I have now said with reference to certain of the cases and make it applicable to all.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire of the Senator if he understands the purport of the bill as it is recommended by the conference committee to reach the case of a judgment entered on a plea of guilty.

Mr. REED. I do; a judgment by consent, in my opinion, covers a judgment entered upon a plea of nolo contendere.

Mr. WALSH. Now——

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me, whether it is so covered or not all the old judgments are cut out under that clause of the bill which excepts all judgments heretofore rendered.

Mr. WALSH. I was not referring to that.

Mr. REED. I think it would be cut out now under the language of the bill even after judgment.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I wanted to inquire of the Senator. He thinks that the term "consent judgment" would reach to a judgment entered on a plea of guilty?

Mr. REED. I think it would. It is a judgment nolo contendere. It is really a judgment by consent.

Mr. WALSH. I would scarcely give that significance to the language.

Mr. REED. The language is this:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken.

Of course back of that lies the other provision, that past judgments are excepted.

Provided further, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees rendered in criminal proceedings or suits in equity now pending, in which the taking of testimony has been commenced but has not been concluded, provided such judgments or decrees are rendered before any further testimony is taken.

It is my opinion, from that language, that the deduction must be drawn that the exception applies to criminal as well as civil consents. The only way you can consent in a criminal case is by an absolute plea of guilty or the plea nolo contendere.

Mr. WALSH. Of course I understand that all past judgments are excluded, likewise judgments now entered in cases pending by consent as well as past judgments by consent, but I scarcely think the Senator will care to say that judgments hereafter entered upon a plea of guilty would fall under the discrimination of consent judgments or decrees, because I take it that no criminal would ever consent that a judgment be entered against him when he pleads guilty. The judgment goes as a matter of course against him. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. REED. May I suggest to the Senator that without a statute expressly giving the right to use a decree the decree can not be used. So silence in the statute is deadly unless the observation I am now about to make is correct. But I will make that when the Senator has concluded his interruption.

Mr. WALSH. I have nothing further to say, except that the Senator will remember this was the subject of rather earnest discussion when the bill was before the Senate, and I think the Senator will recall that I took the position—and I encountered the opposition of the Senator—that the judgment should be made not only prima facie but conclusive in an action subsequently brought. If it be made prima facie, I see no reason why it should not be applicable to past decrees, but I am concerned now with reference to the meaning of the thing in the future. I am not able to agree with the Senator that in the future the judgment entered upon a plea of guilty in a criminal action would not be available under the proposed statute.

Mr. REED. Before the Senator takes his seat, since he has stated that he desired in the committee to have these judgments made conclusive——

Mr. WALSH. And on the floor as well as in the committee.

Mr. REED. And also on the floor, and that then I took the position that they should be made only prima facie, the Senator ought to say, in fairness to me, that I stated all along that if they could be made conclusive without impinging upon the Constitution and without destroying the validity of the law, I desired to have them made conclusive; but I doubted, and so the Attorney General's office doubted, the ability to make them conclusive; and lest we might destroy the law by going too far, and because I thought that if they were made prima facie they would be almost as valuable as if made conclusive, I took the position in favor of prima facie.

Mr. WALSH. Of course I am very glad to say that was the Senator's position and as well the position of all the members of the Judiciary Committee who objected to making the decree conclusive. My own judgment about the matter is that it is a right, as I said in the course of the debate on the floor, of very little value when it is made only prima facie evidence.

Mr. REED. I do not agree with the Senator on that. I believe if the judgment is made evidentiary and is sufficient to make out a prima facie case the jury will take care of the rest of the job.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I want to see if we agree on what this section actually accomplishes in express terms. Section 5 as it now is says:

That a final judgment or decree hereafter rendered in any criminal prosecution or in any suit or proceeding in equity brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any suit or proceeding brought by any other party.

That general clause limits all these judgments to the judgments which are hereafter taken. That is clear enough. Then it says:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken.

It cuts out all judgments that are rendered and all judgments entered by consent or decree entered before testimony has been taken.

Provided further, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees rendered in criminal proceedings or suits in equity, now pending, in which the taking of testimony has been commenced but has not been concluded, provided such judgments or decrees are rendered before any further testimony is taken.

That last proposition is a very peculiar provision and would seem to have been made to fit a particular case; that is, a case that is now pending in which the testimony is closed. There seems to be a case in existence that would just fit in there exactly.

Mr. LEWIS. In this connection——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from Idaho does he mean to give us the information that from his viewpoint the statute prohibits all future judgments? The Senator used the words "future judgments." Does the Senator think the provision prohibits the use of any future judgments as prima facie evidence in civil proceedings?

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no. Did I say "future judgments"?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator said so. I thought it must have been an error, or I had read the statute wrong.

Mr. BORAH. It was an error. I am obliged to the Senator. I said that all judgments heretofore rendered were cut out by the general clause to begin with. Then it says:

That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken.

That would include future judgments, that particular class, would it not?

Provided further, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees rendered in criminal proceedings or suits in equity, now pending, in which the taking of testimony has been commenced but has not been concluded—

That would cover future judgments as to that particular class. Of course the future judgments which are entered, however, are limited to a particular class of judgments.

Mr. OVERMAN. That only applies to suits that have been brought. It will not apply to suits hereafter brought.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say, answering the Senator from Idaho, if I may be pardoned by the Senator from Missouri, granting his viewpoint, if I am in error that it may be corrected, I assume that the provisions had been put in with a view to facilitating the Government to carry out consent matters which had been entered into in the form of settlement in equity proceedings wherein the defendant had possibly come into court and agreed upon a decree and thus relieved the Government of the necessity of taking evidence and the great expense incident thereto. I had in mind that possibly the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad litigation, which is now under settlement, was one of the things in consideration, and that if the provision to which the Senator from Missouri alludes had been left as it originally was the proceedings would have probably fallen, as the defendants would not wish to consent to a peaceable settlement with the Government when it was to act as a basis of private lawsuits for private individuals upon which to collect damages; but that hereafter having knowledge that such was not the basis of future civil proceedings it would then consent to a peaceful settlement with a full knowledge of the consequence.

I have an idea the object was to exclude those particular negotiations which are now on foot and which were undertaken before this provision was framed and in order to facilitate rather than to retard them. If I am in error as to that, and the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Missouri think I am, I should like to be corrected. I merely offered that as my reason for thinking that was the motive for the exception.

Mr. BORAH. Of course I would not assume that the Senator from Illinois is in error as to his understanding of the provision, but I call the Senator's attention to this provision:

That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken.

That would cover any judgment of that kind which is entered under those circumstances in suits brought in the future, would it not?

Mr. LEWIS. I am intruding on the time of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I am glad to accommodate.

Mr. LEWIS. I dare say that provision has in contemplation the encouragement of the defendants coming into court and confessing their violation of law wherever found, where there had not been a deliberate or criminal intent to allow them to escape the consequences by an honest confession and future avoidance, without penalizing them by this other section, which will enable persons to sue them in damages, but to enable persons to sue them in damages wherever they had held an attitude of belligerency to the Government and exposed the Government to the necessity of large costs in undertaking through the court to escape. I assume that that must be the reason.

Mr. REED. Let us assume that is the reason, and let us analyze it for a moment. In the first place, the Government ought not to desire that any citizen, individual or corporate, should ever come into court and confess to a violation of law unless the law has been violated. Nobody ought to hold out an inducement of any kind to seduce an unwary trust into a confession of guilt if it be not guilty. On the other hand, if it be guilty, will the Senator from Illinois tell me why it should not respond in damages, as the law says it should? Why, sir, if a trust be guilty of a restraint of trade, that is not enough to give me the right to recover damages against it; I must, in addition to showing that it has restrained trade, show that it has thrust its hand into my pocket and taken my money. If it has done that, why should it not respond to me in damages? Why should the Government deprive me of the evidence incident to a confession of guilt?

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no question about responding in damages if guilty. It is only a question as to the introduction of testimony.

Mr. REED. Ah, but that is the whole question we are debating.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is not the question. They can bring suit just like they always could.

Mr. REED. Certainly. We propose by this section to extend the law so that if a citizen be wronged or the Government be again wronged the evidence once taken in a case may be used in subsequent litigation. It is now admitted that that is the proper theory upon which to proceed.

Mr. OVERMAN rose.

Mr. REED. Wait just a moment and then I will yield further. We are discussing this particular phase of the question: Shall the citizen or the Government be allowed to use a confession of guilt made in one suit in another suit and thus avoid the necessity of proving the case anew? Now, mark you, that does not make out a complete case for the citizen; he can not recover a penny unless he has been damaged and proves his damages.

Mr. OVERMAN. He ought not to.

Mr. REED. He should not recover damages, and he can not under any phase of this bill as it was originally drawn, as it left the Senate, or in any other phase unless he proves his damage. But he can be relieved of searching for evidence of the wrongful acts of a trust if they have already been proven or confessed.

Mr. OVERMAN. The reason why I rose was to ask a question. I understood the Senator to say that the Government was depriving him of the right to bring suit for damages.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I said this bill as amended deprives him of the right to use a confession of guilt as evidence.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us understand that. That is not true at all.

Mr. REED. It deprives him of the benefit of the evidence.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of making it prima facie evidence.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. And it ought to.

Mr. REED. And when the Government does deprive the ordinary citizen of the right to use that evidence it has substantially deprived him of the right to recover, and for the reason following: In order to prove the combination and the conspiracy upon which his suit for damages must be bottomed it is necessary to take evidence which is so difficult to obtain that it is well-nigh impossible for a private citizen to secure it. So when you deny him the evidence you practically deny him his remedy, and it is for that reason——

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator contend that there is anything in this bill that deprives any citizen of the United States of any right he has now?

Mr. REED. I am not talking about the deprivation of rights that now exist. We are sitting here in Congress supposed to be passing a remedial statute. We are supposed to be doing something now in response to the demands of a certain document I am about to read. We are supposed to be here for the purpose of affording the citizens of this country rights that they do not now possess. But when we consider what has been done by the conferees to this section we find that they have cut out its vitals.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator it is true, and he knows it is true, that we have not deprived a citizen of a solitary shade or shadow of a single right he has now in the courts.

Mr. REED. You have not done it because you could not do it, but I am going to show in a minute that you have tried to do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator can not show it.

EVEN THE RECORD SHOWING A PLEA OF GUILTY CAN NOT BE SHOWN IN EVIDENCE.

Mr. REED. I will stop and show it now. When a criminal stands in a court of justice and pleads guilty, that plea of guilty can be introduced in evidence against him in any case where his guilt is in question—not the judgment, perhaps, but the fact that he pleaded guilty can be shown. Let me illustrate. A man murders the husband of a woman; he pleads guilty to murder. There is a statute in the State giving the widow the right to recover damages in case her husband has been wrongfully killed. She can put a witness on the stand and prove that the defendant stood up in court and said "I am guilty"; she can introduce the indictment and the fact. You have tried to cut that kind of evidence out.

Let me illustrate further: A man defrauds another of $10,000; he is indicted for it; he pleads guilty in court——

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator does not contend that that applies in this case?

Mr. REED. Just a moment until I finish my sentence. The injured party thereupon sues him to recover a civil judgment for $10,000. Under the law now he can introduce the indictment and the fact that the man stood in court and pleaded guilty to the indictment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator from Missouri contend that there is anything in this bill which applies to suits between individuals of the kind of which he is speaking?

Mr. REED. Why, certainly. This applies to that class of evidence, of course; it is limited to trust cases; there can not be any doubt about that; and you have tried to cut out the pleas of guilty in trust cases. You have got no more right to destroy the evidentiary value of a plea of guilty in a trust case than in the case of an embezzler or a murderer. The evidence in either case can be used without any statute. Here is what you said:

That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken.

In other words, you can not introduce the record if there has been a plea of guilty. What is a consent judgment?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is under the antitrust laws.

Mr. REED. Certainly that is under the antitrust laws. I go further and say that in a civil suit where there has been a consent judgment the decree can be introduced without any statute. You can not generally introduce the evidence that has been preserved in the bill of exceptions, but you can introduce in evidence the plea or the consent to the entry of judgment. This is a right independent of any statute. This right you have sought to take away in trust suits.

There is a reason why a consent judgment or plea of guilty should be received that does not apply to an ordinary judgment. What is it? An ordinary judgment is rendered generally upon a disputed set of facts. The questions are in controversy. The jury may make a mistake; the judge may commit an error; but, sir, when a man goes into court and consents to a decree, it is his solemn admission of record, it imports verity; there can be no mistake. When a man consents to a decree he comes in admitting the charge. There is no mistake of a jury; no error of law or of fact on the part of the court in such a case. The man sitting in judgment upon his own acts confesses his own guilt.

By this bill the conferees say that plea should not be introduced in evidence against him. Absurdity could go no further than that; tenderness for trusts could lead us to no greater extreme. There is not an attorney for the Steel Trust in the United States, big attorney or little, who would have had the temerity to have asked that the bill be thus amended. No final judgment heretofore rendered can be introduced in evidence; and for all practical purposes neither the evidence nor judgments in any case now pending can be used in other cases. Even when the parties have said, "Here we are; we are guilty; we admit it; we have been violating the law; we did it with our eyes open," we by this bill propose to say to the injured and innocent party who has a suit against the culprit, "You can not prove that fact in your suit where you are seeking to get back the money of which you were robbed by the scoundrel who has just admitted his guilt."

Oh, this is a great antitrust Congress! Compared with the Congress that put upon the statute books the Sherman Act, we appear as would a lot of wet nurses in comparison with soldiers on the field of battle, arms in hand. If we had the original Sherman Act before this Congress the "trust busters" of the present day and generation would shy like the country horse of 15 years ago did at the sight of an automobile. You would not find this Congress using this violent and offensive language of the Sherman Act:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal.

Offer that to-day, and immediately speculation would begin. "What, every contract! Think how far-reaching that is; you will catch some innocent who has sinned through inadvertence. I pray you be not so harsh." What would this Congress do if asked to enact into law this fearful language which follows that which I have just read:

Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

"What! Take an unsuspecting merchant"—would say the latter-day legislator—"take an innocent merchant who has formed an innocent little combination to skin the public, ravish him from the bosom of his family, tear him from the loving arms of his wife, and haul him away to jail with the cries of his children ringing in his ears—will you do such a wicked thing as that?" Such would be the arguments we would now hear.

Well, old John Sherman and the Republicans of that day did pass that law. Their "little fingers were bigger than our loins." Theirs was the spirit of the eagle, ours that of the barnyard fowl. "Be careful, do not let it be proven in evidence that a man has plead guilty to violating the Sherman law." So say the worthy conferees. Mr. President, the gorge rises as we contemplate that provision.

Let me read you a testimonial on this subject. I am careful to tell you it is a quotation, lest I should be adjudged guilty of using extreme language. It was the prophecy of this legislation itself, a different kind of prophecy, too, than we find in the statements of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who says this bill was not to have anything to do with trusts:

I hope that we shall agree in giving private individuals who claim to have been injured by these processes the right to found their suits for redress upon the facts and judgments proved and entered in suits by the Government where the Government has upon its own initiative sued the combinations complained of and won its suit, and that the statute of limitations shall be suffered to run against such litigants only from the date of the conclusion of the Government's action. It is not fair that the private litigant should be obliged to set up and establish again the fact which the Government has proved. He can not afford—

Where now is my friend, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who asked what rights we were depriving these private litigants of? Let him listen as I read further:

He has not the power to make use of such processes of inquiry as the Government has command of. Thus shall individual justice be done while the processes of business are rectified and squared with the general conscience.

As I read that splendid example of English you all know from its rhythmic sound and its terseness of expression that it came from the pen of Woodrow Wilson. Now, what say the conferees? "It is right to deprive the citizen of this evidence in all cases that have been tried. It is right to deprive the citizen of the evidence in all cases that are pending, or nearly all of them. It is right to deprive the citizen, not only now but in the future, of the right to use all consent decrees."

I ask Senators, some of whom have claimed such devoted adherence to the President, how many propose to square this abortive provision with the demand made by the President.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Jones	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Kern	Page	Smoot
Chamberlain	Lane	Perkins	Swanson
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Thornton
Clapp	Lewis	Reed	Vardaman
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Warren
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	West
Hitchcock	Myers	Shields	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. WHITE responded to their names when called.

Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. STERLING, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. LEE of Maryland, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. OWEN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what is the result of the call? Is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the call. A quorum is not present.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After a little delay Mr. STONE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in addition to the words of the President's message relating to this particular topic I desire to read a line or two further. Indeed, I desire to read all of that clause of his message and then ask Senators, some of whom have claimed such devoted adherence to the President, how they propose to square this abortive provision with the demand made by the President. It occupies an important part of the President's message. He said:

THE BILL VIOLATES THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

There is another matter in which imperative considerations of justice and fair play suggest thoughtful remedial action. Not only do many of the combinations effected or sought to be effected in the industrial world work an injustice upon the public in general; they also directly and seriously injure the individuals who are put out of business in one unfair way or another by the many dislodging and exterminating forces of combination.

Notice, the President was talking about trusts and monopolies already formed. Notice, he was discussing conditions now existent. He was not engaging in an expedition in the nebulous region of the future; neither was he dealing with the innocent practices of small concerns. The language of his message had to do with trusts and monopolies and with the practices by them indulged. He adds what I have already read, but I read it now that it may appear in the context.

I hope that we shall agree in giving private individuals who claim to have been injured by these processes the right to found their suits for redress upon the facts and judgments proved and entered in suits by the Government where the Government has upon its own initiative sued the combinations complained of and won its suit, and that the statute of limitations shall be suffered to run against such litigants only from the date of the conclusion of the Government's action. It is not fair that the private litigant should be obliged to set up and establish again the facts which the Government has proved. He can not afford, he has not the power, to make use of such processes of inquiry as the Government has command of. Thus shall individual justice be done while the processes of business are rectified and squared with the general conscience.

I have laid the case before you, no doubt as it lies in your own mind, as it lies in the thought of the country. What must every candid man say of the suggestions I have laid before you, of the plain obligations of which I have reminded you? That these are new things for which the country is not prepared? No; but that they are old things, now familiar, and must of course be undertaken if we are to square our laws with the thought and desire of the country. Until these things are done, conscientious business men the country over will be unsatisfied. They are in these things our mentors and colleagues. We are now about to write the additional articles of our constitution of peace, the peace that is honor and freedom and prosperity.

Thus said the President on the 20th day of January, 1914. He asked for laws applicable to the practices of trusts and combinations. He asked for relief in the name of oppressed and outraged business. He asked it in the name of the conscience of the country. Now come the conferees with soft and gloved hands, with tender and delicate words, proposing to cut off the business man of the country who has been wronged and injured from the right to use any of the decisions that have been heretofore rendered, and practically cutting him off from the benefit of the decisions in cases which are now pending.

Mr. President, there are now pending some 46 important cases. I have here a long list which I desire to have printed in the RECORD. A few of the cases in the list may have been decided since the document I am quoting from was prepared; but, whether decided or pending, they come within the purview of this exception.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). Without objection, the request of the Senator from Missouri is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CASES PENDING UNDER THE SHERMAN ANTITRUST ACT.

United States v. Motion Pictures Patents Co.
United States v. Prince Line (Ltd.).
United States v. Keystone Watch Case Co.
United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co.

United States v. Board of Trade of the City of Chicago et al.
United States v. The Master Horseshoers' National Protective Association of America et al.
United States v. New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co.

Mr. REED. Why, Mr. President, I can imagine the organizers of the Tobacco Trust, the organizers of the Sugar Trust, the organizers of the Standard Oil Co., the men who looted the New Haven Railroad—I can imagine these and a host of others not like three but like scores of witches around the caldron, which contains this so-called antitrust medicine, singing as sang the witches of Macbeth—the lines being brought down to date:

Let the caldron boil and bubble,
This bill won't give any trouble.

Mr. President, somebody has stated that these concerns might have pleaded guilty without knowing that the decree could afterward be used against them. What a harsh thing it would be, now, to use the decree! What an outrage is involved in the thought of using a decree rendered in a case which was resisted to the end! Again, what injury or wrong is done by using in future litigation the confession of guilt that a guilty man has made?

Mr. President, I pass from this particular section, which is section 6 of the House bill, section 4 of the Senate bill, and section 5 of the conferee's report.

COMMITTEE VIOLATES INSTRUCTIONS OF BOTH HOUSES OF CONGRESS.

I now desire to call the attention of the Senate to certain other emasculations this bill has suffered, especially to the action of the conferees with reference to section 3 of the conferees' report. I challenge any man to justify the action of the conferees upon this section. I affirm that the conferees have undertaken to repudiate the instructions given by both Houses of Congress; that they have assumed the right to make this section of the bill themselves to suit themselves. I declare that if this practice can be here justified we might as well abolish debates upon the floor and votes in the Chambers and simply appoint a conference committee to go out and make a bill to suit itself.

If I understand anything of the business of conferees, it is this: It is the duty of the Senate conferees to contend for that which the Senate has done; it is the duty of the House conferees to contend for that which the House has done; and when they find contention means disagreement, then one or the other of them will yield to the other or they will compromise the differences, each side yielding in part. But that they have the authority to strike out the instructions of both Houses, to repudiate the action in each case of their principals, to write something that suits them and that is in the teeth of the instructions of both Houses, I utterly deny.

The section to which I refer, as it came from the House, read as follows:

That any person engaged in commerce who shall lease or make a sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Now, notice that was a broad section. It prohibited all classes of tying contracts. It was not limited to patented articles or to tying contracts relating to patented articles, but it embraced and covered the patented article along with every other kind of article.

The section was stricken out by the Senate Judiciary Committee. I brought the question to the attention of the Senate by a motion to restore the section. The vote on that motion showed a majority of one against restoring the section as it came from the House. I renewed the motion later, and again it was defeated; but the principal reason the House provision was not restored is to be found in the fact that it was well known upon the floor that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] intended to offer a substitute. That substitute was afterwards offered by the Senator from Montana and read as follows:

That it shall not be lawful to insert or incorporate a condition in any contract relating to the sale or lease of or license to use any article or process protected by a patent or patents the effect of which will be to prohibit or restrict the purchaser, lessee, or licensee from using any article or class of articles, whether patented or not, or any patented process, supplied or owned by any person other than the seller, lessor, or licensor, or his nominees, or the effect of which will be to require the purchaser, lessee, or licensee to acquire from the seller, lessor, or licensor, or his nominees any article or class of articles not protected by the patent; and any such conditions shall be null and void, as being in restraint of trade and contrary to public policy.

Mr. President, the distinction between the substitute offered by the Senator from Montana and section 4 as passed by the House was this: Section 4 as passed by the House covered all articles, patented and unpatented——

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. And all classes of tying contracts attached to those articles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President; the Senator is mistaken. The Senate committee put in the words "patented or unpatented."

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that was upon the Senator's own motion.

Mr. REED. Yes; that is true. The words were put in as a matter of precaution. Nevertheless, the general language of the bill as it came from the House would, in my opinion, have covered patented articles, certainly that is true, except for a case which had been overlooked, undoubtedly, in the House, and which was not considered until the bill came to the Senate. The case I refer to is the one known as Henry against Dick, in which it was held that a patentee had the lawful right to make a tying contract. Whether or not this section as it came from the House would have covered patented articles, such was clearly its purpose and intent, because the language was—who shall lease or make a sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities—

And so forth.

The distinction, then, between the House bill and the Senate substitute as offered by Senator WALSH was that the House bill was intended to cover all kinds of articles, whereas the substitute was intended to apply only to patented articles. The House bill in covering all classes of goods was undoubtedly intended to cover patented goods. There was this further distinction: Senator WALSH's amendment had no penal clause. Thereupon I offered to amend the section by adding these words:

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

That amendment was adopted by the Senate. Now, how stood the case? The House had prohibited tying contracts as applied to all classes of goods, and had provided a criminal penalty. The Senate cut down the scope of the House section, making it apply to only one of the classes of goods covered by the House section, and added the criminal penalty to that. The conferees of the House were in duty bound to stand for the criminal penalty, because the House had put it on not only with reference to patented and unpatented articles but with reference to other articles. The Senate conferees were bound to stand for it, because the Senate had specifically put it on with reference to patented articles. Then the conferees got together and took out the criminal clause as to everything. When they did so they violated their instructions from both wings of this Capitol.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Section 2 and section 4 were stricken from the House bill by the Senate. Those two sections then came up in conference. Our section 2, which was the Walsh amendment, as passed by the Senate, amended the House bill. Then our section 2 and the House sections 2 and 4 all went into conference. The conferees, of course, under the instructions of the Senate, could not accept as they were sections 2 and 4 of the House bill, and absolutely declined to accept section 2 of the House bill. The matter was settled by a compromise, by putting in "patented or unpatented articles" and adopting sections 2 and 4 without the penalty.

Mr. REED. Since the Senator has gone into the reasons of the conferees, I should like to ask him if the House conferees insisted on taking out the criminal clause from their own section, which you were restoring?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it was a common agreement of the conferees since the establishment of the Trade Commission that that ought to be left with the Trade Commission.

Mr. REED. In other words, the House conferees did not insist upon taking out the criminal penalty that the House had put in and although the Trade Commission bill had been passed before we passed this bill through the Senate, and although we had added a criminal penalty here, you consented to have it stricken out.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator from North Carolina to say that the reason for taking out the provision with reference to punishment was because it was thought unnecessary in view of the Trade Commission act.

Mr. OVERMAN. We concluded that it ought to be looked after by the Trade Commission; that that would prevent these discriminations.

Mr. BORAH. The first fruit, then, of the Trade Commission act is to eliminate the criminal liability from this trust act?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; the Trade Commission having defined it, making it unlawful, it was recognized that there was the jurisdiction under the Trade Commission to stop it whenever they saw it exercised.

Mr. BORAH. It does give jurisdiction to stop it, but nevertheless the first results substantially of the Trade Commission act is to emasculate the antitrust law so far as criminal statutes are concerned.

Mr. OVERMAN. It does not emasculate the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. BORAH. I do not say the Sherman antitrust law; I said this trust law.

Mr. OVERMAN. As to these corrupt practices.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it can not be that the House conferees came over here to take out the criminal penalties from their own sections. If they did they assumed to repudiate the action of the 435 Representatives who compose the House of Representatives. On the other hand, in what kind of a position are the Senate conferees placed? The Trade Commission bill had been enacted before I offered my amendment to add a criminal penalty to the Walsh substitute.

Mr. OVERMAN. Right there——

Mr. REED. And the Senate acted with full knowledge of the Trade Commission act and by a vote added the penalty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not want to be misunderstood. The House conferees did not agree at once, but this was a matter of compromise. They preferred the House provision. The Senate had ordered us to strike out sections 2 and 4. The House conferees insisted upon their disagreement and they would not agree to our action, and the whole thing was a matter of compromise.

Mr. REED. I understand it was a matter of compromise. It was also a process of vivisection. The conferees operated upon the bill, and when you got through it was so thoroughly cut up that it does not make a respectable looking legislative corpse.

I can see how the House conferees could have come forward and said, "We want our section." I can see how the Senate conferees would have finally said, "We will yield to the House and give the House its sections." But how could the Senate conferees insist that if the body of the House section was restored the criminal clause should be stricken out in view of the fact that the Senate had expressly voted for the criminal clause? That, Mr. President, was not a compromise. That was going further than the House demanded.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether he feels that any importance at all is to be attached to the fact that after the House had passed the Clayton bill with the provisions of which the Senator now speaks it thereafter approved and adopted the Trade Commission bill with section 5 in that bill incorporated in it by the Senate, which denounced as unlawful all forms of unfair competition, and provided for the enforcement of them, and whether he does not think that a fair statement of the case ought to embrace a recital of that fact?

Mr. President, it is perfectly well known that those two sections went out of the Clayton bill here because of the conviction that the conditions with which they dealt in sections 2 and 4 were already provided for and taken care of by section 5 of the Trade Commission bill. The Senator from Missouri did not agree with the Senate about that; he thought they were not. The Senate thought otherwise. That bill went over to the House, and apparently the House agreed with the Senate concerning the significance of it and passed that bill. In view of the action of the House in passing the Trade Commission bill with that provision in it, which was here declared by the Senate to cover the case intended to be provided by sections 2 and 4 of the Clayton bill, does not the Senator think, with that statement of fact, he ought to advise the Senate and the country that the House had likewise declared in that form and thereby warranted its conferees in acceding to the action of the Senate in striking those provisions from the bill?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is certainly not necessary to say to the Senate what I think I have already said, that the Trade Commission bill was passed by the Senate before the Clayton bill was passed by the Senate. Everybody in the Senate knows it, and everybody in the country who has followed the course of events knows it.

Mr. WALSH. I simply want to ask the Senator——

Mr. REED. Let me conclude my answer. The Senator has asked me several questions, and I want a moment to answer one or two before the Senator asks further questions.

The Senator says that the section was stricken out of the bill by the Senate committee because it was thought that the Trade Commission bill covered the practices. That is true; it was so thought by some of the members; but was the provision reported by the conferees in that shape?

The Senator asks me if I do not think that the conferees were controlled by the same motive as the Senate committee when they went into conference. I answer no, because if they had been they would have allowed the section to stay out of the bill and justified their action on the ground that the matter had been taken care of by section 5 of the Trade Commission bill. On the contrary, they said it was not taken care of by section 5 of the Trade Commission bill when they insisted that it should be again inserted in this bill. It follows they took no such position as was taken by the Senate committee. The fact is that the Senate conferees, going from the Senate Chamber with the vote of the Senate in favor of a criminal penalty ringing in their ears, went to a House committee that was insisting on restoring section 4, which contained a criminal penalty and was otherwise practically equivalent to the Senate substitute, and the conferees thus instructed cut out the penalty clause. I think it came out because the conferees of the Senate wanted it out. I can not conceive of the House of Representatives insisting upon having their section restored and then insisting that it should not be completely restored but must be mutilated.

I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. After all, the enforcement of the House provision was to be through the Trade Commission act.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. How could they insist upon a penalty unless there was a method of enforcing it?

Mr. REED. Certainly; that question is answered by the bill itself. There are two other sections in the bill. Where there is a criminal penalty and the sections are enforcible through the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Trade Commission.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator refer to the particular section?

Mr. REED. Certainly. Let me call the attention of the Senator to section 10 on page 13:

SEC. 10. That after two years from the approval of this act no common carrier engaged in commerce shall have any dealings in securities, supplies, or other articles of commerce, or shall make or have any contracts for construction or maintenance of any kind, to the amount of more than $50,000, in the aggregate, in any one year, with another corporation, firm, partnership, or association when the said common carrier shall have upon its board of directors or as its president, manager, or as its purchasing or selling officer, or agent in the particular transaction—

At the end is the clause—

If any common carrier shall violate this section it shall be fined not exceeding $25,000; and every such director, agent, manager, or officer thereof who shall have knowingly voted for or directed the act constituting such violation or who shall have aided or abetted in such violation shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $5,000, or confined in jail not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

There is still another criminal penalty.

Mr. WALSH. That is all. There is a general enforcement of that through the Trade Commission.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. There is no provision for the enforcement of section 10 by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. REED. I say there is. That is my opinion. I merely express it.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will refer to section 11, he will satisfy himself fully about it. Section 11 provides that sections 2 and 3 shall be enforceable by the Trade Commission.

Mr. CULBERSON. Those are the only ones.

Mr. WALSH. Those are the only ones.

Mr. REED (reading):

SEC. 11. That authority to enforce compliance with sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 of this act by the persons respectively subject thereto is hereby vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission where applicable to common carriers, in the Federal Reserve Board where applicable to banks, banking associations, and trust companies, and in the Federal Trade Commission where applicable to all other character of commerce, to be exercised as follows:

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the supposition is that the Trade Commission under section 5 will only have jurisdiction of such form of unfair competition as may be turned over to its jurisdiction by some express statute? In any form of unfair competition which might arise anywhere the Trade Commission would have jurisdiction, would it not? So it would not be necessary in order that the Trade Commission might have jurisdiction of this particular section that it be specified in this statute that it shall have jurisdiction of it.

Mr. CULBERSON. This bill as reported by the conferees did not rely entirely upon the definition in section 5 of the trade commission act, but these particular acts in sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 were expressly denounced as unlawful and their enforcement was placed in the hands of the three commissions where applicable respectively.

Mr. BORAH. But if the Trade Commission as created should conceive that anything in the commercial world constituted unfair competition it could take jurisdiction of it and deal with it, could it not?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think so, under that act. But the conferees did not see fit to leave that to the discretion of the trade commission. They went further and denounced these acts respectively, each separately, under sections 2, 3, 7, and 8, and left their enforcement to the Trade Commission, in the case of banks to the Federal Reserve Board, and of common carriers to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understand the position of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the bill.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the bill also, but suppose we had not designated and defined these particular acts to be unlawful, what we conceive to be unfair competition; suppose we had omitted them from the bill entirely, the Trade Commission as created, if then they had come within its jurisdiction, could have dealt with them. So we are simply assuming that possibly they might not take this view of it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think the position of the Senator is the correct view, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I can show the Senators that the commissions do have jurisdiction. Let me read section 10 a little further. I think we will find out that the Interstate Commerce Commission has something to do with it, at least.

Mr. WALSH. It is not the question that it has not something to do with it. The Senator called my attention to some provision of the bill where a certain act was denounced and penalized and at the same time a provision was made for the punishment and restriction of the act through the operation of the Federal Trade Commission. The Senator can not find anything of that kind, and I think, in candor, the Senator should say he was mistaken about it.

Mr. REED. If I am mistaken——

Mr. WALSH. Of course you are.

Mr. REED. Whenever I conclude that I am mistaken I will be quite candid. In the meantime I hardly need any lectures or any chiding or to be told what my duty is. Let me see whether I am wrong or right. I did not speak of the Trade Commission. I spoke of the commissions, and it is equally fatal to the point raised by the Senator whether this authority is vested in the trade commission or in the Interstate Commerce Commission or in the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator entirely, and the Senator, I think, will be unable to point out where at one and the same time an act is penalized and power is given to any commission to enforce it.

Mr. REED. Very well. Section 10:

That after two years from the approval of this act no common carrier engaged in commerce shall have any dealings in securities, supplies, or other articles of commerce, or shall make or have any contracts for construction or maintenance of any kind, to the amount of more than $50,000 in the aggregate in any one year with another corporation, firm, partnership, or association when the said common carrier shall have upon its board of directors or as its president, manager, or as its purchasing or selling officer, or agent in the particular transaction any person who is at the same time a director, manager, or purchasing or selling officer of or who has any substantial interest in such other corporation, firm, partnership, or association, unless and except such purchases shall be made from or such dealings shall be with the bidder whose bid is the most favorable to such common carrier, to be ascertained by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by rule or otherwise by the Interstate Commerce Commission. No bid shall be received unless the name and address of the bidder or the names and addresses of the officers, directors, and general managers thereof, if the bidder be a corporation, or of the members, if it be a partnership or firm, be given with the bid.

Any person who shall, directly or indirectly, do or attempt to do anything to prevent anyone from bidding or shall do any act to prevent free and fair competition among the bidders or those desiring to bid shall be punished as prescribed in this section in the case of an officer or director.

Every such common carrier having any such transactions or making any such purchases shall within 30 days after making the same file with the Interstate Commerce Commission a full and detailed statement of the transaction showing the manner of the competitive bidding, who were the bidders, and the names and addresses of the directors and officers of the corporations and the members of the firm or partnership bidding; and whenever the said commission shall, after investigation or hearing, have reason to believe that the law has been violated in and about the said purchases or transactions it shall transmit all papers and documents and its own views or findings regarding the transaction to the Attorney General.

If any common carrier shall violate this section, it shall be fined not exceeding $25,000; and every such director, agent, manager, or officer thereof who shall have knowingly voted for or directed the act constituting such violation or who shall have aided or abetted in such violation shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $5,000, or confined in jail not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. NELSON. In connection with the section the Senator has just read, I desire to call his attention to one peculiarity. While sections 2, 4, and 8 are put under the commission form of government, either the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Trade Commission, and also the section giving injunctive relief to individuals, this section 11 is both immune from the commission form of government under the Trade Commission act or under that style, and is also immune from injunctive relief under section 16. In other words, the men who furnish supplies to the railroad companies are put in a class by themselves and given immunity distinct from everybody else.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is another section here that I am not going to stop to examine. The point is not important. The Senate can judge whether I am correct or the Senator from Montana. The point raised is a mere side issue anyway. There is no reason why there may not be a criminal penalty and the commissions also exercise jurisdiction over civil violations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. There is one feature of this matter which is interesting to me. It seems to be conceded that punishment is inconsistent with the theory of the Trade Commission act, and that wherever the Trade Commission has jurisdiction the idea of punishment should be eliminated. I understand the theory upon which this particular clause was left out is because it came under the Trade Commission act, and that wherever the Trade Commission act operates, the theory of punishment should be eliminated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to say now, lest I forget it, that when we had section 5 of the Trade Commission bill here under discussion, and when it was alleged that we ought to write into that section a definition of what constitutes unfair competition, the argument was repeatedly made upon the floor of the Senate that that bill was to be followed by the Clayton bill, which named certain specific offenses or acts and denounced them. When it was alleged that there ought to be a penal clause put into the Trade Commission bill it was always met by the argument that these penal clauses were following in the Clayton bill. No sooner was the Trade Commission bill passed than these same gentlemen proceeded to use it to destroy the substantive law which was to follow it and which we were told would be passed. Thus the country is to be deprived of antitrust legislation.

Now, Mr. President, returning after this very pleasant digression into a field that grew nothing but June grass, I call attention again to section 3 of the conference report. Not only did these gentlemen cut out the criminal provision, but they disemboweled the section. Now, mark, here came the House with a provision that denounced all tying contracts of whatsoever kind or nature as criminal, and proposed to so punish them. Here came the Senate denouncing contracts relating to patented articles and proposing to punish them. Here sit the assembled conferees with these instructions. They strike out first the criminal penalty, although both Houses had voted for a criminal penalty. The section had provided that all contracts for the sale of goods, wares, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale, which should attempt to fix a price on the goods sold upon the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser should not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, or supplies of another. The conferees added this language:

Where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Before that amendment was put on it was enough to go into court and prove that a man had made a contract for the sale of an article, and in that contract had specified that the purchaser should not use some other article. That was all you had to prove, and the gates of the jail swung inward to receive the guilty man. But now, when you have proven the making of the contract, you have not made a case at all. You can be demurred out of court. You must go further and prove that the making of the contract may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in that line of commerce.

Notice that the lessening of competition or the tendency to create monopoly in one section or city is not enough. The line of commerce, taken as a whole, must be substantially involved.

What individual contract could be said to so substantially affect an entire line of trade as to tend to create a monopoly? What contract would substantially lessen competition in an entire line of commerce? Apply that rule to the Standard Oil Co. Its "line of commerce" embraces the habitable earth. Its customers are all the civilized races of men. Its weekly sales mount far into the millions.

How will it ever be possible to prove that any single contract tends to substantially restrain competition or establish monopoly in a "line of business" so vast as to be incomprehensible? How are you going to prove that it may lessen competition? I affirm that you can not make a case out under that clause as easily as you can prove a restraint of trade, which is all that you have to prove in order to make a case under the Sherman Act.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I call the Senator's attention to the fact in this connection that they have injected a new term which will lead to endless disputes—the word "substantially" in the phrase "substantially lessen competition." That is a phrase that is not included in the antitrust law. You will find running through this bill in half a dozen different places that same word "substantial" or "substantially," thus injecting a term that may lead to endless litigation as to what is substantially the lessening of competition.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let us stop and analyze the situation now in which the representative of the Federal Government will find himself under this section. We will take the Shoe Machinery case, which is now pending. The Shoe Machinery Trust has a contract which contains a clause which in substance and effect is that whoever shall use one of the principal machines obtained from the Shoe Machinery Co. must obtain certain other machines from that company. That is what is called the "tying clause." As this section stood as written by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] the Government in the prosecution of that concern would only be obliged to come in and lay down the contract which the Shoe Machinery Co. had made with AB and prove that a machine had been delivered to AB under the terms of that contract. Thereupon the Government would have made a complete case and need go no step further; but under the present language of the bill, when the Government has done all that, it has done nothing; it must now prove, under the first clause of this amendment, that the making of that contract may be to substantially lessen competition in that line of commerce.

Let us see. Here are two concerns making the machines. They were in competition with each other before one of them made a tying contract. They are in competition with each other after the contract is made. Both of them, under this clause, have the right to make such a contract. There is the same degree of competition, exactly, after the contract is made that there was before the contract was made.

Here are 10 men engaged in selling horses. I make a contract with A by which, if I sell him one horse, he agrees to buy five other horses from me if he needs them. My rival, B, makes the same kind of contract, if he sees fit, with his customer, and so on through the 10. There are still 10 rivals in competition; there are still 10 men competing; the competition is still there; there has been no lessening of competition; but there has been a restraint of trade, because this man whom I compelled to sign a contract that he will buy in future from me and not from the other man is restrained of his natural right, his natural liberty to trade where he pleases; but the competition has not been lessened, though the opportunity of my rival has been lessened.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire of the Senator if that is the case, what harm does he see in it?

Mr. REED. I see great harm in the amendment to the section.

Mr. WALSH. I understand; but I refer to the case of which the Senator has spoken.

Mr. REED. I see great harm in it for this reason——

Mr. WALSH. Take the 10 men engaged in selling horses.

Mr. REED. I see tremendous harm in it. I distinguish between lessening competition and restraint of trade. You do not lessen competition until you have put your competitor into a position where he can no longer do business; but so long as he is there and can do business, you have not lessened competition, because all the men are competing who were originally competing. You may have restrained trade, you may have restrained the commercial liberty of the man who was forced to sign the contract, and you may have restrained the opportunity of the competitor to get that trade, but you need not have "substantially lessened competition in that line of commerce."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, it was not the general matter about which he speaks that I was referring to. Here are 10 men engaged in raising horses. I am one of those 10. One of them comes to me and wants to buy a horse. I say "I will sell you this horse for $175." He says "I may want five or six horses more during the course of the winter." I say, "I will tell you what I will do; if you will agree to buy from me whatever horses you may need this winter at the same figure, I will sell you this horse for $150." What I want to know is, what is the harm in that?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ought not to be expected to stop and discuss the details of every little, simple illustration I use. In the case put by the Senator there would be no harm; in a little, simple transaction of that kind there would be no difficulty; but if we admit the principle, we must admit it for all cases. Accordingly, when an institution has gained, through the possession of a patented article, which is essential in some line of business or trade or manufacture, a monopoly, and thereupon, having a monopoly of that essential article proceeds to compel everybody who acquires the right to use it to buy everything else they use in their factory from the proprietor of that article, the result is monopoly, or restraint of trade. That is exactly the practice which has been followed by the Shoe Machinery Co. and by many other trusts.

Mr. WALSH. There is no doubt about that, and of course we all want to reach that case.

Mr. REED. Accordingly, if we are going to reach it, we can only reach it by a general provision.

Mr. WALSH. But the provision favored by the Senator I was afraid would stop the horse trader from making that kind of a contract.

Mr. REED. I am perfectly willing to stop him, and there is no reason why he should not be stopped; there is no reason why that kind of contract should be made. It is not essential to the public welfare; it does not make for the freedom of trade. We must, if we hope to reach these big concerns, make our laws so that occasionally some small man may have to alter his method of doing business.

But, Mr. President, I do not now want to be led aside into the discussion of details. What I am trying to impress upon the Senate and upon the conferees—and it is as hopeless a task as I ever undertook in my life to try to impress anything on the conferees—is that the term "substantially lessen competition in a line of business" can not be proven as easily as simple restraint of trade. If that be true, then the section is without value, because, in order to make a case under it, the complainant must prove all that it is necessary to prove under the Sherman Act. Thus, I say, you have disembowled this section.

You have another phrase in the report, a catch phrase—I ought to say a catchpenny phrase—"or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." Mr. President, it is the law to-day that when a combination tends to restraint of trade or monopoly, when that result may come therefrom, it is within the Sherman law. You are not obliged to prove that monopoly has been created; it is enough to show that the legitimate consequence of the act or acts complained of is monopoly or restraint of trade. So, after all this fulmination and after all this effort, we get nowhere.

To-day the Government goes in to try the Shoe Machinery Trust case—I go back to that because it has been often discussed. The first thing the Shoe Machinery Trust alleges is that, under the authority of the Dick case, they have a natural and legitimate monopoly by patent upon certain of their machines; and that, having that legitimate monopoly upon their machines, they have the right, under the decisions of the courts, to specify the terms and conditions upon which that monopoly can be used by the people. The decision in the Dick case, you will remember, stated that they could attach a little notice in the form of a license, "Only certain kinds of material purchased from us can be used on this machine." That practice is not made illegal by this bill; that is not condemned by this bill. It is only condemned by this bill when the complainant, in addition to proving the contract, can go further and show that the effect of the contract is to lessen competition, or that it tends to create a monopoly. In other words, the Government will be obliged to prove substantially all it has to prove to-day under the Sherman Act. Thus, I say, the conferees have very carefully, very artistically, with the skill of the trained surgeon and the delicate touch of experts, taken all the substance out of this provision.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Lane	Page	Smoot
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Perkins	Sterling
Chilton	Lewis	Pomerene	Swanson
Clapp	McLean	Reed	Thornton
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Vardaman
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Walsh
Fletcher	Myers	Shields	Warren
Hughes	Nelson	Shively

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has been called from the Chamber on business of the Senate.

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KERN, Mr. OWEN, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. WHITE responded to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. WEST, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. GORE, and Mr. STONE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to know the result of the roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that 47 Senators have responded up to this time.

Mr. COLT, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. MCCUMBER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow forenoon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., Monday, September 28, 1914) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 29, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, September 28, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, never very far from any of us, we would draw near to Thee, that our faith may be increased, our hearts purified, our lives ennobled; that we may be able to cast out the demons which doth so easily possess us, jealousy, anger, malice, hatred, revenge, avarice, licentiousness, and the rest of that ill-begotten family; that the better angels of our nature may be in the ascendancy, working the works of righteousness; that we may become altogether God-like, which is the real business of life, after the similitude of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, September 26, 1914, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by giving the authentic status of the National American Woman's Suffrage Association in the congressional election.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD to show the real position of the Woman's Suffrage Association with reference to congressional elections. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Which association?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The National American Woman's Suffrage Association.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman also show the position of the other association?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They have no connection with the other association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on matters of legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Clayton bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the general subject of legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of legislation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the state of the Union. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that the best information the gentleman can give as to what he is likely to effuse about?

Mr. PAYNE. I think that covers the scope. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, well, let the gentleman from New York have it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would ask the Chair as to whether or not, under the rule in reference to the Philippine bill which was adopted Saturday, this is District day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined that rule very carefully and thinks it cuts out District day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-day be devoted to District business.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that to-day be devoted to District business and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] objects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, has the Chair the right to recognize me to move to suspend the rules to-day?

The SPEAKER. Has the Chair the right to do what?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. To recognize me to move to suspend the rules upon this question?

The SPEAKER. No; this is not the day given to suspension of the rules. Next Monday will be the day, unless the Chair has the almanac wrong.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that next Monday be set aside for District business instead of to-day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that next Monday is unanimous-consent day, in which every Member of the House is interested.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What day would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would rather it would be some other day than unanimous-consent day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that next Saturday be set aside for District business in lieu of to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that next Saturday be set apart for the consideration of District business.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object at this time. If we get through with this Philippine bill, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow week be set aside for District business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow week be set aside for District business. Is there objection to that?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object unless it is put on the contingent ground that we get through with this Philippine bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first day except Wednesday or unanimous-consent day be set aside for District business after the Philippine bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that the first day after the Philippine business is concluded shall be set aside for District business except Wednesday and unanimous-consent day. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If that consent is given, will that put it on the status of to-day, so that conference reports and other privileged matters, if desired, can be considered?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is simply that day, whatever it is, for to-day. Is there objection to that?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, after the Philippine bill is disposed of, I take it there will likely be the conference report on the Clayton bill, and that some time between now and later at least action upon the rivers and harbors bill.

If the gentleman should have his request granted, and the entire day set aside should be used for either one of those purposes, it would not accomplish the gentleman anything.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That seems to be the best I can get.

Mr. MANN. I am quite in sympathy with the gentleman about getting a District day. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] if we can get any indication from him as to what we are likely to do in the House after we have disposed of the Philippines bill, the conference report on the antitrust bill, and the river and harbor bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the question of whether the shipping bill will come up or not before next month is yet undecided, but if we can reach an adjournment when those bills are disposed of—that is, if the business in the Senate is such that we can not reach an adjournment if they are disposed of—I will be very glad to enter into a pact to let the Members go home until election, or until the revenue bill comes back from the Senate. But I am not prepared to answer the gentleman fully this morning, because the decision about whether the shipping bill will be taken up or not has not been finally reached.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Alabama, in view of the list of public business and the length of the session, think it is desirable now to postpone action on the conference report on the trust bill or the rivers and harbors bill in order that the District may have a day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, as I understood the gentleman's request, it was merely to make another day District day, as to-day is. When we reach that day, if the House desires to take up a conference report or privileged matter, it does not have to take up the District business, and can decide then. If it was making a District day that would exclude everything else, I would not be in favor of the order being made at this time, but as I understand it, if the order is made now it merely gives the gentleman the same right that he would have to-day, and, of course, if a majority of the House, when that day is reached, desires to clear up matters, they can raise the question of consideration and take up the other matters.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the request made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] was that the first day following, and so forth, should be set apart for the consideration of District business. And while the Speaker did not state the request that way——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood the Speaker to state that the request was to substitute another day for to-day, which, I understand, would give the gentleman from Kentucky and the District business no more rights or no less rights than they would have to-day, and with that status I have no objection. Of course, I would not wish to see an order made now that might put District business ahead of a conference report or business that we would have to transact in order to get away. But as it leaves it open to the House to determine whether they will set aside District business when it is reached or not, I see no objection to the order being made at this time. And I understand that is the status the gentleman desires to obtain.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think that is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the request submitted so that we would know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The request is that the first day after the conclusion of the Philippine bill that is not a Calendar Wednesday or a unanimous-consent day shall take the place of to-day for the consideration of District business.

Mr. MANN. District business has no rights to-day. They have been cut out.

The SPEAKER. Well, I know; but I am talking about the general right. It means simply this—that the first day after the conclusion of the Philippine bill, if it is not Wednesday or a unanimous-consent day, shall be substituted for to-day with all the rights and appurtenances thereunto belonging and no more. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That hardly states it correctly, for the reason that if the next day after the conclusion of the Philippine bill should be either Wednesday or unanimous-consent day, then the District Committee would be excluded.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the first day that happens after this bill is finished that does not fall within one of those two categories you are to have. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REMAINS OF EARL A. BANCROFT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have insisted that we have a day for the District, but that has been denied. I would not ask to bring up anything about which there would be any sort of discussion, but there is a bill on the calendar which came out of the District Committee and in which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is interested. It relates simply to the removing of the remains of a young man from one cemetery here to another cemetery. I do not think it would take any debate whatever, and I ask unanimous consent to take it up and pass it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5798) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Earl A. Bancroft from Glenwood Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Mantorville, Minn.

Be it enacted, etc., That the health officer of the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Earl A. Bancroft from Glenwood Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Mantorville, Minn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the bill immediately close.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PARKS IN RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the adoption of the rule under which we are operating take away the privilege of considering conference reports?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that it sweeps the platter clean.

Mr. FERRIS. I have a conference report here that will not take a moment's time. I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration at this time the conference report on the bill S. 657, and pending that I wish to say that this bill passed by unanimous consent, with four amendments, and the Senate has receded from all of them.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill (S. 657) to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects in the State of Montana, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this conference report has not previously been submitted, has it?

Mr. FERRIS. It has been. It has been lying on the Speaker's table two or three weeks. I have neglected it because I had other matters to attend to.

I will say to the gentleman that this is a Senate bill, and the House put four amendments on it, and it passed by unanimous consent in the House. The Senate disagreed to those amendments at first and asked for a conference, and then receded. If the House passes this conference report now it will do precisely what we did heretofore by unanimous consent in passing the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The conference report was read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1121).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 657) to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects in the State of Montana, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and the amendment of the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
BURTON L. FRENCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. MYERS,
KEY PITTMAN,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on certain amendments to the Senate bill (S. 657) to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects in the State of Montana, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted with the accompanying conference report as to each of the House amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: The Senate recedes and concurs in the House amendment, as it was deemed advisable to make this a general act applicable to all of the States in which reclamation projects are situated, rather than having it confined to the State of Montana alone.

On amendment No. 2: The Senate recedes and concurs in the House amendment, as it was deemed appropriate that that language should be inserted in section 2 as an expressed condition upon which these community centers shall be set apart.

On amendment No. 3: The Senate recedes and concurs in the House amendment, as it is deemed that the language in section 4 more than appropriately covers this subject and that the provisions of section 4 are amply sufficient.

On amendment No. 4: The Senate recedes and concurs in the House amendment, as the terms of the amendment are deemed more suitable, appropriate, and practical, as well as equitable, than the language stricken out.

It is also mutually agreed that the title should be amended by striking out "in the State of Montana," so as to make the title correspond with the amendments and bill as so amended. In other words, the Senate recedes and accepts all of the House amendments, as your committee deem the bill as so amended more in harmony with the spirit of the reclamation act and the object of this bill.

SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
BURTON L. FRENCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

AMENDMENTS.

(1) Page 1, line 4, strike out "in the State of Montana."

(2) Page 2, line 3, after "That," insert "subject to the provisions hereinafter contained."

(3) Page 2, line 22, after "States," strike out all down to the period in line 24.

(4) Page 3, line 7, after "the" where it first occurs, strike out all down to the period in line 9 and insert "disposition of lands reverting to the United States under the provisions of this act, and from sales of water rights, shall be covered into the reclamation fund and placed to the credit of the project wherein the lands are situate."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STEDMAN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his immediate family.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER. Under the special rule the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 18459, with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] in the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 18459) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, with Mr. FLOOD of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 18459, the Philippine bill, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18459) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, the ratifications of the treaty of peace between the Kingdom of Spain and the United States took place in this city on the 11th day of April, 1899, or more than a decade and a half ago. During the more than three years that elapsed between that date and the 1st day of July, 1902, the military, civil, and judicial powers employed in the government of the Philippine Islands were exercised as prescribed by the President of the United States, through military and civil officials appointed by him. The act of Congress known as the organic law of the Philippines was approved on the 1st day of July, 1902, since when the Philippine Islands have been governed in accordance with the provisions of that act and certain amendments thereto subsequently adopted by Congress. It thus appears that the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, as amended in unimportant particulars, although expressly declared therein to be a temporary measure, has been the law under which the Philippine Islands have been governed for more than 12 years past.

The bill now under consideration not only provides a more autonomous government for the Philippine Islands than that which they now have, but it declares it to be the purpose of the people of the United States to grant to the inhabitants of those islands their full and complete independence so soon as a stable government has been established therein. If, therefore, this bill is enacted into law, it will contain an authoritative declaration on the part of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands.

It will be observed that this declaration conforms substantially, if not literally, to the declarations contained in the platform of the last Democratic national convention—the platform upon the declarations and pledges of which the Democratic Party was intrusted with the control of both the executive and legislative branches of the Federal Government, and to the performance of which that party has been solemnly committed.

It ought not to be necessary to occupy the time of the House in the presentation of arguments in favor of the adoption at this time by the Congress of the United States of a declaration setting forth definitely that it is not the purpose of the American people to permanently retain possession of the Philippine Islands, but that, on the contrary, it is their purpose to grant to their inhabitants their independence so soon as they have demonstrated their capacity to govern themselves. As is set forth in the report which accompanies this bill, "all Americans who by virtue of their official position or their intimate knowledge of the facts are entitled to consideration state that it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the beginning of the War with Spain to make that war one of conquest or territorial aggrandizement." On the contrary, all those who have been charged with the responsibility of governing the Philippine Islands since they came into possession of the United States, and whose opinions by reason of their high official positions are entitled to consideration and weight, have with one voice proclaimed that the Filipino people were ultimately to be given their independence. That it is the consensus of the best opinion of the American people that the United States should not hold the Philippine Islands in perpetuity and govern them as a colonial possession there can be no doubt, and no respectable body of American citizens, from the day that Dewey entered Manila Bay, thus foredooming Spanish sovereignty in the Philippines, up to the present moment, has ever declared in favor of the permanent retention of these islands. On the other hand, precisely the contrary has been proclaimed over and over again by the recognized leaders and spokesmen of the Republican Party. Why, then, may I ask, should any Republican oppose the adoption of the preamble to this bill for the reason that it declares it to be the purpose of the people of the United States to grant the Philippines their independence so soon as a stable government has been established therein?

It will be conceded, I think, that there is no higher Republican authority as to the attitude of his party toward the Philippines than former President Taft. In 1908, at the direction of President Roosevelt, and in his capacity as Secretary of War, he visited the Philippine Islands, and upon his return made a voluminous report as to conditions in those islands. In that report this distinguished Republican stated that there were many Filipinos who desired that the American people should declare a definite policy as to the Philippines, so that they might be informed as to what that policy was. He did not, he said, see how any more definite policy could be declared than was declared by President McKinley in his instructions to Secretary Root for the guidance of the Philippine Commission, which, he affirmed, was incorporated into law by the organic act of Congress.

That policy—

He said—

is declared to be the extension of self-government to the Philippine Islands by gradual steps from time to time as the people of the islands shall show themselves fit to receive the additional responsibility.

He went on to say:

It necessarily involves in its ultimate conclusion as the steps toward self-government become greater and greater the ultimate independence of the islands.

In another part of this report the then Secretary of War undertakes to define even more specifically and clearly the policy of the United States toward the Philippines, and in doing so he employs these words:

Shortly stated, the national policy is to govern the Philippine Islands for the benefit and welfare and uplift of the people of the islands, and gradually to extend to them, as they shall show themselves fit to exercise it, a greater and greater measure of self-government.

He added that the logical deduction from this proposition is—that when the Filipino people as a whole show themselves reasonably fit to conduct a popular self-government, maintaining law and order, and offering equal protection of the laws and civil rights to rich and poor, and desire complete independence of the United States, they shall be given it.

If, then, it be true, as asserted by Mr. Taft, that President McKinley announced, and that his announcement was afterwards affirmed by Congress, that it is the policy of the United States to grant complete independence to the Philippines when the Filipinos desire it, and show themselves reasonably fit to conduct a popular self-government, maintaining law and order, and offering equal protection of the laws and civil rights to rich and poor, what possible objection can any consistent Republican have to stating the same proposition in different language in this bill? Will it be seriously maintained by anybody that there is any essential difference between promising the Filipinos their independence when they have shown themselves to be capable of maintaining law and order and of offering equal protection of the laws and civil rights to rich and poor, and promising them that independence so soon as they have establish a stable government? Any government failing to maintain law and order and not offering equal protection of law and civil rights to rich and poor alike is lacking in the most essential elements of stability. Stable government fulfills every condition set forth by Mr. Taft, and embraces more besides. A stable government is one that is securely and firmly established, and no government can be stable whose people are incapable of maintaining law and order and of affording protection to all persons alike. I can not therefore understand the attitude of the gentlemen who, subscribing to the proposition laid down by President Taft as the policy of his party, pretend to see danger and harm in that which is set forth in the preamble of this bill. If Congress has affirmed the McKinley policy as defined by Mr. Taft, surely there can be no harm at least in reaffirming that policy in terms substantially and essentially the same and equally as conservative.

To hold and govern the Philippine Islands permanently is, therefore, not only contrary to the oft-repeated declarations of such Republicans as ex-President Taft, but contrary to the free principles upon which our Government is founded, and therefore the very thought is repugnant to every liberty-loving American citizen. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It may be that there are a few Americans who, from selfish and interested motives, favor the permanent retention of the Philippines, but their number is inconsiderable and their motives quite apparent. Those, for instance, who enjoy a monopoly of trade in certain Philippine productions, such as manila hemp, may not favor the withdrawal of American sovereignty over the islands. And it may not be unnatural also that many American officeholders in the islands should view with disfavor any action on the part of the United States which will have the effect of separating them from the public service. The permanent retention of the Philippines, too, necessarily involves the maintenance of larger military and naval establishments than would otherwise be necessary, and that means, of course, quicker promotions in the Army and Navy, so that it is to be expected that some opposition to granting the Philippines their independence may be anticipated in those quarters; but, as I have said, it can not be questioned but that the great body of the American people are opposed to the permanent retention of the Philippines. Nor can it be truthfully denied that their retention by the United States is a source of military weakness and a constant menace to our peace. To embark upon the turbulent waters of imperialism will mean that some day, not far distant, we shall be plunged into the dangerous maelstrom of oriental politics. So that from the standpoint of our own best interests, as well as from the higher considerations of justice and right, it would seem that the time is ripe for a declaration on the part of the people of the United States as to their intentions and purposes in respect to the future political status of the Philippines.

I shall not stop now to discuss the financial and economic aspects of the Philippine question as they appear to me to affect the people of the United States, for, serious as they must be admitted to be, they are not, in my judgment, the most important ones. It may not be amiss, however, to state at the outset of this discussion, for the benefit of those who have not informed themselves upon the subject, that the statements so often made to the effect that the Philippine Islands are self-sustaining are wholly misleading if it be meant thereby to convey the idea that the retention of the Philippines is imposing no financial burdens upon the United States. For, on the contrary, whilst it is quite true that up to the present time the cost of civil government of the Philippines has been paid out of the revenues of the islands and been borne by the Philippine people, it is also equally true that the annual cost to the United States of our military occupancy of the islands is many millions of dollars. Just how many millions it is not possible definitely to state.

President Taft, in response to a resolution calling for information upon this subject, informed the House that this cost problem was "insoluble." It has been carefully estimated, however, to be as much as $40,000,000 annually, and I believe that an examination of all the items that go to make up this vast sum will demonstrate that it is not far out of the way. The expenditure of this money out of the Treasury of the United States by reason of our occupation of the Philippines is unquestionably, therefore, a matter of much importance to the American people; and yet to my mind the political relations to be established between the people of the United States and those of the Philippine Islands ought not to be determined upon the basis of mere dollars and cents.

If, therefore, Mr. Chairman, it were true that the Philippine Islands were not a real financial burden to the American people, I should still be unalterably averse to their retention for a moment longer than the time when they may be permitted to establish for themselves a stable government of their own and thus be offered the opportunity to demonstrate to the world, as I am firmly pursuaded they are prepared to do, their capacity for self-government.

It has long been conceded that no substantial commercial or business advantages are to be gained by the permanent retention of the Philippines. The total value of the imports from and the exports to the United States for the first six months of the present calendar year, under conditions of free trade, was less than $27,500,000. But, Mr. Chairman, were the Philippines as rich as proverbially are the Indies, and the possibilities for lucrative trade with them a thousandfold greater than they have ever been pictured, such sordid and unworthy considerations could not, and would not, justify the people of the greatest and the freest Republic on earth in denying to them that independent existence, freedom, and liberty for which their own forefathers staked their lives and their fortunes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The assertion of the right of all men to govern themselves was no vainglorious and meaningless declaration. Having been sealed with the blood of American patriots, it may never be repudiated without national dishonor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There are many reasons why Congress should not defer longer to declare that it is not the purpose of the people of the United States to hold the Filipinos in perpetual bondage, and they are justly entitled to such an authoritative assurance as this. The business interests in the islands have already suffered as a result of the failure of the United States to define what are to be the future political relations between this country and those islands, and they are demanding that the doubt and uncertainty which enshroud this question of transcendent importance to them shall be speedily removed.

The Filipinos as with one voice are appealing to the Congress that at the very least they be given some definite and positive assurance that it is not our purpose to hold them in possession and govern them against their will for an indefinite and remote period. Whilst they would much prefer the fixing of a definite date in the near future for the granting of their independence, I am justified in saying that they accept in good faith the assurances contained in this bill in the full confidence of their ability to measure up to the capacity for self-government standard which it imposes upon them. Conscious of their ability to establish and maintain a stable government, they eagerly welcome the opportunity to demonstrate that fact to the world.

Speaking for the majority membership of the Committee on Insular Affairs, I may say that we have no misgivings upon this subject, and, therefore, not being willing to deny to the Filipinos that inherent right to govern themselves which pertains to the people of every country on earth, we propose in this bill to afford them the means through the exercise of which they may make manifest to the world their capacity to do so.

Surely a people who have made such wonderful progress in recent years, particularly in the spread of education, in the general diffusion of knowledge, in the acquisition of the English language as a common medium of communication, and in the art of government itself, can not be lacking in the elements which make for stable and independent government.

But wonderful as this progress has been in the past few years, let no one suppose that the Filipinos were the ignorant, illiterate, and uncivilized people prior to the establishment of American rule in the islands that they have sometimes been described to have been. Philippine deputies sat in the Spanish Cortes at Madrid more than a hundred years ago, and at one time there were as many as 17 Filipinos in the Spanish Parliament. Before Harvard existed the University of St. Joseph had been established at Manila, where the Filipino youth were educated in the higher branches of learning, in medicine and in law, in literature and in philosophy, in science and in art. And government-supported schools flourished all over the archipelago years before there was a public school in many of the States of our own Union. Let us not forget, too, that the Philippine people are the only Christians in all the Orient; for, whilst it is true that the uncivilized Moros are Mohammedans and that there are pagans in a number of the outlying and uncivilized mountain Provinces, they constitute but a small percentage of the total population of the archipelago. Ten years ago, according to so high an authority as the late James A. Le Roy, whose admirable work on the Philippines was published in 1905, approximately one-half the Christian population over 10 years of age was literate. Three years ago more than one-half of the Christian inhabitants, constituting, as they do, more than nine-tenths of the total population of the Philippines, had learned to speak the English language, and to-day the proportion of those who speak English is much larger, since for several years past there has been an annual attendance upon the public schools of more than 600,000 children taught in English by 9,000 teachers, at least 92 per cent of whom are Filipinos. But I can not dwell longer upon this phase of the subject. If additional arguments are needed to establish the fact that the Filipinos possess the educational qualifications for self-government, they are to be found in the report which accompanies this bill.

Since 1907 the Philippine Legislature has consisted of two bodies, an appointive commission and an elective assembly. This generation of Filipinos has therefore had some experience in legislative work, and having watched with sympathetic interest the course of those who have constituted the membership of the assembly, it is my deliberate opinion that they have fulfilled the highest hopes of their well wishers and grievously disappointed those of their critics in and out of the Philippines, with whom the wish has been father to the thought, who have prophesied that their acts would demonstrate their incapacity to wisely legislate for themselves.

The testimony of all competent and impartial observers is to the effect that in the main the popular branch of the legislature has been composed of earnest, industrious, capable, and patriotic members, and that the intelligence and wisdom displayed by them in the initiation of beneficial legislation has made manifest the capacity of the Filipinos for the performance of those legislative functions which pertain to representative government.

But, Mr. Chairman, however widely the majority and the minority members of the Committee on Insular Affairs may differ as to the capacity of the Filipinos, and despite all that may be urged by the staunchest imperialist against the wisdom of Congress declaring it to be the policy of the people of the United States to grant the Philippines their independence so soon as a stable government has been established therein, there surely should be no disagreement anywhere as to the unwisdom of longer continuing the anomalous, incongruous, and utterly inharmonious bicameral legislative system now in vogue in the Philippines.

The one strikingly damaging fact that for the three successive legislatures prior to the last there occurred deadlocks between the commission appointed by and responsible only to the President of the United States and an assembly elected by and responsible to their Filipino constituents which resulted in the failure of the passage of three annual appropriation bills upon which the very life of the Philippine Government depended, is sufficient to forever condemn the present legislative system.

It may not be amiss if I pause here just long enough to give such Members of this House as may possibly be without knowledge upon the subject some information as to the character and functions of this Philippine Commission. It is composed of nine members, one of whom is the Governor General, and until recently a majority of its members, at least, had been Americans. Since the heads of the four executive departments of the government are members of this commission, it exercises all of the executive authority of the Philippine government, as well as participates in its legislative functions. Whilst it has an equal voice with the assembly in all legislation affecting the organized Provinces, it is endowed with the exclusive right to legislate for those that are inhabited by Moros and other non-Christian tribes. The taxes, in the main, are paid, of course, by the civilized and Christianized inhabitants of the organized Provinces, and yet the commission has hitherto exercised the right to appropriate such sums out of the public revenues as it saw fit, and without the approval or consent of the assembly, for the exclusive benefit of the Moros and other non-Christians. Thus it is in the power of the commission to expend every dollar of the public revenues for public works and other purposes in non-Christian territory from whence no appreciable portion, if any, of it is derived. It is the use and the abuse of such authority as this which rendered every American-controlled commission obnoxious to the Philippine people, and which has created the well-nigh universal demand for its substitution by an elective senate, with powers coordinate with those of the assembly, thus assuring that harmonious action so essential to just and orderly government. The expenditure of millions of the public revenues in the construction and upkeep of the Benguet automobile road in non-Christian territory, which naturally aroused the indignation of the Filipino people, is a striking illustration of the necessity for the abolition of the Philippine Commission. This short road, some 22 miles in length, has already cost the Filipinos more than $100,000 a mile.

Mr. Chairman, this bill therefore not only contains for the Filipinos a definite promise of political independence, but it provides for them practical and substantial legislative independence. It does not, as I have said, fix a definite and precise date at which this solemn promise shall become effective, but it provides for them a far more liberal form of government than that under which they now live and gives to them such enlarged participation in the affairs of that government "as will enable them, by demonstrating their capacity for self-government, to hasten the date for final separation between the United States and the Philippines."

I now desire, Mr. Chairman, to direct attention as briefly as I may to the more important changes in existing law made by this bill.

It declares who shall be deemed to be citizens of the Philippine Islands and confers upon the Philippine Legislature authority to provide for the acquisition of citizenship by certain other persons, among them citizens of the United States residing in the islands. Strange to say that whilst citizens of all European countries residing in the Philippines may now be granted Philippine citizenship those of the United States are debarred.

It reenacts the bill of rights set forth in the organic act containing substantially the personal and property guaranties of the Constitution of the United States.

It provides that all expenses incurred by the Philippine Government shall be paid by that government; that all the powers now conferred upon the Philippine Legislature and the Philippine Commission may be exercised by the Philippine Legislature authorized in this bill; that the laws now in force in the Philippines shall so continue until changed or repealed by the legislature created in this bill or by act of Congress; and that such legislature shall have power to amend or repeal any law now in force when not inconsistent with the provisions of this bill.

It transfers the whole of the public domain acquired from Spain by the United States, except such portions as the President may designate for military and other reservations of the United States, together with the undisposed-of portions of what are known as the friar lands, to the Government of the Philippines, to be administered for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof.

In addition to the usual powers exercised by legislative bodies, the legislature created by this bill is empowered to enact tariff, currency, and coinage laws, but all of its enactments relating to those subjects, as well as to public lands, timber, and mining, must receive the approval of the President of the United States before they become effective, and it is also expressly provided that the trade relations between the Philippines and the United States shall be governed exclusively by laws of the Congress of the United States.

A Philippine Legislature, as has already been stated, consisting of two houses, to be known as the senate and house of representatives, is established, in which is vested all legislative authority. The islands are to be laid off into 12 senate and 90 representative districts, 1 of these senate and 9 of the representative districts to be established in territory not now represented in the legislature, or what is known as the Moro and non-Christian Provinces. The 2 senators and 9 representatives who shall represent these districts are to be appointed by the Governor General without the consent of the Philippine Senate and without restriction as to residence. The remaining 22 senators and 81 representatives are to be elective. This I regard as the most important feature of this bill. It gives to the civilized and Christianized inhabitants of the Philippines the right to elect, with the exception of two of its members, a senate which shall be responsive to Filipino public sentiment and at the same time it abolishes the commission, of whose remarkable functions I have already spoken.

The truth is, Mr. Chairman, that the existing legislative system is indefensible, and there are few, if any, who are even willing to attempt to justify its longer existence. The minority members of the Committee on Insular Affairs do not oppose the substitution of an elective senate for the appointive commission. Those of them who subscribe to the "views of the minority" are upon record as declaring that "many of us have no objections to an elective senate or to some of the other changes in existing law provided in the bill."

It may be objected that the appointment of two senators and nine representatives by the Governor General, as provided for in the bill, is undemocratic. Just how best to safeguard the interests of the uncivilized tribes is a problem which, it must be admitted, is difficult of solution. It has been suggested that the Provinces inhabited by non-Christians, with the exception of the Moro Province, be incorporated into the Christian Provinces, and that the Moros be excluded altogether from representation in the legislature, but the plan proposed in the bill is believed to be the more equitable as well as the more feasible. But after all has been said that can be said upon this subject, it must be conceded that the best method by which these "wards of the Nation" may be represented in the legislature is that which will best subserve and protect their interests. With the wide discretion given the Governor General in the selection of these representatives, it can not be doubted that they will be among the ablest and most efficient in the legislature.

The suffrage provisions of the existing law are so enlarged as to grant the right of suffrage to those who read and write any native language. The present law limits this class of voters to those who read and write either English or Spanish.

It is not believed that any sound reason can be given for excluding from the exercise of the elective franchise the hundreds of thousands of adult male Filipinos who can read and write a native language. To impose a similar test to that which prevails in the Philippines in any Commonwealth in America would disfranchise the bulk of those of its voters whose right to vote is dependent upon their literacy. It has had this effect in the Philippines. The Filipinos of the present generation have made astonishing progress in the acquisition of English, but there are still many educated Filipinos who have not and may never acquire that language, and to deny to them the right of suffrage would be most unjust.

The Governor General, who, together with the justices of the supreme court, is to be appointed by the President, is empowered to appoint, by and with the consent of the Philippine Senate, such officers as may now be appointed by the Governor General, as well as those he is authorized under this bill to appoint.

It has been objected that the appointments of the Governor General ought not to be subject to confirmation. It is said that in a number of the States of our Union there is no such requirement. That is true; but in those States their chief executives have the appointment of few public officials, and, generally speaking, only of those of minor importance. The more important positions are filled either by popular vote or by the State legislatures. The Governor General of the Philippines, on the other hand, will not only appoint the heads of the four executive departments of the insular government, but he will name the heads and assistant chiefs of the numerous bureaus of those departments. He will appoint every provincial prosecuting attorney and treasurer throughout the archipelago, and every judge, save only the justices of the supreme court, of every superior and inferior court. This is an enormous power to lodge in the hands of one individual, and therefore it has been thought best to follow the plan laid down in the Federal Constitution rather than those of the States, where conditions are so dissimilar.

An important provision of this bill—which I indulge the hope it may never again be necessary to resort to—is that which provides that if at the close of any fiscal year the appropriations necessary for the support of the government for the ensuing year shall not have been made the several sums appropriated in the last annual appropriation bills shall be deemed to be reappropriated. This provision has been so reworded as to prevent, it is hoped, the possibility of the recurrence of the vicious and, as I believe, absolutely illegal practice thrice resorted to in the past of applying—or, rather, misapplying—funds appropriated for specific objects to other and quite different objects in the sole discretion of the Governor General. I have never believed that the language employed in the present statute was susceptible of the construction placed upon it. I believe that the action referred to is utterly indefensible. Under such a remarkable interpretation of this law it is within the power of the Philippine Commission to turn over to the Governor General every dollar of the public revenues of the Philippines, to be by him expended without reference to the objects specified in the last appropriation bills, and only in accordance to his individual judgment as to the needs of the public service, by simply refusing to agree to any appropriation measure. How a construction fraught with such mischievous consequences could have been placed by any one holding so responsible a position as that of Governor General of the Philippines upon an enactment the purpose and intent of which were so manifest, even were it conceded that its language was lacking in perspicuity, is difficult to comprehend. Although, as I have said, it is hoped that the necessity for making clearer this paragraph has passed, its phraseology has been changed with that end in view.

Whilst power is given the Philippine Legislature to override the veto of the Governor General by a two-thirds vote of each house, there is reposed in the President of the United States an absolute veto over all legislation, and the right to annul any and all enactments is reserved to Congress, thus removing any danger of hasty or unwise legislation and thoroughly protecting the interests of the United States. There are many other changes made in existing law by this bill, but I think I have directed attention to the more important ones. All of them can be considered when the bill is read for amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. Chairman, the passage of this measure at an early day is urgently demanded by reason of the economic and financial conditions existing in the Philippines—conditions which could not have been anticipated and which are not peculiar to those islands, and for which neither their government nor their people are responsible. It is not necessary to state to this House what those conditions are. They are common to both the United States and the Philippine Islands, and the Congress is even now considering measures for the relief of our Treasury. Customs duties constitute the principal source of Philippine revenue, and they have suddenly fallen off to such an extent as to create an alarming financial situation for the government. Under existing law the insular government is to a great extent helpless. It can neither change its tariff laws, increase its income tax, nor borrow money, for the limit of its public indebtedness as now fixed by Congress has already been reached. This bill, if enacted into law, will permit it to do all of these things. If, therefore, it is not promptly passed, and public bankruptcy shall befall the Philippine government, Congress must assume the responsibility therefor. The situation is a critical one, and every consideration of just and fair dealing requires that it be promptly met. Either Congress must provide the means for meeting the obligations of the Philippine government or else it must pass legislation such as is embodied in this bill. Let me repeat that the Filipinos are the wards of this Nation, and so long as they remain such the duty of providing for their welfare rests with Congress.

In urging the passage of this bill as an emergency measure I am not unmindful that it is solemnly stated in the views of the minority that even if it could pass both Houses during the present session of Congress it would be entirely useless as such. The reason assigned for this doleful prophecy is that the first election under it is to be held in June, 1915, and that the legislature then elected will not convene until the following October. The distinguished author of the views of the minority and his subscribing associates surely must have overlooked the fact that it is expressly provided in the bill that until the legislature provided for shall have been organized the existing Philippine Legislature shall have all the legislative authority granted to the government of the islands, except such as may now be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Philippine Commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly inform the committee as to the amount of bonds that the Philippine Government has issued for public improvements? I believe that the gentleman has stated that they have reached the limit of their bonded indebtedness.

Mr. JONES. Five million dollars. That is the limit authorized by the organic act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman remember the supplementary act that was passed, whereby the Government of the United States was to guarantee certain bonds for internal improvements? Is that in addition to the original authorization?

Mr. JONES. Under an act of Congress the insular government guarantees 4 per cent interest for a period not to exceed 30 years on certain bonds issued for the construction of certain lines of railroal. The total amount of bonds upon which there is a government guaranty was, on the first of this year, something over $15,000,000 in United States currency. The annual liability of the insular government on account of these bonds is about $625,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Altogether $15,000,000 or $16,000,000, including the $5,000,000 originally authorized?

Mr. JONES. No; the $15,000,000 of which I have spoken are the bonds of railroad companies.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that the $15,000,000 or $16,000,000 was utilized exclusively for internal improvements?

Mr. JONES. It was expended by railroad companies to build railroads. The Government simply guarantees the interest for 30 years upon those bonds.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the railroad is a public improvement.

Mr. JONES. Since the minority admit that "there is a great need just now of legislation that would immediately and materially benefit the Filipinos," this complete answer to their contention that this bill, if enacted into law, will not afford immediate relief, robs them of a leg to stand upon. The next Philippine Legislature will assemble on the 16th of the coming month.

There is, Mr. Chairman, no sound reason that can be advanced for the further postponement of legislation respecting the Philippines, but there are the strongest and most imperative reasons why Congress should act as promptly as possible. Those members of the minority who insist that action on this bill at this time is inadvisable occupy untenable ground. They declare that they do not object to what they call the "conservative features" of the bill, although they do not indicate which are conservative and which radical. They do say, however, that "they are pleased that changes proposed are so comparatively slight." And they make it clear that their opposition to declaring the purpose of the people of the United States in respect to the future political status of the Philippines is quite independent of and apart from the dangers which they profess to see, or imagine they see, in the present greatly disturbed conditions of the world, and which they urge as a reason for postponing consideration of this bill. This being true, I can not but feel that the apprehensions which they profess to entertain because of the disposition to press the consideration of this bill at this particular time is not their only, or even their principal, reason for seeking postponement. Some Republicans have been quoted as expressing the belief, or at least the hope, that the next House may be Republican. May not these minority Members share their optimism? And if so, would they not regard it as good party policy to indefinitely postpone action on this bill? Upon no other theory, I think, can their apparently perturbed condition of mind be satisfactorily explained.

I have said, Mr. Chairman, that the Philippine Government was not responsible for the unfortunate conditions with which it is confronted. Since President Wilson so wisely applied the policy of Filipinization of the Philippines to the highest branch of their government by naming as members of the Philippine Commission five Filipinos and four Americans, thus giving to the Filipinos the control of both houses of their legislature, the friction that had theretofore existed to such a paralyzing extent has been entirely removed. As a striking illustration of the harmony which marked the proceedings of the last legislature it may be stated that in January last, for the first time in three years, the general appropriation bill was passed without a dissenting vote in either house. An even stronger vindication of the wisdom of President Wilson's action, and a higher tribute to the intelligence and patriotism of this Filipinized legislature is the fact that without in any respect impairing the efficiency of the government a saving of more than $1,000,000 was effected in the current annual expenses, thus averting an impending treasury deficit. According to later information recently received, a saving of more than two and a half millions of dollars, in the aggregate, will be effected this year over the total amount expended last year. But despite such rigid economies and retrenchments as these significant facts reveal, and despite the further fact that the total foreign trade of the Philippines exports and imports exceeded for the first six months of this year that of the corresponding period for last year by $6,000,000, the Harrison government is confronted, by the sudden loss of its revenues, with a serious financial situation which it behooves Congress to speedily meet.

Mr. Chairman, I must not resume my seat without some reference to the noteworthy accomplishment of Gov. Gen. Harrison within the short period that he has directed the affairs of the Philippine Government. First and foremost, it may be said that he has established a confidence on the part of the Filipino people in the justice and fairness of the American people, which, unfortunately, did not exist when he assumed the difficult and delicate duties of his high office.

He has vitalized the doctrine, so often enunciated by his predecessors in office, that "to the Filipinos belong the Philippines," by Filipinizing the public service as rapidly as a proper regard for civil-service laws and the public interests would permit. This he has accomplished in the face of much opposition and bitter criticism on the part of interested Americans temporarily resident in the islands.

He has inaugurated a system of economy and retrenchment in the expenditures of the insular government which has already saved more than a million of dollars to the Filipino taxpayers, and which promises this year a saving of two and a half times that amount without in any respect imparing the efficiency of the government.

He has caused the repeal of the law which permitted the friar lands to be sold in larger tracts than is authorized by the organic law.

He has been instrumental in the creation of the public utilities commission, the primary object of which is to prevent the exploitation of the Philippines and otherwise safeguard and protect the interests of the public.

He has brought about the enactment of a pure-food and drugs act, having for its object the protection of the health of the Filipinos.

He has reorganized the judiciary to the end that crime is now more speedily punished and justice more expeditiously dispensed.

He has substituted civil for military authority in the Moro Province, and, despite the evil forebodings of his critics, is maintaining peace and order among its inhabitants without assistance from the Army, thus proving that these uncivilized Mohammedans are less intractable than has been represented. [Applause.]

He has promoted the passage of a bill abolishing the needless bureau of navigation, with its high-salaried, superfluous, and incompetent administrators—a bureau which operated at enormous cost to the Philippine people a small fleet of government-owned vessels, serving no useful purpose and chiefly employed as the pleasure craft of high officials.

These, Mr. Chairman, are among the more notable achievements of the Harrison administration within the short space of a few months. Am I not justified, then, in saying that the ability and courage displayed by Francis Burton Harrison in the discharge of his arduous and extremely delicate duties, the just and sympathetic treatment which he has accorded the Filipino people—treatment which has won for him their love and respect and for the American people their widespread confidence—have abundantly justified the wisdom of his appointment as Governor General of the Philippine Islands?

His former colleagues, recalling his distinguished services in this House, and mindful of that loftiness of purpose and devotion to duty which ever characterized his public career in this body, will not be surprised to learn of the splendid success which has crowned his work in the far-away Philippines. To them his triumphs will bring a deep and abiding sense of just and laudable pride. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr TOWNER] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN (after a pause). Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Chair announce the result of the count.

The CHAIRMAN. So many Members have come in——

Mr. MANN. The Chair has counted some of them more than once, and still you have not got a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Ninety Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. Oh, you will not make anything by that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MANN. We are not filibustering.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] moves that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 61.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. I ask for tellers—I withdraw the demand.

Mr. MANN. No; but I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. CAMPBELL and Mr. BRUMBAUGH.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope the Chair will count those present and not voting.

Mr. MANN. The Chair can not do that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, yes.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 101.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee refuses to rise. A quorum is present, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is recognized.

Mr. TOWNER. I yield 60 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have been somewhat surprised in listening to the arguments presented by the various gentlemen representing the majority in the debate hitherto had on this bill. I am surprised because it seems to me remarkable that so many gentlemen should speak with such fervency and with such earnestness, and yet apparently be so completely fooled in the provisions and character of the bill that is before the House. However, the attitude which they have assumed here upon the floor is entirely consistent and in harmony with the attitude assumed by the majority members of the committee in the preparation and presentation of this bill. And, Mr. Chairman, I think it is of the utmost importance that we should not fool ourselves, even if we are trying to fool the people of the United States.

The bill as it is upon the calendar, with the exception of the preamble, which in no sense is a part of the bill, is a bill purely administrative in its features, and contains not an atom of politics and should never be considered from a partisan point of view. [Applause on the Republican side.]

When it became apparent that the majority of the House intended Philippine legislation at this session of Congress, the minority Members desired full well to take up the bill in a purely nonpartisan manner. We felt that American honor has been and is at stake in the administration of the affairs of the Philippine people. If we betray that honor, if we decide Philippine affairs and Philippine questions simply to bolster up party politics at home, we are unworthy of the trust that providence has given to us. But when we made the presentation of our position, desiring to consider this bill in a nonpartisan attitude, desiring to acquire all information bearing upon the subject which it was possible to secure or conveniently could be secured, and desiring then to take up the bill exactly as we took up the Porto Rican bill some months ago, we were met by the statement that "this is a party question; this is a partisan matter; information is not necessary; information is not desired. We shall write a text that shall be in harmony with partisan politics here at home." And, Mr. Chairman, while this city has been filled with men, both Democrats and Republicans, whose long period of service in the Philippine Islands has acquainted them intimately with Philippine affairs and Filipino characteristics, qualifying them to enlighten this House abundantly that we might guide our course aright, the majority closed their ears and their eyes to this testimony and preferred to legislate stupidly in the dark. Nay, more, Mr. Chairman, the Philippine Islands have a most distinguished representative who is a Member of this body, the gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON]. He is an interested spectator here to-day. He will speak before the House upon this bill; but, Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this matter by the Committee on Insular Affairs Mr. QUEZON was not allowed to say one word. During all the weeks that we considered the bill, a bill vitally affecting 8,000,000 of his brothers and sisters, this gentleman, who represents the Philippine people, with an office on the same floor as the committee room, never for one moment was permitted to enlighten the committee, to give us one particle of evidence, or to express one particle of opinion on behalf of his people.

One of two things is true—either that the gentleman from the Philippine Islands failed in the performance of his duty by not demanding and receiving an opportunity to address the committee, or the majority members of that committee decided that they would determine this question regardless of what the Philippine people wanted or what their Delegate here might say. And, Mr. Chairman, after I have examined this measure carefully, participated in its consideration by the committee, and listened to the presentation here made, I am convinced that the latter alternative states the true situation.

I have heard it said on the floor of this House recently that this bill is to comply with the platform of the Democratic Party; that its enactment into law will be the fulfillment of a Democratic campaign pledge. Never was a statement wider of the truth made upon the floor of this House. But that statement, Mr. Chairman, possesses one excellent Democratic quality; it is that of consistency. It is just as much a redemption of a Democratic campaign pledge as has been the redemption of the other pledges which they made, and no more. We know they were elected with a campaign pledge that the coastwise boats flying the American flag should sail through the Panama Canal free of tolls. We have lived to see them pass a law imposing tolls. We read in their Democratic platform a pledge to economy, and now all the world knows that the present Congress, wholly in control of the Democratic Party, has been the most profligate and extravagant that ever assembled beneath the American flag. [Applause on the Republican side.] We also have read many another of their campaign pledges. One and all have been violated and broken, with such a disregard for party honor that it is almost beyond our comprehension to grasp. There was in the Democratic platform of 1912 an older plank than them all, and, Mr. Chairman, not alone older but rottener than all of the others. It was the plank respecting the Philippine Islands. For fear some of our Democratic brethren never read the Democratic platform, or if they did have forgotten it and do not know it now, I want to invite their attention to what the promise was, so that you may measure it with the performance.

Beginning back in 1900, when the Philippine question first came to be a question affecting our national life, I find this pledge in the Democratic platform of that year:

> We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the present administration. It has involved the Republic in unnecessary war, sacrificed the lives of many of our noblest sons, and placed the United States, previously known and applauded throughout the world as the champion of freedom, in the false and un-American position of crushing with military force the efforts of our former allies to obtain liberty and self-government. The Filipinos can not be citizens without endangering our civilization. They can not be subjects without imperiling our form of government; and as we are not willing to surrender our civilization or to convert the Republic into an empire, we favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to give the Filipinos—
> 1. A stable form of government.
> 2. Independence.
> 3. Protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the Republics of Central and South America.

They promised three things: First, we should enable a stable government to be established in the Philippine Islands. Then at once we should give them their independence and protect them in it as long as there was any danger from outside interference.

Now, they got so unmercifully licked in that campaign on that which they called the paramount issue that they sidestepped their position a little in 1904, but this is what they said:

> We insist that we ought to do for the Filipinos what we have done already for the Cubans, and it is our duty to make that promise now, and, upon suitable guarantees of protection to citizens of our own and other countries resident there at the time of our withdrawal, set the Filipino people upon their feet, free and independent to work out their own destiny.

Not a word about a protectorate, not a word about neutralization, simply giving them their independence, set them on their own feet to stand or fall, if they can.

However, in 1908 they got back again to about where they started. The platform of 1912 is a verbatim repetition of that of 1908, and I want to read it that you may know exactly where you stand:

> We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandoning a fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us as we guarantee the independence of Cuba, until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

And that was repeated, as I before stated, in the campaign of 1912. That means that we should immediately declare the Filipinos are to have their independence; second, that we should guarantee their independence, and then proceed to secure a treaty of neutralization to perpetuate their integrity.

There is not a word in this bill about independence. There is not a word in this bill about neutralization. There is not a word in the bill about guaranteeing the integrity of the Philippine Islands. There is nothing about its independence except in the preamble, and the preamble does not comply with any one of the requirements of the Democratic platform.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not essential for us at this time to discuss the importance of neutralization or of guaranteeing independence if we grant it. Let us see for a moment, however, what each of these things requires. If the Democratic people and party by their platform which I have read meant that at some time independence would be given to the Philippine Islands, although it might be 50 or 100 or 200 years from now, they buncoed the Filipino people. They buncoed the people that they talked to from the platform, because we know that without a single exception they lifted their voices with all the strength and vehemence at their command, saying that the Filipino people now are fit to govern themselves, that they are capable of self-government, that their independence should be given them now. So strongly was this impressed in 1900—14 years ago—by the then candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Bryan, that he stated that if successsful he would call an extra session of Congress to give the Filipinos independence then.

Mr. Chairman, if after 14 years' tutelage and schooling they have not advanced beyond the period of 14 years ago, then they are hopeless. Of course they have advanced. Why, the Philippine Islands at this hour would never be recognized by a man who stood there in 1900. The people have changed, their manners have changed, their customs have changed, indicating a marked progress which they have made under the American flag. If they were fit for government then, they surely are now. The Republicans then said they were not, and we say so now. A Democratic majority in this House at this hour says exactly as we do. You must admit that by this bill and by its presentation at this time you admit that the Filipino people are not capable of self-government. They have not advanced to that point where they can carry on a government after we have established it. By this bill you repudiate everything you have said about the Philippine Islands and their people since the islands became ours, and by it you indorse clearly and emphatically the entire policy of the Republican Party on the Philippine question.

But let us look for a moment at one of the other two things. Suppose we should turn them loose and guarantee their independence—a beautiful dream, poetic, philosophic, and ideal. If their independence is in jeopardy, thus requiring that we guarantee it, they are in danger of invasion or being absorbed by some foreign power, and every man with peanut ability knows that that is true. Suppose, however, that we give them their independence, that we haul down the American flag, that we send the American ships back to home ports 8,000 miles away, that we withdraw all troops and soldiers; Mr. Chairman, by that very act we have absolutely incapacitated ourselves from guaranteeing their independence. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have physically made it impossible for us to carry out the purpose, even if we ever intend it.

Furthermore, is any man so childlike as to think, after the history of the last 60 days, that the American people could ever be induced to carry out such a program as that? We have recently heard it said that neutralization of a small territory is about like writing on so much scrap paper. Belgium was neutralized and now lies devastated, bleeding, and prostrate. After what we have observed, is there anyone here—does the Delegate from the Philippine Islands himself believe that neutralization could be accomplished?

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it has been the purpose of the Democratic Party to carry out their campaign pledges in respect to the Filipino people, they having been in power for about 18 months, it is high time that they should have something to offer as to neutralization. If it is the purpose to carry out their oft-repeated declaration, what have they done to secure neutralization of the independence of the islands? I fancy we will wait in vain to hear anybody reply to that question.

I myself believe, and I wish to make this statement on such authority as I have been able to gather, and I have been able to gather some, that the State Department of the present administration has endeavored to see what the nations of the world would do regarding the neutralization of the Philippine Islands, and I am informed that it has been impossible to secure the cooperation of a single nation of the world. Of course that is so. Of course that always must be so. What nation of the world now wants to shoulder a burden such as that would be, without a single compensating feature? We can not shoulder either our burden or our duty upon the back of the rest of the world. Of course not. Independent, and a neutralized land is a poetic fancy; beautiful, I say, but absolutely impracticable.

To return now for a moment to exactly what this bill does, I am not going to enter into a discussion of the various detailed provisions it contains, but I want to talk about the burden of the bill, the change that it makes in the basic principle of our relations with the Philippine Islands if it makes any. After we have looked into this for a while, we find it makes no change in a policy that was established 14 years ago respecting the Philippine Islands, and which has been followed uninterruptedly from that hour to this. In the first place, when we established civil government in the Philippines, we found a people who had never had an hour's practice in self-government. We found a people that were not educated; we found a people that had been taught every lesson in government which a people ought not to learn; we found a people that had never been taught a lesson in self-government that any self-governing people must learn. Their sovereignty had been such as to blight any incipient notion ever brought to their islands by their countrymen who had traveled abroad respecting independence and liberty. About them they found no examples, and they had no neighbors who, by their example, could aid them. There was an empire to the north, an empire farther to the west, and the islands of the sea, with no republican form of self-government in all that part of the great hemisphere. So, Mr. Chairman, it is not remarkable at all that we found them in a condition where they had pretty nearly nothing to start with.

I do not like to criticize anyone particularly, but a statement was made here on Saturday to which I desire to pay some little attention at this time. In response to a question asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], the representative of the Filipino people on the floor of the House [Mr. QUEZON] stated that in his judgment the Filipino people would have made as great progress in their education and schools had they been left alone by themselves as they have made under American tutelage and instruction. Mr. Chairman, I think I know why the gentleman from the Philippines made the statement. I would not embarrass him at this moment by giving the reason, but I do know this: I know that a more marked, complete misstatement of the situation could not be made. I will say this: It is a characteristic of the Filipino people—they have many lovely and beautiful characteristics as well—it is one characteristic that they never like to admit that anybody else can do anything as well as they can. That is an American characteristic also, but the Filipino people have it a little stronger than I have ever found it anywhere else in the world. It does not matter where you go, it does not matter what you see, you can find at hand always Filipinos ready to say that if left alone they could have done it just as well and perhaps better. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, it is not an argument in behalf of the Filipino people, testifying to their present competence and capacity to handle their own affairs, for their distinguished leader—and distinguished he is—to make a statement of that kind. It is contrary to the common sense, contrary to the judgment, of mankind who may never have seen or heard of the Philippine Islands, and of necessity must be wholly out of harmony with the facts.

Just let me give a few moments' attention to the system of public education in the Philippines. When the American flag was first unfurled in that part of the globe there was no adequate system of public instruction. There was a paper system promulgated by the Spanish Government, which was never put into effect. If you could read the beautiful reports which the governor general sent back to the Cortes of Spain, you would find many glowing accounts of the schools and the teachers and the pupils; but the teachers and the schools and the pupils had little physical existence outside of the imagination of the man who penned the lines. There were some schools back a little earlier than 1898. They were mostly church schools. There were no public schools, however, under the supervision of the Government, excepting a limited few. And what did they teach? I have seen the buildings they were in—if you could call them buildings. You would not put a dog in such a place; and if you would put a self-respecting hog in there, he would go out in the sunshine, amidst God's green grass, to live, and live decently. That was the kind of buildings the Spanish provided, so far as they provided any at all, for schools.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Chairman, I have been educated in the public schools. I want to make just one statement. The gentleman does not pretend to say that we did not have any kind of public schools?

Mr. MILLER. I have just stated that there was some system.

Mr. QUEZON. My native town is 150 miles north of Manila; it is very small and is in the mountains; and there was a public school in my town, and I was educated in the public school and it was not a church school, either.

Mr. MILLER. I was just stating what the gentleman has said. It is his misfortune that he did not have the benefit of schools existing there for the last 14 years, and it is to his great credit that he has made such a wonderful career with the education given him at that time.

Mr. QUEZON. We have 2,000 public schools.

Mr. MILLER. But he will agree with me that the education which really has fitted him for his life work he acquired after he left that school. Let me continue a little further in the description of those schools. It is true there were some of those schools, running to-day, closed to-morrow, supported now, denied to-morrow. Anyone who observed the course of instruction, however, must have been forcibly struck by the fact that it had no possible connection or relationship in fitting a boy or a girl for citizenship or to perform a citizen's part in a self-governing community. It was not designed or adapted either to give them advancement in industrial life or to fit them for the responsibilities of government to be carried on by themselves. They did have some system of schools, and I trust I have been fair and impartial in whatever I have said to the extent of the time that I have devoted to it; but, Mr. Chairman, those schools were all closed at the time we went there. The American soldier no sooner had participated in the pacification of an area than he became a school-teacher, and he has carried it on from that day to this. In many remote and distant jungles or on mountain sides, where only wild people live, where only soldiers of our Caucasian race have penetrated, I found those soldiers setting up and maintaining a little school. The American flag has meant not only safety and protection, but it has meant education. [Applause.] After the soldier came the American school-teacher and established a system of schools and gave an education adapted to fit them for an industrial life and to fit them for self-government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the 14 years we have been there we have built schools in nearly every section, and when I use the term "we" I want to indorse what the gentleman from the Philippines said last Saturday. We have not paid for it; it has been paid for by the Filipino people. We have been the supervising directors, we have promulgated a system, and we have supervised its operation. The Filipino people, however, have paid the bills, and it is to their eternal credit that they should have done so; and perhaps I might be pardoned if I should pause long enough to refute a common expression respecting the cost of the Philippines to the United States. I have heard it stated by gentlemen on this floor, and I have frequently heard it stated among the people of our country, that the Philippine Islands are a source of great expense to us. Not at all. When we speak of road building and bridge building, when we speak of school buildings and public buildings, when we speak of sanitation, health, and all that great work of regeneration and public benefaction carried on in the islands, we speak of development that is paid for by the Filipino people.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman say that all of these expenses were paid for by the Filipino people?

Mr. MILLER. Those I have enumerated are.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that shortly after we acquired the Philippines we passed a tariff law in reference to merchandise passing between the Philippines and the United States and levying a rate of duty on goods imported from the Philippines to the United States, and on goods imported to the Philippines from the United States, and turned all the money which was collected at both sources over to the Philippine government?

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is entirely correct in that statement, which was some years ago.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it came down to the Underwood tariff law.

Mr. MILLER. That is true, that in tariff matters the Filipino people have received many benefits from congressional enactments of this body.

Mr. MANN. Well, they got the money—not merely the benefits, but they got the money out of us.

Mr. MILLER. That is true, and to a certain extent the statement is entirely proper. I say, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] could make himself stronger if he should state the volume of that money. It was practically a small amount that came out of the customs to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to yield my time——

Mr. MANN. It was a very considerable amount.

Mr. MILLER (continuing). For discussion to other gentlemen; but the gentleman from Illinois has stated it was substantially a large sum in fact.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. DONOVAN. It is a matter of record, and the records will bear me out that it was a considerable sum of money.

Mr. MILLER. Let the gentleman put the figures in the RECORD, if he desires to do so.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I do.

Mr. HELM. Do I understand the gentleman to make the statement that there has been no considerable expense devolving upon the United States by reason of its occupancy of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. MILLER. Well, yes. I have in mind what the gentleman is about to say, and if he will make it exceedingly brief I am willing for him to inject it here.

Mr. HELM. Do I understand that the gentleman excluded the estimated cost in June, 1902, by Senator Hoar of $600,000,000 that had been expended to that date by the United States, from the beginning of the Philippine war up to that date, in maintaining our Army?

Mr. MILLER. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that I have attended a great many Fourth of July celebrations where bombastic oratory was soaring and statements were made as wide from the facts as they could be made, but I do not think I ever heard any quite so wide from the truth as that statement to which the gentleman referred. [Applause on the Republican side.] And everybody who knows anything about the Philippine Islands at all——

Mr. HELM. Do I understand the gentleman as taking issue that Senator Hoar, who was a very eminent Republican, made that statement? Does the gentleman deny that he made that statement?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly I could not deny it; I could not deny it. I have no intention of denying he made the statement.

Mr. HELM. Then the gentleman's statement is that Senator Hoar himself made a mistake?

Mr. MILLER. If anybody made the statement, it was a misstatement.

Mr. HELM. Well, if it was stated in August, 1911, that the maintenance of our army in the Philippines for the then last 10 or 12 years was at an expense of $167,486,000 in excess of the cost of maintaining an army of similar size in the United States, would the gentleman say that was a false statement also?

Mr. MILLER. I anticipated the gentleman's remark by what I said previously, that I expected to get that statement. I believe the gentleman's figures are excessive. The only charge against the American people incident to our Philippine relations for many years, for which we paid out money directly, has been such increase in the cost of maintaining the army in the islands over the amount it would have cost had they been elsewhere in the United States.

Mr. HELM. Just right there.

Mr. MILLER. But it is no such sum as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. HELM. This statement was made by Gen. Wood, who was then Chief of Staff.

Mr. MILLER. I do not feel that I can yield further for discussion.

Mr. HELM. I simply want to know if the gentleman considers himself in a better position to know what had been expended for the maintenance of the army there than Gen. Wood, who was then Chief of Staff of the Army?

Mr. MILLER. The reports to Congress contain all the information on this subject that any gentleman could possibly require.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that we passed a resolution asking the War Department to report to us what the cost had been to the United States, and they said it was not possible to determine it?

Mr. MILLER. I thank the gentleman for the statement. That is entirely true.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky may be able to determine it, but the War Department could not.

Mr. HELM. I would like to state that this statement of Gen. Wood was in response to that resolution.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] will have time and can make any presentation of that fact that he cares to make.

But to return to the argument I was about to make respecting the system of education in the Philippine Islands. No sooner had the American soldier started to become a schoolteacher than we took up the matter of public education of the Philippine Islands in a big way, commensurate with the way the American people do things. We advertised for and secured by careful selection about 1,000 first-class American schoolteachers. And, Mr. Chairman, they have gone into all parts and sections of the islands. They have been missionaries not only of light and learning to an ignorant people, but they have been missionaries of character, missionaries of ideals, missionaries of all the high concepts of manhood and womanhood that American civilization stands for. [Applause on the Republican side.] I believe I am well within the facts when I say that the work of the American school-teacher in the Philippine Islands is the most notable achievement that stands to the credit of any missionary or any group of people, secular or religious, since human history began. [Applause on the Republican side.] Not only did they instruct the youth as buildings were provided and funds procured, but they did that which was equally necessary and has since proven to be absolutely indispensable, they started to teach the Filipino people to be teachers. They started with about 150,000 children in the schools. There are now 550,000 Filipino children enjoying a splendid system of instruction in the islands. There are to-day about 700 American teachers engaged in the work—a less number than there were at the outset—all there in a supervisory capacity. The great bulk of the instruction to-day is by Filipino teachers, of whom there are above 8,000. Why, Mr. Chairman, when we think that 14 years ago there was not a single Filipino capable of being a teacher in the system of schools established, and to-day there are 8,000, what wonderful progress has been made!

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from the Philippines?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. QUEZON. Does the gentleman mean to say that there was not a single Filipino capable of being a teacher?

Mr. MILLER. I hope the gentleman heard my statement. I said there was not a single Filipino capable of being a teacher in the system of schools then established.

Mr. QUEZON. Because you were teaching English.

Mr. MILLER. We were teaching a thousand things—something besides the catechism, I admit.

Mr. QUEZON. There were Filipino teachers.

Mr. MILLER. But only a handful throughout the islands, and not qualified to teach in the system of public schools that was then established and has since been carried on. If it be stated that without American instruction and guidance the Filipino people could have accomplished as much as they have, then the part of the Scripture wherein it says "If the blind lead the blind, they fall in the ditch" is untrue and unworthy of a place in human philosophy. They have been led and wisely led, and they have responded nobly.

Now, I wish to make a statement further testifying to the statement offered by the gentleman from the Philippines on Saturday. The Filipino people have taken to education with wonderful alacrity. It is to their credit. I have traveled not alone in the larger centers, but out in the Provinces and remote regions, where the American schoolhouse and Filipino schoolhouse are combined, the Filipino schoolhouse erected by American genius and Filipino money, situated out among the palms and the pines, and I have seen the boys and girls there at 7 o'clock in the morning waiting for school to open. There are not schools enough there now to accommodate all the children. There are more than 1,000,000 children of school age in the Philippine Islands. They are being cared for and accommodated, however, just as rapidly as buildings can be constructed and teachers employed.

I think I am well within the facts when I say that the greatest handicap yet experienced in extending the school system is the lack of teachers. There is a splendid normal school in the city of Manila, where 1,200 Filipino men and women are studying to become teachers, and they are doing magnificent work. No one can see what they are doing or what has been done without having anything but the highest praise for it all. But, my good friends, the genius back of the entire movement has been the genius of the American. The Filipino has accepted it, embraced it, utilized it, all to his credit, but without the Americans it never could have been. If not so, then why do you find the condition in the other islands of Polynesia that you do? The Philippine Islands at the present is the only section of that quarter of the globe where there is a real public system of instruction.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he is informed that before the American occupation of the Philippines the main cause of our dissatisfaction against Spain was the desire of the Filipino people to get more and better education in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. MILLER. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. QUEZON. Then where did the American Government help to instill that desire for education in our minds?

Mr. MILLER. The American gave spirit to and enlarged the Filipino desire to learn, but without America where would you have procured the teachers, where would you have had the instruction, where would you have had the system of education that you have to-day? I want to say something further about the system of education. I have been a school-teacher during a period of my life that I look back upon with probably more satisfaction than upon any other period of my existence. I conceive that a school-teacher is performing about as high and satisfactory service as is performed by any class of people in the United States. So when I see a public system of instruction I think I am entitled to have some notion respecting it. When I visited the islands I made it my special purpose to investigate and visit the public-school system wherever it could be found. I think I visited pretty nearly every school of importance in the islands, and I visited hundreds, literally hundreds, of the small primary schools. I therefore make this statement after a full investigation: I believe that the system of education which we have established and maintained in the Philippine Islands is the best adapted to the needs of its people of any system of education existing anywhere among any people on earth.

Never in any other region has industrial education been carried to the logical and extended limit that it has been carried in the Philippine Islands. From the time a child first enters school, whether a boy or a girl, that child learns to work with the hands, learns to perform some manual labor in an industrial line that will equip him or her for future usefulness in life; and one of the greatest things the schools have done is to dignify human labor, and no man can possibly appreciate this more than certainly will the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON]. You see some remnants of that old prejudice against labor there, although, thank goodness, under 14 years of American occupation it has been rapidly dissipated. There is a feeling that physical labor is degrading. I think that came from the Spanish idea. We had not only to teach the people industrial occupations, but we had to teach them that physical labor is manly and womanly and honorable in every respect; and to have accomplished that is, to my mind, probably as great an achievement as any. All through the schools, from the primary up through the intermediate grades to the high schools, even into the normal schools and colleges, the girls are taught domestic science, embroidery, lace making, hat making, and a score or more of other industrial pursuits. Likewise, the boys are trained in all manner of manual training. They are trained to be carpenters, to be blacksmiths, to be machinists.

The Filipinos need industrial training as they need nothing else. They need it even more than they need to have the philosophy of education expounded unto them, and such has been the system that has been endowed and established there; and it is beyond human comprehension how any gentleman would care to make the statement that, unaided and unguided, they could have achieved this remarkable result.

I am going to make this statement here publicly, although I almost regret the necessity of making it. I had two objects in view in studying the school system in the Philippines. I wanted to see how it was adapted to training boys and girls for future responsibilities as citizens. I also wanted to see what was the result to the school of removing American supervision. So I traveled and I saw. I found that wherever American supervision was immediate, was direct, was there on the ground, the work of the teacher and the children and the school was efficient. It was what you might call satisfactory. The spirit was good. The morale was good. Things were shipshape. The atmosphere was such as you would like to see in a school. But, without a single exception, when you removed that immediate supervision and allowed a school in charge of a Filipino teacher to be removed and separated and to exist by itself the decline was immediate and most disheartening.

Oh, I visited so many of the schools that if they had not been named "schools" I would never have known that they were schools, because the supervision was not there; eloquently testifying to the capacity of the Filipino teachers to respond to the ideas that they see, and to the utmost importance of the supervision and direction on the part of the American supervising force. This does not mean the Filipino teacher never can be self-reliant; it simply means that, while advancing, he has not yet reached it.

Mr. Chairman, I have occupied vastly more time in discussing education in the Philippines than I ever expected to. I want now to advert very briefly to what has been done in the Philippine Islands in the extension of the policy inaugurated there at the time President McKinley sent his message to the first commission.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], so that he can govern himself accordingly, that he has 10 minutes more of his hour, and I intend to yield to him 10 minutes after the expiration of that time, so that he has now 20 minutes in all.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the gentleman. In the first place, it must be remembered that not only had a system of education to be established, but that Filipino people had to be trained to exercise the responsibility of governing positions even in the small places. Now, I recognize that under the Spanish régime there were a great number of Filipino officials; but the way the government was transacted under Spanish direction and requirement was such as to make it practically impossible for those men to possess any value in the experience which they had enjoyed, so that we had to train men for the work.

I find, in looking over the history of the Philippine Island government, that to-day, without this bill in effect, under the Republican administration almost complete self-government has been given to the Filipino people. The Philippine Islands are grouped in municipalities. Every municipality is governed entirely by Filipino people; only with a check upon the work in the hands of the American Central Government, utilized and exercised only as necessity requires. The Provinces are almost entirely within the control of the Filipino people themselves. There are three officials in the governing board—a governor, the third member, and the treasurer. The first two are Filipinos. We found by experience that it was necessary that the treasurer should be an American, although at the outset we had a Filipino treasurer as well. In the insular government in 1907 an assembly, popularly elected by the people, was established as the lower house of the legislature.

I might recite many other things, all showing that at every possible step a still greater and further participation in their government has been given to the Filipino people.

Now, this bill is but an added step in that direction. This bill goes a step further. It is in complete harmony with the policy pursued by the Republican administration from the days of William McKinley until now. There is nothing new in this bill; there is nothing revolutionary in it, as far as policy is concerned; but there are, most unfortunately, some most vicious provisions which unquestionably would have been eliminated, in my judgment, if the consideration and preparation of the bill had been approached from the nonpartisan standpoint and everybody worked together to perfect it. It is by reason of those features that we find it necessary to oppose the bill as a whole.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] in a most remarkable statement last Saturday and somewhat further to-day claims that this bill is desired by the Filipino people; that they want this bill. After listening to what he said and reading his report I thought they were all like the children of America, who cry for Castoria; that they are crying for the Jones bill—the bill Honas, as they call it over there in the Spanish language. I thought from what he said and after reading his report that from early morning until late at night the old and the aged, the manly and the strong, the infant and the weak were praying and crying for Bill Jones. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON] only prays in his heart this minute that that were true. As a matter of fact, it is not true. The gentleman has stated a half truth which contains all the elements of a misstatement, which he did not intend to make. I desire to be understood that I do not accuse him of deliberately and intentionally making a misstatement; but the statement that he made is only a half truth, which is in effect a whole untruth. I want to introduce the membership of the House to some of the yearnings on the part of the Filipino people for this bill. I am going to read to you an account of some meetings called in the Philippine Islands the minute they heard about this bill and what it provided. It may be that the Democratic Members of this House can beguile themselves into believing that this bill is a fulfillment of their hitherto announced position toward the Philippine Islands, but you can not make the Filipino people believe it. You may bunco yourselves, but you can not bunco them.

Now listen to some of the things they have to say about the bill. I am reading from the Cablenews-American its account of a meeting in its issue of June 13:

CONDEMN DEMOCRATS AT MASS MEETING—HARRISON'S POLICIES ARE ROUNDLY SCORED AND HE IS BLAMED FOR PRESENT ECONOMIC DEPRESSION.

A hot protest was made Friday night before between five and six thousand people gathered in the vicinity of the Katubusan cigar factory against the new Jones bill and the attitude not only of its author but also against that of the Democratic majority in Congress in regard to the independence of the Philippines.

The chief note of the gathering was its orderliness, and the police reserves that were held in readiness and the plain-clothes men who mixed with the crowd did not have to intervene in any way to keep peace.

The speeches were for the most part made in Tagalog, but the theme of them all was the same—a protest against the failure on the part of the Democratic Party to fix the date of ultimate independence. Personalities were forgotten. Even local political parties were left free from attack, the keynote of the speeches being, "We want independence and not parties. Down with personalities and long live principles."

The leading speakers were to have been Teodoro Sandico and Dominador Gomez, but neither was able to attend, the former because he had been called to Bulacan to address a meeting there and the latter because he was confined to his bed with catarrh.

While this was a disappointment to the crowd, other speakers made up in great measure for their absence. Among the chief speakers were Pedro Gil, of the Consolidacion Nacional, and Antonio Montenegro, one of the leaders of the new third party.

Señor Gil called attention to the fact that the Filipino people were playing their last card in the independence question, and that their silence in the face of the present situation would be looked upon badly in Washington. He and other speakers also called attention to the fact that the Republican Party had been more honest in their attitude toward the Filipino people than had the Democrats, who, while they declared for the justice of the cause of independence, were now backing out of their promise.

Congressman MILLER, with his scheme of an elective senate, also came in for much praise—

You will pardon me for reading this portion of the gentleman's speech, and I pause long enough to state that the one thing that I did in my own mind determine by reason of my visit to the islands as an essential and proper step soon to take was to give the Filipino people an elective senate, that they might have a complete legislative body elected by themselves—

it being held that even that was much more favorable than the present nondescript scheme, which left the matter where it was in the days when President Taft declared for independence when the people showed their capacity for it.

The policy of Gov. Gen. Harrison was roundly scored. The present economic depression was laid to his door as much as to that of the Democratic Party in the States, and several of the speakers went so far as to declare that the change of administration had been disastrous for the country.

It was finally announced that this morning a cable would be sent to the President of the United States denouncing the Jones bill and asking that a definite time for the granting of independence be fixed.

That cablegram was sent. I did not see anything about it in the report of the committee or in the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia.

Seven thousand members of the seamen's union also clubbed together to cover the cost of a cable in the same terms.

Among the interested spectators, though standing in the background, was Speaker Sergio Osmeña, accompanied by his aid, Antonio Torres.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's hour has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask if that paper from which the gentleman read that account is not an American paper, and if it has not always been regarded as bitterly anti-Filipino?

Mr. MILLER. I would not say that the last statement is true. The first statement is true. It is edited by an American; but if the gentleman has any doubt about its accuracy, if he will hold his patience for a moment, I am going to read him a volume of stuff from Filipino papers if I have the time. I am going to read some of it, anyhow. That was a meeting of five or six thousand. There were many of these meetings where there were thousands and thousands present, protesting in the strongest language against the Jones bill. Here is another one from the Manila Times, not the Cablenews-American, giving an account of another mass meeting of Filipinos:

THREATENED MAN WHO PRAISED JONES BILL—SPEAKER PREFERS TAFT TO JONES, AND IS CHEERED.

That ex-President's Taft's suggestion to grant the Philippines independence after three generations is infinitely better than the new Jones bill, which sets no time at all, was the assertion which Sr. Medina, one of the leaders of the Partido Democrata Nacional, made during a powerful speech delivered before a great crowd assembled around the band stand on calle Moriones last night for the purpose of protesting against the passage of the new Jones bill. This statement was received with enthusiastic applause by the multitude, thus showing the intense feeling of disapprobation which they have against the said bill.

The meeting commenced shortly after 9 o'clock, which was one hour later than the scheduled time, the delay being due to the nonappearance of Dominador Gomez and Isabelo de los Reyes, who had promised to speak on the occasion. As the crowd showed signs of impatience, due to the nonarrival of these gentlemen, Sr. Medina was introduced, after whom Gen. Antonio Montenegro and ex-Gov. Teodoro Sandiko also spoke.

Gen. Montenegro whelmed the entire Nacionalista Party in a comprehensive condemnation. He called the members of that organization humbugs, despots, and ungrateful. The Nacionalistas, he said, made all kinds of promises to the people while they were candidates for office, but once the people had placed them in the coveted places, both the people and the promises were forgotten. For these reasons, nevermore should the citizens place their confidence and trust in them.

Gen. Montenegro then changed his topic and spoke of the new Jones bill. But hardly had he pronounced a few sentences against the measure when a man emerged from amidst the crowd and asked to be allowed to say a few words. This request was courteously granted by the speaker, who afterwards regretted having done so: for the unknown speaker, holding an entirely different opinion in regard to the Jones bill from that entertained by the previous speakers, challenged the statements made by the general, and in vehement language called "ignorants" those who would say a word against the measure. "This law," he said, "is still in the air. No copy of it has yet been received in the islands. We do not know whether, when finally presented by its author to Congress for approval, it will have the same provisions that it is reported to have to-day. All criticisms, therefore, are premature, and those who are trying to wage a campaign against it are fighting against their own shadows."

But here a thunder of protest burst from the infuriated crowd, who, incensed by the somewhat complimentary remarks of the speaker, filled the air with cries of "Fuera! Fuera! You are not a Filipino! We are all against the Jones bill. You are the only one in favor of it. You are not a Filipino! Fuera!"

The gentleman from the Philippines knows what "Fuera" means.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. We do not know.

Mr. MILLER. It means "Begone, away from here; you are not of us."

The words were uttered with such anger by the excited crowd that for a time the life of the man seemed to be in danger; but, thanks to the presence of a number of police, the incident passed without actual violence.

Peace was restored when Teodoro Sandiko was introduced, and that gentleman had an opportunity to discuss the question calmly. Among the statements made by him the most notable was that in which he advocated a reform of the present law so as to extend the right of suffrage to those who are able to write in their native language. "In America," he remarked, "the people are not required to speak or write any foreign language in order that they may be allowed to vote at public elections," and it seemed illogical that Americans should see fit to enforce such a rule here.

As both Dominador Gomez and Isabelo failed to show up, the crowd dispersed at the termination of Sandiko's speech.

Now the gentleman here, Señor QUEZON, knew what the Filipino people had been led to believe, knew the attitude that they would immediately take toward this bill, and he took counsel to see what he might do. There are two Resident Commissioners, Mr. QUEZON and Mr. EARNSHAW. Where is Señor EARNSHAW? Where has he been for the last four months? I will tell you. The moment the White House gave an edict that this bill and this bill alone should pass, Mr. EARNSHAW, in desperation, hurried to the Philippine Islands in an effort to sugar-coat the bill. He carried in his possession a draft of the bill. It was known that he was coming. The day and hour was set for his arrival. A great outpouring of Filipinos gathered in the opera house, before whom Señor EARNSHAW proceeded at once to read and explain the bill. I wish I had time to give you a full account of what occurred on that memorable occasion. I can only give a little. Here is the account:

Between four and five thousand persons, a large majority of whom represented the anti-Osmeña forces of the progresista and third parties, packed the big auditorium to its fullest capacity, and alternatively cheered and jeered as the adherents and opponents of the fixed-date propaganda strove to gain a hearing. At one time only was there any semblance of continued calm, and that was during the address of Commissioner EARNSHAW.

At the opening of the meeting the proposal for a resolution of confidence to be cabled to Commissioner QUEZON was presented, but in its original form it contained no reference to "a fixed date." Attorney Jose O. Vera was on his feet almost instantly with a proposal to amend the draft by the addition of the words "at a fixed date," thereby winning for himself thunderous applause from the vast assemblage. On the proposed amendment there was a heated argument, during the course of which those who arose to oppose it were hooted down by the crowd, while those who appeared in its defense were cheered to the echo.

Before the vote on the question was taken, however, Commissioner EARNSHAW was introduced by Assemblyman de la Rosa. At this the tumult abated, and the audience listened with rapt attention during the whole of his rather protracted address. At its close he was heartily applauded, but scarcely had he withdrawn from the stage before pandemonium was again let loose. The cause for this outbreak was the apparent intention on the part of those in charge of the meeting to adjourn it without calling for the vote on the "fixed-date" amendment offered by Attorney Vera.

A score of the more fervent of the radicals pushed forward to the orchestra chairs, shaking their fists at the members of the committee and demanding that the vote be taken immediately. Mariano Lim, who was acting as master of ceremonies, finally stilled the crowd long enough to call upon those in favor of the proposed amendment to raise their hands. Instantly almost the entire house was upon its feet, and the forest of waving hands gave ample proof of the sentiment of the crowd. A call for those opposed to the proposed amendment was responded to by a score or so of intrepid spirits, but these were ignominiously jerked off of their feet by those in favor of the measure.

The announcement that the amendment had been carried was the signal for a wild demonstration of enthusiasm, which lasted for a full quarter of an hour, at the conclusion of which, after vain calls for Sandiko to address the meeting, the crowd slowly dispersed.

That was a meeting called by the friends of Señor QUEZON and Señor EARNSHAW that Señor EARNSHAW might have himself a favorable opportunity for presenting the terms of this bill, and, if possible, to get the Filipino people to like it. How far he got that account shows. Now, this was the resolution they had previously prepared and which they expected to jam through:

The Filipino people, including all classes, interests, and vital forces of the country, in public session assembled, solemnly ratify the confidence reposed in you and your comrade, the Hon. MANUEL EARNSHAW, to secure from the Congress of the United States the immediate concession of our independence.

But that would not satisfy the crowd. Four or five thousand against twenty persons insisted upon adding these words, "at a fixed date." And those words were added at the end. So, my good friends, if you think you are satisfying your consciences by the bill which you have here, you are a long ways from satisfying the Filipino people that you have not betrayed the confidence they placed in you.

For fear the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] will be disinclined to believe the Americans when they talk, preferring to rely upon the statements of Filipinos when they talk, I want to, for his information, give some of the accounts of the Filipinos of this meeting, and I am going to print in the RECORD a lot of extracts that I have not time to give here. Here is what a leading Filipino paper, Consolodacion Nacional, says:

It is truly sad to observe the inexplicable attitude adopted by the Osmeñaites with reference to the imposing manifestation of popular will at the Grand Opera House on Sunday last. Just because the meeting convoked by the Osmeña gang themselves did not do what was desired—the people feeling the weight of responsibility resting upon them, acting spontaneously and expressing their will—Osmeña and his satellites are now publicly showing their contempt of the will of the people. Drunk with power, they are beginning to think that their mandates must be complied with invariably, that their will must be accepted by the people as the supreme law, without protest, without recalling that the power of the bosses is derived from the people. To these unfortunates the people are the charmed circle of their political adherents, and they are always ready with words of scorn for the masses of the people, the real backbone of the country, who make known their will by the force of their votes under a government where the will of the people is supreme. But what do these enemies of democracy really seek to accomplish? Are they trying to establish an oligarchy here so as to be able to give free rein to their caprices and to do violence with impunity to the interests of the majority? It seems almost incredible that after more than nine months of a Democratic administration, in which every effort has been made to instruct the Filipino people in the art of self-government, there should still remain among us men who can not free themselves from these pernicious ideas of political absolutism.

The people treacherously and cowardly abandoned and neglected by the Osmeñistas and the members of the extinct Liga Popular Nacionalista have been welcomed by the Partido Nacional Democrata and the Progresistas, says La Democracia. This fact, which constitutes the political sensation of the hour, was the cause of the colossal downfall of the Gran Partido Nacionalista at the mass meeting held last Sunday at the Grand Opera House.

We are not going to discuss whether or not the people have a right to ask for a fixed date for the concession of our independence. But at the convention held yesterday morning at the Grand Opera House they have proved that they can not always be made the unconscious, pliant instruments of our double-dealing and conspiring politicians and that they have the courage of their own dogmas and convictions.

The death knell of the inflated Immediatistas was sounded yesterday at the opera house, because the people have at last come to their own and realized the dangerous elasticity of the vague but alluring policy advocated by the Osmeñistas and that the inconsistent attitude of the latter has proved that either the Progresistas were right in not fixing the date for independence or that the policy of the Osmeñistas is nothing short of a wildcat political scheme and efficient means by which to ascend the heights of government power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, here is an extract from another Filipino paper, La Vanguardia:

The Grand Opera House meeting Sunday was a political event of the first order. A most delicate and fundamental question was discussed, namely, the fixing of a date for independence and the attitude our representatives in Washington should adopt. These matters had been aired previously in rather heated discussion, and varied opinions were expressed. But at yesterday's meeting perfect harmony prevailed. It is true that there were explosions of enthusiasm and manifestations for or against certain of the speakers. But this is only natural in affairs of that kind. The meeting clearly shows that there really exists a public opinion. Our detractors insistently denied this. The public, which yesterday gathered at the Grand Opera House, understood that in order to assure the success of our cause in the United States it is necessary to give new encouragement to them and reiterate our faith in our standard bearers, who are sacrificing themselves by leaving their country and interpreting at Washington the will of the people of the Philippines. As one man, and seemingly moved by one patriotic sentiment, the gathering voted on the principal point, which is that of confidence in our representatives.

El Ideal is the official organ of the Nacionalista Party, the party now in power. Speaking of the opera-house meeting, this paper says:

The people at the Sunday meeting said, "We want immediate independence, and we ask our delegates at Washington to secure it." This is exactly what the great Nacionalista Party always has preached, and is preaching to-day. What will the American Nation say to the petition of the Filipino people? This question only the Resident Commissioners can answer, because they know the situation in the United States. Two bills have been introduced by the Democrats anent the Philippine problem—the old Jones bill, which fixes the date of independence, and the new measure, which does not.

After quoting President Wilson's words stating his position with reference to the fixing of a date, El Ideal continues:

These words indicate, first, that the present administration is not inclined to grant us immediate independence; and, secondly, that the only thing that can be conceded to us is the new Jones bill. The question has been thus put by Commissioner EARNSHAW: "Shall we accept the new Jones bill without prejudice to our right to continue advocating independence in the future, or shall we prefer to have things remain as they are now?" Speaking for ourselves, we are in favor of the new Jones bill; decidedly so. Not to accept it would be an act of insanity. When the Philippine Assembly was inaugurated the people accepted it as a concession. They did not renounce their ideals, and remained determined to work for still larger concessions. When Gov. Gen. Harrison brought us the news that there was to be a Filipino majority on the commission, we accepted that concession for the same reason and without renouncing our ideals. Why are we now to reject a positive benefit, just because our ultimate object is to attain a thing which at present is not conceded, but still not renounced? The race of Don Quijotes, we believe, is a thing of the past, at least in the Philippines. If you become tired out, finding your path obstructed by dense growth, you will accept a glass of water and a little morisqueta, won't you, so as to gain renewed strength to continue the arduous journey to the top.

Now, that is from the Nationalist organ, the organ of the party represented by Señor QUEZON, and the party in control. Whether or not they like this new Jones bill, you can be assured they would not rush into print against it, and to say what they did must have been inspired by strong feeling.

Speaking generally, La Democracia, another Filipino paper, says:

The new Jones bill, which has been the cause of a vigorous protest made manifest in the press and in the meetings, puts in bold relief the discrepancy among the prominent Nacionalistas and a great part of the people.

This state of affairs should no longer continue, if the intention is to give the Philippines a democratic and not a despotic government, with the sole control and will of high-handed caciques. In matters like independence, which vitally and directly affects the Filipinos, Congress, like the President of the United States, should consult the diverse opinions prevalent among the Filipinos before approving or adopting any measure or resolution concerning the Philippines. In this way Congress would act with more wisdom and tact, and it would not be said that the Filipino people are governed by a lot of petty tyrants.

We have no doubt that President Wilson acts in good faith, but we believe that it will be erroneous and in a certain way prejudicial to consult exclusively the personal opinion of Señor QUEZON concerning anything anent the question, because measures would then be adopted without first consulting the opinion of the majority of the Filipinos, measures which would perhaps be against our own interest. As a concrete case, we have the new Jones bill, which does not seem to have the solid support of the majority of our people.

It is undeniable that neither QUEZON or Osmeña represent the opinion of a considerable portion of the Filipino people, as is proved by the fact that there now exist two distinct Nacionalista parties, besides many other important elements, which, although being independent in politics, can not by any means be indifferent when dealing with a great and important question such as the independence of their country.

This is just as much as the Filipino people love the Jones bill.

But we have the words of the Resident Commissioner himself in respect to how he apprehends his countrymen will take the new Jones bill. Not even sending one of the commissioners back in an effort to appease the people did they think would be sufficient. So hundreds of cablegrams had to be sent, and some of them go a long way. This is from Señor QUEZON himself. It is an account given by the newspaper publishing the telegram:

PRESENT MEASURE ALL HE COULD GET IS REPORT MADE BY QUEZON—IF PRESENT PHILIPPINE BILL FAILS, DOESN'T THINK FUTURE CONGRESS WOULD GIVE AS MUCH.

That the Filipino Resident Commissioners in the United States submitted a bill to President Wilson establishing a Philippine constitution and a Filipino republic, but that the President opposed it, is the news contained in a lengthy communication given out at the office of the secretary of the assembly this morning.

The communication is from Speaker Osmeña and was received several days ago, with orders that it should be given out only when the Jones bill was presented to Congress. It contains an expression from the Resident Commissioners in which they justify their attitude in supporting the new Jones bill. This expression of sentiments follows:

"The Jones bill is the result of a long and continuous struggle and can be called a compromise measure.

"On our return from the Philippines in last December we submitted to the President and to other Democratic leaders the independence bill prepared in the islands, which provided for the approval of a constitution and the immediate relinquishment of American control after the establishment of the government created by the constitution. But all our efforts were without avail.

"Then we urged the consideration of the original bill known as the Jones bill, but the President objected to this bill on the ground that the time could not be predicted when independence could be given.

"Because of pressure of domestic matters as well as foreign affairs we found that the administration was not disposed to consider the Philippine question, and besides this there was the incessant and vigorous labor of our opponents not only to prevent consideration of an independence measure, but also any other bill giving new concessions to the Philippines.

"The situation seemed very discouraging to us, especially as we realized that if we continued to insist on a bill conceding immediate independence or fixing a date when that independence should be given our efforts would be resultless and we should not obtain any legislation during this Congress.

"Believing that it was wise and prudent to secure the greatest possible concessions before this Congress adjourned, always with the hope and plan of continuing after the step was taken, we decided to concur in a bill which would have the approval of the President and Congress and which would give almost complete self-government to the Filipinos and at the same time assure complete independence in the future.

"For this reason we began to work for a bill giving some concessions of this nature and after a series of conferences the President approved a bill of this character, which will be presented this week by Congressman JONES, which, while it may not become law this session, we have reason to believe will be passed at the next session.

"We submit these facts through you to the Filipino people in the confident hope not only that our efforts will be appreciated as more or less successful, but that we have encountered all difficulties with unshakable loyalty to our country and with the purpose of serving to the best of our abilities the interests of the Filipino people.

"We now ask the united support of the Filipino people to use it against the strong campaign of our enemies here, not forgetting that if by any circumstance this bill, the only one now obtainable, can not secure passage in this session of Congress the damage done will be so considerable that we can not predict being able to secure a similar concession from Congress later."

That indicates how satisfactory this bill is even to the Resident Commissioner himself. Mr. Chairman, I want to pause long enough to give my personal testimony to the fact that Señor QUEZON has labored in season and out during all the years he has been here, with the administration and with the American people, trying to procure the independence of the Philippine Islands. I believe that he has kept faith with his people. [Applause.]

But I know the Democratic Party has not kept faith with him, and he and his party at this time find themselves led up to the brink, dangling over, and dropped by their professed friends. I want to go on record as saying that after traveling through the islands and listening to the expressions of their sentiments, their ideals and desires expressed by those who talk on the subject, that this Jones bill will not unlikely be the political death of the Nationalist Party in the Philippine Islands.

If you do not like to take my word for it, take that of a great Democrat in the Philippine Islands. This is the statement of a man named Kelley, who says that he stood within 10 feet of President Wilson when the committee informed him that he was nominated for the Presidency of the United States, and in the course of this prepared article he says that this Jones bill, if it becomes a law, is the death shroud of Osmeña, QUEZON, and the Nacionalista Party.

Amzi B. Kelley has issued the following statement to the newspapers of Manila:

As a member of the Democratic notification committee, standing within 10 feet of the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, I heard him say: "I summon all honest men, all patriotic, all forward-looking men to my side. God helping me, I will not fail them if they will but counsel and sustain me." Now is the time for just such men to act and help one who can not possibly, without our counsel, take proper action upon the important questions affecting these islands.

To the people of the Philippine Islands, of every race, color, and creed, and every phase of political belief:

* * * * * * *

But the present "bill" does not specify a definite date, nor is there anything in its provisions, as quoted in the press, that really changes the political status of to-day or to-morrow from what it was yesterday. The statement to be in said bill, that "Independence is to be granted when a stable government is established," has been directly or indirectly proclaimed by every President of the United States since the first day of American occupation, and preached to the people by every Governor General from Taft.

But leave that date uncertain and the Jones bill will prove to be but the death shroud of the Partido Nacionalista; and on account of our scarcity of public men trained in the art of government this will be exceedingly unfortunate, for so sure as the night follows the day they will go down in defeat and a new party will come forth promising to fix the date of independence.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the prediction will not prove true. I personally believe that Osmeña, QUEZON, and their confrères are infinitely the people entitled to be the leaders of the Philippine Islands. I devoutly hope this prediction will not come true. But all of the reasons for bringing it about are found in the bill and in the shameless abandonment by the Democratic Party of the criticisms which they have leveled on the Republican policy during a period of 14 years.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I would like to yield, but I have only three or four minutes left.

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield the gentleman five minutes more, if he desires.

Mr. MILLER. Very well.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's speech; but aside from depicting what are the opinions of the Filipinos, is his criticism of the bill the fact that it does not fix a definite date at which Philippine independence shall be granted?

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman means would I prefer a bill that would fix a definite date, I can not at this time answer him as he desires. I may say, without expressing any opinion of my own, that the bill, unless it does fix a date, unless it does say something about independence proper, is not a fulfillment of the Democratic platform or of the expressions of the Democratic Party.

Mr. SHERLEY. I heard the gentleman's statement about what he considered our fulfillment of our promise. What I am trying to arrive at is what the gentleman's position is as to what should be done with the Philippines? Does the gentleman's party or does the gentleman favor the granting of independence at a fixed date?

Mr. MILLER. Manifestly at the expiration of my time I could not take up an answer to that question. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I will answer it in due time, if the gentleman desires, before the hearing of this bill is concluded.

Mr. Chairman, the statement of the majority to support the bill I have read with amazement. It contains the shadow of substance, but the substance is not there. It contains more misinformation on the Philippine Islands than I have ever seen compressed within the same space anywhere else.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take occasion at this time to point out all of these things, but I may do something with it later on, and as illustrative of the whole, I want to read this. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], with great unction, glibly let fall from his lips on Saturday the statement that clergy of the Philippine Islands desired the passage of this bill. They desire it just as much as the Philippine Islands do, and not a bit more, which is not at all. However, he quotes this in his statement:

The Philippine clergy, which does not concern itself in local and transitory political contests, but is interested only in the stability of public institutions, favors urgent approval of the Jones bill.

The gentleman in his statement says that is a cablegram to the Resident Commissioner, Mr. QUEZON. He does not say who it is from. It is signed by no one. He does not say who sent it or who signed it, and he does not say what clergy. Is it the Catholic clergy or the Protestant clergy? Is it the expression of a convocation of clergy or the private expression of an individual? Inasmuch as the gentleman either having the information did not see fit to give it to the House, or not having it could not do so, I will give it to the House. There was a meeting of clergymen in the city of Manila. They were not called to consider the bill, but incidentally some discussion of it arose, and in an account of what took place there the public press reported that the clergy while deprecating the legislation at all, yet it being apparently the program of this administration to enact Philippine legislation, in view of the protest of the Filipino people over the bill, in view of the almost riotous conduct of the mobs in Manila when they were considering it, in view of the stagnation of business on account of its apprehension, in view of the chaos that exists in the islands now and has for months, they said, "If you are going to inflict the punishment, do it now and end the suspense." That is the extent to which the clergy favor the Jones bill. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

If the gentleman desires a direct expression, I will leave the gentleman and leave the gentlemen of the committee to the interview of Archbishop Harty, given in Hongkong at the time he made his recent trip to the United States and published in the press. The gentleman will find there how far the head of the Catholic clergy in the islands is willing to indorse the Jones bill or any other bill anywhere nearly like it. If, however, it might be inquired about the Protestant clergy, I have a great variety of material that gentlemen might be interested in. However, I shall confine my statement to one, that of Bishop Oldham, of the Methodist missions in the Philippine Islands. Here is what he said very recently:

It is on behalf of the masses of the plain people, who have not yet come to intelligence and a clear understanding of what a republic means, that the real friends of the Philippines urge a less hasty program than that which is now promised.

To leave the Philippines to become the prey of designing leaders, the theater of such exhibitions as that which Mexico is now affording, is surely not the altruistic program to which we were so manifestly called when Dewey entered Manila Bay.

I have nothing but deep respect for the present national leaders of America who propose the program of immediate independence, but if time be given for a closer investigation of all the facts, I am very certain that I have spoken the deeper truth of matters that are not on the surface, and an investigation of this will give Congress pause.

Let us wait until two more generations have been through the public schools, till the mass of the farmers and plain people of the smaller villages have learned the real meaning of a republic.

It is important, however, that the American people should not be misled into thinking that this cry for independence carries with it any promise of what we are accustomed to mean by a democratic form of government. If our intention, after these 15 splendid years of trusteeship, is to hand over to the exploitation of their racial leaders the masses of the plain people of the Philippines, then there is no reason to withhold the early granting of entire autonomy.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize that the limitations of the hour have made it necessary that I should express in a fragmentary way only many of the vital things that we ought to take into account in the consideration of a bill of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, when the Declaration of Independence was framed there was written into form and given to the humanity of the world the doctrine of individual liberty and self-government. That was the American contribution in concrete form to the constitutional rights of the peoples of the world. When we hoisted our flag in the distant Orient in the Philippine Islands we gave to the world a new idea in colonial government. Colonial schemes have been used by many nations for their own enrichment and aggrandizement. The whole history of our 14 years in the Philippines has been dedicated to but one thing, the welfare of the Filipino people. [Applause.] There has been no selfish motive; there has been no hope of bettering and aiding the American people or the American Nation. We have been endeavoring to give to a people that knew it not real liberty, real learning, consciousness of the responsibility of government, and an opportunity to develop capacity for self-government. We have achieved with greater success within those 14 years than we dared to hope. Much of the criticism that has been urged against our policy by foreign Governments is because they can not understand how the American policy has been one of such complete altruism. The American flag has meant, and means to-day, education, prosperity, peace, happiness, and he who would speak of it otherwise knows not the lesson of the last generation. My personal opinion is, after having traveled through the islands from one end to the other, visiting every Province and every tribe, that while there are some splendid, well-educated, and intelligent people who are as capable of self-government as you or I, of whom Señor QUEZON is one, 85 per cent of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands do not now have an adequate idea of what self-government is, its duties and responsibilities, or what independence really consists of. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON]. [Applause.]

[Mr. QUEZON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] care to use some time now?

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman use some of his time? I can arrange to use some time pretty soon, I think.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, in dealing with a question such as the one we now have under consideration and which we are about to dispose of, I like to turn to one of the greatest democrats of any period and seek in his utterances some inspiration for my own thoughts. And so, when it was learned that some opportunity might be offered me to participate in the debate on this bill, my hand stretched out for a little volume which is kept within easy reach, and by a happy chance—or was it chance?—it opened upon this passage from a speech by Abraham Lincoln at Chicago on the 1st day of March, 1859:

I do not wish to be misunderstood upon this subject of slavery in this country. I suppose it may long exist, and perhaps the best way for it to come to an end peaceably is for it to exist for a length of time. But I say the spread and strengthening and perpetuation of it is an entirely different proposition. There we should in every way resist it as a wrong, treating it as a wrong, with the fixed idea that it must and will come to an end.

Abraham Lincoln was talking of a chattel slavery which then threw its dark shadow across the land and limited the vision of thousands and even millions of honest and patriotic Americans, as imperialism has limited and still limits the vision of so many in our own time. To-day we are talking of another sort of slavery. And about this I do not wish to be misunderstood. I suppose it may long exist, and perhaps the best way for it to come to an end peaceably is for it to exist for a length of time. But I say that the spread and strengthening and perpetuation of it is an entirely different proposition, and that there we should in every way resist it as a wrong, treating it as a wrong, with the fixed idea that it must and will come to an end.

In the Democratic platform of 1900 I find the following declaration, one which still rings true, breathing the very spirit of Thomas Jefferson and of Abraham Lincoln:

We assert that no nation can long endure half republic and half empire; and we warn the American people that imperialism abroad will lead quickly and inevitably to despotism at home. * * * We are in favor of extending the Republic's influence among the nations, but believe that that influence should be extended not by force and violence, but through the persuasive power of a high and honorable example.

And in our platform of 1904—aye, even in that—we took high ground by declaring that—

We oppose, as fervently as did George Washington himself, as indefinite, irresponsible, discretionary, and vague absolutism and a policy of colonial exploitation, no matter where or by whom invoked or exercised.

Four years later we were still true to the faith, still committed to the earlier gospel of Democracy, still with faces set toward the light in spite of those sitting in darkness, for in the great platform adopted at that wonderful convention in Denver we issued this proclamation:

We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandoning a fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippines as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us as we guarantee the independence of Cuba, until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

Nor does this complete the record. At Baltimore, as at Denver, at St. Louis, and at Kansas City, the Democracy of the Nation spoke out against a strange graft upon the free institutions of this favored land. In precisely the language of the platform of 1908 the platform of 1912 reaffirmed the position thrice announced against a policy of imperialism and colonial exploitation in the Philippine Islands or elsewhere. And never did the Democratic Party endear itself to my heart more than it did when it took and held this lofty ground, this ground of the Declaration of Independence, this ground of the golden rule, this ground of fundamental democracy.

For what is imperialism but an utter denial of all that the great Declaration implies, the golden rule embodies, and fundamental democracy inculcates? It is as foreign to all these as slavery was or as a king would be to the free atmosphere of the White House. It never had a moral sanction. It was compounded of greed and of an unholy lust for power. In no sane moment of the Republic could its foundations have been laid in conquest and carried out through duplicity and bad faith.

Mr. Chairman, the time is not at my disposal for an exhaustive discussion of our adventure in imperialism; nor if time were allotted me would my abilities equal the task. Others shall speak where my voice fails. Others shall tell the story better and more clearly than I could hope to do, for there are men in this House who, since the beginning of this sordid and bloody adventure, have fought to preserve the Republic by fighting to overthrow the forces of imperialism, those sappers and miners of our day who were and are weakening the very foundations of free government. And in this connection I can not forbear an especial reference to the distinguished author of the bill now before the House, the able, the consistent, the courageous, and the faithful gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES]. [Applause.] Ever since the beginning of this mad adventure this loyal soul has battled, sometimes almost alone, to check its progress. At every turn he has challenged it. On every field he has met it with the weapons of fundamental democracy. In every emergency he has borne himself with rare fidelity and still rarer poise. And here at last he is about to see the fruitage of all his patient endeavor.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is it the gentleman's notion that independence should have been given the Filipinos 14 years ago?

Mr. BAILEY. Independence you can not give. It inheres as a natural right. It was stolen from them.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Why do you not do it now, then?

Mr. BAILEY. I would if I could.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. You have the votes over here with which to do anything you want.

Mr. BAILEY. As I was saying when interrupted, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia is to see the fruitage of his patient endeavor in the adoption of this measure. It is perhaps not his highest thought on the subject of the Philippines. It is perhaps less than he had hoped to write into the laws of the land. But I am sure that his aspiration is written into the preamble and that if it were not for that and for the assurance its adoption will give he would feel, as he should feel, that the word of promise had been kept to the lip and broken to the hope.

For, after all, Philippine independence is not carried in this bill. Only a larger self-government for the islands is the message it carries as far as actual legislation goes. But more than the legislation is the pledge which precedes it, for the preamble is the really vital thing. All the rest is of transitory significance.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman, for information, whether he thinks the preamble has anything to do with the law?

Mr. BAILEY. As a mere legal proposition, I think not. I do not think the Declaration of Independence was anything more than a preamble to the Constitution. I think the Declaration of Independence got there, however, with both feet.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does not the gentleman think it desirable, where so many people seem to question the fundamentals of our Government, to assert those principles now?

Mr. BAILEY. Most emphatically. But to return to what I was saying a moment ago. The preamble to this measure is the really vital matter. Yet the rest is big with promise of better things for the people of the Philippines. It turns over to the Filipinos practically complete control of their own affairs. They are still bound to us by ties which should sit lightly upon them and which may prove helpful in working out the problems of self-government preparatory to that independence, title to which is theirs by divine right.

It is not my purpose here, Mr. Chairman, to attempt an analysis of the bill. That task has already been performed by its talented and most distinguished author; and no doubt others who shall follow me will elaborate its details and throw into relief its various provisions. Let me content myself with saying that in a most substantial manner it keeps faith with the country and with the Filipinos. It appeals to the people of the archipelago as it should appeal to the people of the United States. It is instinct with the spirit of our own institutions. It breathes the very breath of our Bill of Rights. It embodies the vital things which are so very dear to our hearts. In practically every aspect except that involving international relations the Filipinos are to be as free and as self-governing as though their sovereignty were absolute.

Of only one particular phase of the measure do I care to speak at this time. I refer to that provision which continues the trade relations now subsisting between the islands and the United States. It is a relation of free trade, and with all my heart I wish that this relation might never be broken. It is the one relation between the Philippines and the United States that has been beneficial to both. It has been as salutary for the people of the islands as it has for those in our own country. And I am bound, in this connection, to pay a tribute to William Howard Taft for the great part he played in breaking down the superstition, the prejudice, and the barriers of ignoble self-interest which so long denied free exchange of products between the two peoples—between the conquered and the conquerors. Had Mr. Taft during his long service as governor and later as President of the United States performed no other meritorious act, this alone would fairly entitle him to the plaudits of all enlightened men and to the especial gratitude of the Filipino people.

I wish I might here set forth the full story of free trade between the archipelago and the United States. It is a story which gives the lie to every claim of the trade killers who choose to call themselves protectionists, and who "protect" industry by putting it in a strait-jacket, by placing shackles upon its feet, or by choking it to the very death. The response of trade to the open door which a repeal of the tariffs offered was scarcely less than marvelous. Instantly the flow of traffic increased in volume. From practically nothing it swelled to relatively astounding proportions, and now that the Filipino people are to be bound to us by a friendlier tie we shall expect the volume steadily to increase and the benefits to them and to us to become more and more diffused.

And now I return to the first thought when this subject was taken up, the thought that this bill does not go as far as some of us have felt that it should go. I do not wish to be misunderstood upon this business of imperialism. I suppose it may long exist, as Lincoln supposed slavery must when he was speaking in 1859; and perhaps the best way for it to come to an end peaceably, as Lincoln said of chattelism, is for it to exist for a length of time. But I say of imperialism and colonial exploitation, as the great Lincoln said of the evil which he was facing, that the spread and strengthening and perpetuation of it is an entirely different proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me repeat. The spread and strengthening and perpetuation of imperialism is a different proposition. There we should in every way resist it as a wrong, treating it as a wrong, with the fixed idea that it must and will come to an end; and that is the fixed idea of this bill. It offers a guaranty against the spread, the strengthening, and the perpetuation of the imperialistic propaganda. We are here resisting it as a wrong, treating it as a wrong, and proceeding with the fixed idea that it must and will come to an end.

And I pray God with all my heart and with all my strength and with all the faith of one who believes that "ever the right comes uppermost and ever is justice done" that imperialism may reach its end as speedily as chattel slavery reached its end after Lincoln spoke the living words which I have dared to take as my text and my inspiration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MOON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11745) to provide for certificate of title to homestead entry by a female American citizen who has intermarried with an alien.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives the bill (S. 4517) entitled "An act to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 14233) to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this is a most important bill, and there are only a score of Members here. I think we ought to have a quorum in the consideration of this bill. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is made. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Forty-two Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, would tellers take a little more time and get a quorum here?

Mr. MADDEN. The Chair has already announced that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 33.

Mr. JONES. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. JONES and Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes 45.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes are 4 and the noes are 45—not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18459) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 268 Members had answered to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees for publication in the RECORD and in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TOWNER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is recognized.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, what we do here about the Philippines at this time ought, I think, to be determined by the effect it will have upon the Filipino. Most of us, as American citizens, would think that in most matters we ought to keep our own interest as a Nation in mind also, but I think on this question everybody is agreed that the solution of the Philippine problem for this Nation is from the standpoint of the Filipino himself, and not so much from the standpoint of our own citizenship, except in the performance of a duty that must be respected.

The discussion upon this question has taken two angles—a political angle and a political-science angle. The question has been discussed from the standpoint of what ought to be done because of proclamations by political parties, and also from the standpoint of what we would call equal rights or equal opportunity in the rivalry of life for all citizens in the nations that are at interest. In the first place, I do not believe that we ought to discuss it from the standpoint of partisan politics, and yet it seems to be forced to that issue. Every time anyone has spoken in favor of the bill it has been urged that the party represented here in power had committed itself. It did it in 1900, and again in 1904, and again in 1908, and again in 1912, and it seems that the desire of the majority is to fulfill that promise, made in the heat of a political campaign.

Now, I take issue with my Democratic friends upon that proposition. What we do for the Philippines, I say, is not to be determined by the effect it will have upon any political party or any faction in any political party, but rather by the effect it will have upon the peoples whose interests are at stake from the standpoint of cosmopolitan philanthrophy, fulfilling the duty of a great Nation to a people that demands our attention. I think that we reduce the discussion of this question far below the stage that is demanded when we discuss it upon the plane of partisan politics. Permanent welfare of a people is one thing; partisan advantage is another thing.

From the standpoint of political science as presented in committee in our consideration of the question there we were told that there was no use of having any hearings upon this bill because it is a question of political science, and we could not change the principles of political science by hearing men giving facts relative to this particular bill. I at that time raised the question of the necessity of having all the information we could secure. I take issue with the gentlemen who thus spoke upon that question, persisting in the waste of time in gathering facts relative to the need of the Filipino. It is not so much a question of the naked principles of political science as it is a question of the application of the principles of political science to a people in that far-away island country. We may study the principles of political science as outlined by writers upon the subject, but those principles will be mere abstractions unless we can see them embodied in practice where governments built upon those principles are in operation.

We can not separate our knowledge of those principles from the practical working of them. What this body must do is to satisfy itself that the political principles here proposed can be applied in the country in mind. Our chief concern here is the application of the principles of political science. That must depend upon the facts about the country touching upon the preparation of the people for self-government.

These facts could have been gathered by the committee from persons within our midst, experts on the Philippine situation; but the committee declined our urgency, denied our requests, and proceeded to consider the bill upon the basis that we had no need of further knowledge, because it is a question of political science. And when we speak of political science, as it was interpreted by the member of the committee, he takes the position that we have no right to continue our system of protectorate or occupation of the Philippines, because our duty, he says, is to give them absolute self-government, political autonomy, just as soon as it is possible to do so, without saying what he means by the phrase "as soon as it is possible for us to do so." What is the significance of the word "autonomy"? When we talk about self-government we always think of our own Government and judge all others by that standard. We think of a country where there is universal education, where almost every State of the Union, if not every State, has compulsory education, where most of the States have a minimum limit of time to be spent in school in the course of a year. My own State fixes a limit of seven months, and some of the States have an even higher minimum.

We speak of local self-government with the view that here is a country in which the people have been trained in the principles of local self-government through the famous town meeting of New England and the township and county governments of all the States. We do not stop to think that a government of universal education that rests its destiny upon the intelligence of the citizen by opening its schools to all alike, rich and poor, white and black, or it ought at least so to do, can not be used as a fair example for all countries of vastly different conditions. It does not mean that we can extend the same form to a country where 85 per cent of the population, according to the statement of a man who knows, can neither read nor write. Local self-government, I repeat, depends upon the intelligence of the participants. It works well if properly directed by a responsible head. With our Nation in control in the islands self-government is possible in the municipalities. Something like 725 towns have a modern commission government now. The beneficial effect of a government of the type of ours must depend upon the ability of the participant to know what it is best to do and how to do it. When you speak of giving local self-government without any supervising authority to a population 85 per cent of which can neither read nor write, you have the same problem that now confronts Mexico. Most of you pity war-torn Mexico. How many of you will vote to forestall a duplication in the Philippines? You talk about constitutional government in the Republic south of us, and yet there is not one of you who does not know that Mexico has never experienced a constitutional government. Out of the 15,000,000 people there not over 100,000 voters participate in the election. Not one in one hundred knows or cares for the ballot. Government there becomes a bone to be fought over by factions, like hungry beasts. Think of the small per cent who have any knowledge of the duties of citizenship if called upon to participate in the Government, and yet you agree that the effectiveness of a republican form depends upon the intelligence and interest of the voter. You demand by this bill that this country, now making the most marvelous progress in the development of this island people of any people in the world, shall withdraw, and let a people 85 per cent of whom can neither read nor write substitute a local government for the government that the United States is conducting. I do not think this is wise. I should not say that this bill asks immediate withdrawal, but I do say that if it is presented, as the majority profess to keep a platform pledge, then it means immediate withdrawal, for that is the ruling plank on this question in prior campaigns. The bill permits immediate withdrawal, if it does not command it. It says as soon as a stable government is established. Let me ask you on the Democratic side of the House. What prevents your interpreting that bill for immediate action by this majority, declaring that there is now a stable government in the Philippines? That, I fear, is the purpose of the bill, and I do not think it wise; I think it very unwise.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I think I will have to yield.

Mr. GORDON. I simply want to ask you if you are sure about your figures when you say that 85 per cent of those people are unable to read or write?

Mr. FESS. I take that from the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], who, when asked about it, confirms the statement.

Mr. GORDON. I will say to you that you are mistaken. The literacy in the Philippines is higher than it is in any country south of the United States.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It is as good as it is in Mexico, is it?

Mr. FESS. My colleague is capable of any sort of a statement, without regard to whether it is true or not, and therefore I shall not enter into a controversy longer with him. I can not allow anybody to interrupt me who has absolutely no regard for what he says. [Applause on the Republican side.] If we in this House insist that we ought to give every individual a right to participate in government, then I think some of our friends on the Democratic side of the Chamber are in somewhat of an embarrassing situation, and I think I appreciate the problem that confronts them.

I have looked over the census of my country. I find that about 30,000,000 people are in what would be called the "black belt." Out of that 30,000,000, 34 per cent are colored; that is, nearly 9,000,000 are negroes, citizens of this country, declared so by the fourteenth amendment of the United States Constitution.

In Mississippi 56 per cent—much over half—are colored. In South Carolina 55 per cent are negroes; in Georgia, 43 per cent; in Alabama, 42½ per cent. What do we observe in these States? In Alabama one clause of the constitution declares all men equally free and independent, and so forth—"all political power is inherent in the people and government exists for their benefit." Then, in another clause, by what should be called the "grandfather clause," it effectually denies the right of participation in government to the colored man.

Take the State of Florida, with 204,000 men of voting age; nearly half of them are of the black race. That means that out of the 204,000, over 102,000 have the right to participate in the government so far as the rights of electors are concerned. But when you take the actual vote as cast in an actual election, there is not as large a vote in the whole State by at least one-half as will be cast in my district in November. And yet when you discuss the Philippine problem you clamor for their participation in government, but deny the same right to American citizens. You stand on this floor and argue that we are guilty of a great wrong because we prefer not to give to this people, 85 per cent of whom are illiterate, located in an island country 8,000 miles away from us, their protectors, the freedom to launch their own government without any sort of supervision by us. And yet you who speak for Philippine freedom have the problem upon your own hands of practicing what you preach. How do you solve the problem of participation in government? You disobey the law. I would not say anything unkind, but I must declare the facts as they are to you who demand these rights for the Filipinos. You ignore the law. The fourteenth amendment declares when the right to vote in any State is denied to any male citizen 21 years of age, the basis of representation in Congress in that State shall be reduced in the proportion that those thus denied hold to the entire voting population in the State.

States have denied this right. Representation has not been reduced. The fifteenth amendment forbids denial of right to vote to any citizen because of race or color; yet the States have found ways to effectually evade the very spirit and purpose of this part of the organic law of the land. The clamor for Philippine independence upon the ground that we are denying them their liberty of governmental participation can certainly find no justification by the Members who persistently deny the same sort of rights to American citizens.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman inform the Committee of the Whole what per cent of the people living in the American Colonies in 1776 were illiterate?

Mr. FESS. The only thing I can say to my friend is this, and it is the best possible test that can be deduced: Eleven years after the date you mention we held the Constitutional Convention, in which 56 members sat. They were elected by the people of the States, and therefore must fairly represent the people. Out of those 56, 29 were college bred.

Mr. COX. Going back, then, to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, can the gentleman inform the committee what per cent of the total population of the country were regarded then as illiterates?

Mr. FESS. A very small number in comparison with what it would be in Europe at that time, since those who left Europe were among the most intelligent.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman any figures on that?

Mr. FESS. I have no figures here. I have given the gentleman the best test that I know of. A representative body in 1787, to draw up a constructive form of government, had more college-bred men in it than members who were not college bred. That is the best example I can give, and it ought to be sufficient.

Mr. COX. I am trying to get concrete facts, if I can. The gentleman says the Filipinos are illiterate, and therefore ought not to be armed with the ballot or have any voice in the government, and I am trying to get the gentleman to give to the committee a statement of how much illiteracy there was in this country when we adopted our present form of government. I did not say anything about college graduates.

Mr. FESS. We were a picked people, coming from the best sources in Europe.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Different races.

Mr. FESS. Different races; at least four different elements entering into our composite make-up. In New York were the Dutch, who came from Holland and brought with them the traits of character still found in parts of the State. To Pennsylvania came the Quakers and the Moravians and the Germans, as well as the Scotch-Irish later. Traits of all these can still be detected in the State. To Maryland came the English Catholics with Lord Baltimore; and to the Carolinas came the French Huguenots, with their passion for religious freedom. To New Jersey came the Scotch Covenanters, with their strong Presbyterian bias. These people gave us Princeton. To Delaware came the Swedes; and to Massachusetts and New England the Puritans, which have stamped a distinctive character upon that people. These people gave us Harvard. To Rhode Island came the liberty-loving Baptists, led by Roger Williams. Down into Virginia came the famous Cavaliers. Into Georgia came the men who were running away from persecution because of imprisonment for debt, the persecuted poor, and with these came the Wesleys for a time, and the Methodists. We had a composite people, made up from the picked people of Europe, and the best class of men and women to form a local self-government that ever has been known from that time to the present. [Applause.] I am saying this in reply to my friend from Indiana [Mr. Cox], to indicate the high character of our early settlers, and also to indicate that the men on the Democratic side of this House who insist that we are un-American in our Philippine policy, and that we are trying to perpetuate a system we can not indorse, are in an inconsistent and embarrassing situation when they make the charge, for there are 9,000,000 American citizens south of the Ohio River who have very little participation in the Government. Yet, recognizing that fact—even openly admitting it—you say that we are un-American when we do not give the Filipino his independence and full control of his own country. That is said at a time when our Government exercises prerogatives in the islands solely for his sake and not ours. I want to say that whatever may be said, whatever should be our position, these friends from the cotton belt are not in a position to charge the Republican side of this House, for men who live in glass houses should not throw stones. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to inquire if the constitution of the gentleman's State still retains in it the word "white" as regards qualification for voters?

Mr. FESS. It still retains the word "white," but it does not have any effect. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] It does not mean anything. It is not a qualification for a voter. Colored men vote in our State just the same as white.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was not two years ago a proposition voted down in that State to eliminate the word "white" from the constitution?

Mr. FESS. It was voted down, with the voting down of woman suffrage and the fastening of the liquor question on our State; all three went together. People who opposed woman suffrage refused to cut the word "white" out of the constitution. I am not proud of that.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Notwithstanding the use of the word "white" in the constitution of the gentleman's State, every man who is entitled to citizenship has a right to vote, whether black or white?

Mr. FESS. Certainly; and he does vote.

My friend from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] spoke of this question Saturday and quoted Thomas Jefferson. He said that he believed still in the principles of Jefferson, which was life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, as expressed in the Declaration of Independence. The gentleman did not use those words, but that is the substance. He quoted in affirmation of this bill Thomas Jefferson. I do not care so much about what Thomas Jefferson has said, except to know what his words meant to him, and that we can find out by noting what he did. I regard Thomas Jefferson as one of the greatest men America has ever produced. I put him in the class with the great men of his time. I have always stood up in the classroom and on the platform and asserted that this country, while it needed a Thomas Jefferson as representing liberty in government, it had also to link with him Alexander Hamilton, as representing power in government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The country has need of both. Each is an essential pillar of the Government. If you lose the one, you weaken both, and for that reason I have regarded Thomas Jefferson as a very important figure in the Nation. And I will not allow any bitter partisanship to deny me the right to speak on this floor, or anywhere, in eulogy of the author of the Declaration of Independence, for he is one of our greatest figures in American history. But I also assert without the powerful influence of Hamilton the country would have suffered. [Applause.]

It was Thomas Jefferson who was resorted to in the confirmation of our duty to pass this bill. Let us see what Thomas Jefferson did on matters of governing territories, involving the questions now before us. He was inaugurated on the 4th of March, 1801. The greatest act of his life was the purchase of Louisiana—greater than the Declaration of Independence, for that would have been written anyway; somebody would have written it, probably not so well as Jefferson; but the principles were in the mind of these people, and it would have found expression. But I will tell you a thing that might not have been done, and that is, when Thomas Jefferson wanted to expand the boundaries of this Nation from the Mississippi to the Rocky Mountains he undertook a task that might easily have been omitted had it not been for his insistence. As you will remember, he called three of the great statesmen of this country, and especially one—Albert Gallatin, the famous Swiss, the great financier—and he said to Gallatin: "How can we purchase Louisiana?" Gallatin replied, in substance: "You have no constitutional right to purchase except as the end justifies the means—just purchase it." Jefferson was anxious to prevent England from seizing it in the war that was then raging between France and England. But Jefferson said: "We can not read our right in the Constitution," and then suggested an amendment to the Constitution so that the purchase might be made. But Gallatin said: "If you undertake to do that, France will have been defeated on the seas by England, and France will have lost Louisiana to England before two years are up." Then Jefferson said to Gallatin: "Let us proceed to buy it and submit it to the people to be ratified." But the wise old head, Gallatin, said: "Do not proceed to do a thing on the ground that the people will ratify what you have not a right to do; it will be like them to turn against you." When Jefferson asked, "What can we do?" Gallatin replied, "Proceed to buy it." Jefferson bought it, and said in a letter, "I stretched the Constitution until it almost cracked."

But he did it, and the statesmanship of Jefferson is seen in his ability to rise above petty consistency and do the thing that ought to be done, though he said he could not do it under his political theory of expressed powers. That is his statesmanship. Now, this was done, and Louisiana was ours. We paid but $15,000,000 for it. It was on our hands. It was peopled by Indians and by emigrants that had gone from the older States east of the Mississippi. They had to inaugurate a government. Who was President? Thomas Jefferson, the man whom you quote. Who ordered the Government? Jefferson. When was the Government established? In 1804 there was established its first territorial government. And what was it? Why, a governor appointed by Thomas Jefferson, and 13 commissioners appointed by Mr. Jefferson, the 14 constituting the legislative body of that territory. Were they elected? No; they were appointed. And by whom? By Thomas Jefferson, the man you are quoting for local self-government in confirmation of your position on this bill. These 14 presidential appointees form the legislative body. They made the laws which stood unless rejected by Congress. The governor had the power to convene and prorogue the legislative body. This was under Jefferson, whom you are quoting on independence. Here is a case where Jefferson proceeded in the only rational and legitimate way.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. How long did that temporary form of government for Louisiana last?

Mr. FESS. From 1804 until 1805, and in 1805 the legislative body was reduced from 14 to 4, and that lasted until 1812.

Mr. BORLAND. And in 1811 Missouri, one portion of that territory, was given an elective legislature, and in 1821 she was made a State.

Mr. FESS. The Louisiana Purchase agreement of 1803 had in it one clause giving to the State the right to admission without any enabling act being passed, and she came into the Union in 1812, but the Territory of Louisiana was organized first in 1804, and then in 1805 was governed by four commissioners, and everything that was done in the way of legislation was done by those four commissioners, and it would stand unless Congress repudiated it.

Mr. BORLAND. And that lasted only eight years?

Mr. FESS. That is all right. It lasted but eight years, but the people were our own people, who spoke our own language, who had our system of schools, recognized our institutions, our laws, our customs, and were ready for our Government in eight years. The same thing had taken place in the Northwestern Territory, out of which my State came. The same rule applied to your State. In 1821 you were admitted after a struggle. You wanted to be and we wanted you to be admitted, but that is a different proposition from a people 8,000 miles away, 85 per cent of whom are unable to read or write, of different customs, language, government, and traits of racial distinctions. That was a problem that is not like this one. I am calling the attention of the Democratic side to the inconsistency of their quoting Thomas Jefferson in confirmation of their view on this bill. That is all I have mentioned this for; otherwise, I would not have mentioned it at all. What we do to the Philippines will be determined by what is best for the Filipinos. I have listened with as much interest as any man on this floor to the distinguished chairman of this committee for whom I have such respect. I think his presentation was a masterful one from the standpoint of what the bill intends to do, and from his contention of what we ought to do; but, my friends, he made statements that I think any of us will agree to, and yet, agreeing to them does not mean that we must adopt this bill or favor it. Think of what the Philippine problem is, and how it came to be. I remember probably as well as anyone here how it came about. I was a professor in a university at the time, surrounded by a thousand or more students, thrown into a vortex of excitement, with the spirit of war upon us. I joined in sympathy with a great many people of the country in feeling like criticizing the President who came from my State, because he did not speak and act quickly.

I was one who walked the streets of my town on the morning of February 16, 1898, and who said, "Now, will the President act," for at 4 o'clock the night before, 266 of the boys in blue went down into the muddy waters of Habana Harbor. When that event took place, speaking to a group of excited students on the campus, I was not careful of my language, and what I was saying was being said upon this floor here by some on both sides of the Chamber, and was being said at the other end of the Capitol by men of great distinction. The great McKinley pleaded with our people to keep cool and withhold judgment. Finally, when the report was made as to the cause of the blowing up of the Maine, the people went wild in commanding that something be done, and still the President was inactive. He was almost vilified by the passionate populace. Few people knew that we did not have at the time enough ammunition to make it possible to fire one blast in the Pacific. And I was criticizing mentally, not audibly, and many other people were finding fault bitterly with President McKinley for his inaction, and yet I did not know that our fleet was scattered on the Pacific, and I did not know that the word had gone out to Dewey, "Mobilize your fleet at Hongko g." We demanded a declaration of war, and denounced the Congress for not so declaring. Although a teacher of international law, I had overlooked the fact that a declaration of war would force our vessels out of neutral ports within 48 hours. But finally when the moment came, when the storm of criticism broke upon the brow of the President, after he had vainly tried to hold the people at bay——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio 10 minutes more.

Mr. FESS. When the time came that the fleet was mobilized, then President McKinley finally gave the order, "Seek out the Spanish fleet; capture it or sink it." War was on, and this nation was to write a new chapter in the history of human progress—war for the sake of humanity. Dewey was near Hongkong, 728 miles from Manila, with his small squadron and its bunkers filled with coal. When he sailed out of Hongkong he knew that every bushel of coal that he could command was in the bunkers of his vessels, and when he started on the 728 miles he knew that he had to find the Spanish fleet, sink it, capture the coaling station at Cavite, or go to the bottom of the sea, for there was nowhere within 6,000 miles that he could take coal.

On the way, whenever anyone would caution him, he would say, "Keep cool and steam ahead." On they went until they finally entered that bay and began a movement like the letter "S," coming a little closer and a little closer to the defenses, and when the guns from the enemy began to play, aimed at our squadron, our men were exasperated, ambitious, but the order went out as before, "Keep cool and steam ahead"; but when the order came at last to fire, such a volley was hurled against the defenses at Manila that Spain in a very brief time could boast of only a magnificent submarine squadron. [Applause.] From that May day until the late autumn our Army and Navy refused to shell the city for the sake of the inhabitants. We refused to allow any looting. Here is a chapter yet to be written in the annals of warfare. Now, why did we go to war? Why to the Philippines? Was there any advantage to us? McKinley knew that he might touch a powder magazine that would send the world into a conflagration. He did not seek war for any national advantage. It could mean nothing of that sort to us. He was afraid, and he hesitated. Finally Senator Thurston and Senator Proctor went to the island of Cuba to study the situation and report. There is probably not a man in this House who does not remember the marvelously exciting effect that the speech of Senator Thurston made when he spoke at the other end of the Capitol, for as he was coming across the sea his wife took ill. Before she died on the sea she made him promise he would tell the story of human suffering as he had witnessed it right about the governor's mansion in Habana. When he rose at the other end of the Capitol his first sentence was, "Mr. President, I speak at the command of lips that are still in death." He broke down and could not continue for a moment. When he had finished the painting of the situation in Cuba the Senate and the House rose as with one voice and demanded action, not as a war of aggression, but a war for humanity. The Nation was in arms, not because McKinley wanted it, but because of the stress of public opinion, outraged by the situation in Cuba.

When we drove Spain out of Cuba our problem was what to do with Cuba. We tried it as an experiment by giving her a conditional republican government. No nation yearned more for Cuba's success than ours, for we were responsible for her after the war. When in the first election a faction refused to abide by the will of the people in that election, you can not forget that the President sent the Secretary of War over to Cuba, backed by the Army, and you well remember that it was generally understood that if Cuba did not maintain order that Army, when it once returned only to be sent back again because of further outbreaks, would go to stay, not because we wanted it but because of the necessity. Cuba has been a fairly representative Government since that day. It is the fervent hope that she will prove herself worthy the confidence placed in her. What did we do with Porto Rico, a people who have been rejuvenated by the school system inaugurated by the next governor of Pennsylvania, Dr. Brumbaugh, a personal friend of mine? [Applause.] And when Dr. Brumbaugh, the head of the education department of the University of Pennsylvania, declined to go because he did not want to undertake the work, President McKinley summoned him to Canton, Ohio, the home of my friend, Mr. WHITACRE. President McKinley laid upon the heart of Dr. Brumbaugh that the problem of the insular question had to be solved by education. He declared these people must not be set adrift, but must be started right. And so Porto Rico has a modern system of education, inaugurated at the time and carried into effect. Now what about the Philippines?

My friend from Indiana [Mr. Cox], I think, comes from the district in which is located the college the president of which was sent as the second commissioner of education to the Philippines. That man is Dr. E. P. Bryan, a personal friend of mine, and now president of Colgate University.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. COX. Did not Admiral Dewey say that the Philippine Islanders were more capable of self-government than the Cubans were when he sailed away from the Philippines?

Mr. FESS. I heard Mr. QUEZON say that. I have never seen the statement. I do not want to enter into that particular period, because I will say something that will be unkind. I have read much of the record, much of the proceedings, of the insurgents, and I know what was being done in the awful days from December 10, 1898, when the treaty was signed, until February 4, 1899, when Aguinaldo led his insurrection. Those manuscripts, those records, are in our possession, and if you want to know about the movement in the Philippines, that is the place to get it and not from what somebody says, either one side or the other. These records do not inspire much confidence in capacity for independence.

But the Philippine problem was one of education. Dr. Bryan was one of the men who inaugurated it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This bill does not provide for the independence of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman think that in good faith independence would necessarily follow in a short time?

Mr. FESS. No. I do not think that that could be deduced as a corollary from that bill. I think we may say, as Mr. MILLER said, that that simply is a statement that will do more harm in the Filipino mind than it will do good. If independence is a good thing with the condition of the people as it is, then it will be better, perhaps, to do it now and settle it for all time. I might say this bill fixes the time when stable government is established. There is nothing in the way of the majority or the President declaring that stable government is already established.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. May I have five minutes additional? I want to say one thing more.

Mr. TOWNER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. This is what I wanted to say before I sat down. The Filipino problem is one of education. I am somewhat disturbed at the statements of the Resident Commissioner from the Philippines. He is the only representative now upon the floor of these people, as he remarked to-day. I put the question straight to him, "Do you think that without American occupation the Philippines would be as well off now as they are?" He first did not answer. I pressed it, and then he said, "I do," and gave his reasons. And the membership on the Democratic side of the House applauded that statement, meaning that they believe that the American occupation, with all the loss of treasure and blood and sacrifice, has been useless. Is it possible? Can such an utterance meet with approval on either side of the aisle?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I suggest to the gentleman that the question he put to the Resident Commissioner was perhaps not entirely fair.

Mr. FESS. I meant it to be.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If he meant as compared to the Spanish régime, that, of course, would be a different proposition; but if he meant as compared with the Filipinos running their own affairs, that would be another thing.

Mr. FESS. But here is a question just as clear as any man can state it. He first said, "Yes." Then I put it this way:

Do you mean to state to the American people that if the American administration had not been in operation there would have been the same progress for your people that you now have?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Ah, but the only issue that there has ever been a chance to make was as between the Spanish régime and the American régime.

Mr. FESS. His answer was:

This is, of course, purely a matter of conjecture and speculation, but I say, "Yes."

That is his answer. Then I put another, as follows:

I did not ask you about the road. I asked you about the advance of your people. Do you mean to say that your people would have advanced as high as they have done if the American administration had not been there?

The English language can not be plainer than that. What is his answer? It was:

I do; and I say it for this reason.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that where the applause came in?

Mr. FESS. Yes; and it is recorded.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman is a learned man, and a college professor; does he believe that any amount of culture can compensate for the loss of liberty?

Mr. FESS. I think that question can be put up to you as to Kentucky and other States. I do not know whether I could be justified in saying that we ought, if we had the power to make an entire change in the real form of government in Mexico from what they have. I mean it is republican in form but not in reality. I have my doubts. The same thing I would say about the Philippines.

And this, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, is what I want to say to my Democratic friends over here: That——

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to an interruption before he concludes?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. I will not have any time; but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DECKER. I just wanted to ask you if you heard the speech of the Delegate from the Philippine Islands this afternoon, in which I think he explained his position more clearly than he did when you took him by surprise on Saturday.

Mr. FESS. He said that he appreciated what we had done over there, but that does not change the meaning of his statement Saturday.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MOORE. Did not the Philippine Commissioner in his further explanation to-day say that, given the means and the opportunity, they would have done as well?

Mr. FESS. Yes. That is what we are doing—giving them the means and the opportunity, and remaining in the islands to see that the means and opportunity are not used to despoil or exploit.

Mr. MOORE. I want to ask the gentleman if they ever had such an opportunity before, as was suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. FESS. There has never been a case in the history of the world where any people has treated any other people as our country has treated the Philippines. I defy any man in this House, or any man in this Congress on either side of the House, to point to a case in history where such an expenditure of money and means was made, at the risk of the lives of soldiers, for the pure purpose of humanity, as was done in Cuba and in the Philippines.

Why do we not get out of the Philippines? I will tell you why. We think too much of the Filipinos to get out of the Philippines. It was said here that it is not the intention to return to the miserable Filipino policy. What is the policy?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. FESS. I shall not yield any more except to yield the floor.

Mr. BORLAND. Go on to the crescendo.

Mr. FESS. No; it is not a crescendo. I am not a sophomore. I want your attention, Mr. BORLAND. We have no interest in the Philippines from the standpoint of industry except to advance the Filipino—no interest to ourselves—in the Philippines. We have no capital that we are wanting Americans to invest, except as it may appear to the advantage of both American and Filipino. We are having no exploits that we want to propagate in the Philippines. We have a duty to perform. We can not perform it with the conditions now present if we pull stakes and leave these people to themselves.

The chairman of the committee says it is an international question, and could be more easily solved if we would pass the bill. I say it is dangerous to turn the Philippines afloat. The moment that foreign capital, coming from foreign countries, will get a foothold, that moment conflicting interests will be found. The moment there is any attempt in a junta to take advantage in the Philippines and to exploit them, that moment foreign countries will be interested. Men may charge us with exploiting these people. I deny it. We are preventing others from doing it. How long, my friends, will independence continue in a rich country—one of the richest in the world, with only one-tenth of the agricultural riches developed, in its very infancy—how long would those countries or islands be independent as a rich prize to the colonizing powers of the world? This is a delicate question, but it goes to the core of the situation.

We ought not to get out of there until we can assure ourselves as well as the people of the Philippine Islands that we are not so recalcitrant that we turn them adrift to face international complications created by domestic warfare. I am frank to say we would rid ourselves of this burden at once if we could do so honorably. But I refuse to turn them over to the juntas and allow internecine struggles to take place that will present an opportunity for other countries to come in and take charge of them. For myself, I will stand by the interests of the Filipinos rather than against their interests. To do that we can not safely contemplate this question with definite action at this time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Why not rise now?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a disposition on the part of the committee to rise. I intended to make the motion to that effect; but the gentlemen around me think we ought to go on, therefore I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOSTER. A point of order was made unnecessarily this afternoon, and that brought a crowd in here.

Mr. MANN. We did not make it unnecessarily.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of no quorum has been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fifty-five gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that it will take some time to get a quorum, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18459) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—EDWARD VON LICHTENSTEIN.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. DRISCOLL, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Edward Von Lichtenstein (H. R. 7844) Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SPARKMAN, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, presented the following report (No. 1174), which was referred mittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, together with Senate amendment thereto, having had the same under consideration, reports the bill back without amendment and recommends that the Senate amendment be agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 657. An act to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects, and for other purposes; and

S. 5798. An act authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Earl A. Bancroft from Glenwood Cemetery, D. C., to Mantorville, Minn.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 18732. An act to amend section 98 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14233) to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Alaska coal bill (H. R. 14233) and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FERRIS, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, and Mr. LENROOT.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, September 29, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2616) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1171), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BULKLEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 6398) to amend section 1 of an act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1173), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 19004) providing for the issue of emergency currency to aid in and facilitate the marketing of the cotton crop for the year 1914, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. RUPLEY: A bill (H. R. 19005) for the purchase of a site and erection thereon of a public building at Millersburg, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19006) for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Annville, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19007) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 19008) to authorize and direct the payment of pensions monthly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOWDLE: A bill (H. R. 19009) declaring it to be unlawful for any person, firm, copartnership, stock company, corporation, or association of any kind to construct or contract to construct within the United States or territorial jurisdiction any war vessel or guns or military equipment of such vessel for any foreign nation, and providing penalties for violation thereof; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRUMBAUGH: A bill (H. R. 19010) granting an increase of pension to John Hobensack; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DONOHOE: A bill (H. R. 19011) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Whalon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 19012) granting an increase of pension to Julia Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 19013) for the relief of George Berry Dobyns; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Texas: A bill (H. R. 19014) granting an increase of pension to Catherine E. Wooldridge; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petitions of business men of West Salem, Doylestown, Orville, and Dalton, all in the State of Ohio, in favor of House bill 5308; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, evidence to accompany House bill 18949, granting an increase of pension to Jacob A. Thuma; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BAILEY: Petition of Branch Patton (Pa.) Socialist Party, protesting against exportation of any foodstuffs to any nation at war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BATHRICK: Petition of the Schuster Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, protesting against tax on dry wines; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of bankers in nineteenth Ohio congressional district, protesting against tax on capital stock and surplus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Akron, Ohio, protesting against merchant-marine law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of Great Northern Life Insurance Co., Wausau, Wis., against war tax on life insurance; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of sundry citizens of Sparta, Wis., relative to investigation of cucumber diseases; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FESS: Petition of Ohio Woman's Christian Temperance Union, protesting against tax on liquors; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GARDNER: Petition of the Men's Bible Class of Market Street Baptist Church, of Amesbury, Mass., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petitions relating to proposed new taxation legislation signed by A. T. Lange, A. E. Webber, Francis H. Rogers, A. J. Orem, Frank Curtis, Irvin W. Masters, E. E. Brazier, and T. A. Frissell; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HART: Petition of citizens of New Jersey, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: Petition of 99 citizens of Oregon, Ill., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petition of Twenty-fifth Ward Branch Socialist Party, of Chicago, favoring administration by the Government of food supply of the country; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, September 29, 1914.

(Legislative day of Monday, September 28, 1914.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

EMERGENCY REVENUE LEGISLATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which will be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The communication was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

[Telegram.]

ANTIGO, WIS., September 28, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of 5,000 members of the Wisconsin Woman's Christian Temperance Union we respectfully urge that the emergency internal-revenue tax shall be levied that we as patriotic citizens may help bear this national burden, and for other cogent reasons we earnestly protest against raising any part of this emergency revenue from a tax on alcoholic liquors.

MRS. W. A. LAWSON, President.

Mr. JONES. I have here a telegram from the Baker Boyer National Bank, the First National Bank, the Farmers' Savings Bank, the Third National Bank, and the People's State Bank, all of Walla Walla, Wash., protesting against the injustice of levying a tax of $2 a thousand on capital, surplus, and undivided profits of banks. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. STONE. I have a clipping which I took from the Chicago Tribune—I was about to say on Sunday, but it may have been Saturday—containing an interview with Mr. COPLEY, Republican Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Illinois, giving reasons why he had voted for the bill which just passed the House providing for additional revenue. I should like to have it read. It is short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. COPLEY voted for it because he believed its passage absolutely necessary to the well-being of the country.

The Republicans turned their attacks on the war tax to a defense of the "iniquitous Payne-Aldrich" tariff law as a revenue producer. They declared that the Underwood-Simmons tariff law is a failure as a revenue getter, and that had the Democrats listened to them and left the Payne-Aldrich law on the statutes there would be no necessity for a war tax now.

Mr. COPLEY answered this argument tersely. "I am a protectionist," he said, "from the bottom of my feet to the top of my head, but there has never been in the history of this House or any other a tariff law which would produce enough revenue to meet the needs of a nation as large as the United States during a war as comprehensive as the present one in Europe.

CALLS IT "GOOD BUSINESS."

While I do not agree with all features of the bill, on the whole it is a good one. It can be and probably will be improved by the Senate. But if it should fail to pass there, I know from my own experience in business that within three months there will be need for this country to increase its revenues. It is better to provide for that need now than to wait until it is pressing. Delay would only mean a more drastic measure. More than that, delay would be exceedingly bad government business. The passage of this bill to-day is nothing more nor less than good business.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN COLORADO.

Mr. SMOOT. In behalf of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] I present one or two letters which he desired to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., September 12, 1914.

Hon. T. B. CATRON,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to your suggestion, I inclose correspondence disclosing the facts relative to one instance of what, to me, appears an unjust interference by the Federal troops with our right to employ men and the correlative right of men to work if they so desire.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

DENVER, September 10, 1914.

Maj. D. C. CABELL,
Commanding United States Troops, Ludlow, Colo.

DEAR SIR: A few days ago, probably late in August, a man by the name of Guadalupe Gusman, applied for and was given work at our mine at Delagua. He came to us wholly of his own volition, without solicitation upon our part. He was subsequently compelled by men under your command to give up his job. Will you not be kind enough to advise me of the circumstances surrounding this case?

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES TROOPS,
Trinidad, Colo., August 28, 1914.

Subject: Conditions under which labor may be employed in the coal mines.

To all station commanders:

1. Pursuant to instructions of the Secretary of War, dated August 26, 1914, the following is published for the direction and guidance of all concerned:

To secure uniformity the orders heretofore issued will be carried out hereafter in the following particulars and dealt with thus: With respect to those mines which are running—

First. Operators are not permitted to gather men and ship them in to such mines.

Second. Miners who apply at mines may be there employed, provided, (a) they are residents of the State of Colorado; (b) and have complied with the laws of Colorado relating to miners.

2. The coal-mining laws of the State of Colorado referred to in (b) above provide: (a) No males under 16 years of age and no females can be employed in or about coal mines or coke ovens except in clerical capacity. (b) From and after January 1, 1914, it shall be unlawful for any owner of any mine to employ coal examiner, shot firer, mine foreman, assistant mine foreman, or fire boss who does not possess a certificate from the board of examiners, except as herein provided.

3. Request has been made of the Secretary of War for a ruling as to who is a "resident of the State of Colorado" for the purpose of this order. Until receipt of such ruling a "resident of the State of Colorado" is defined to be a person actually residing in the State on this date, August 28, 1914.

By order of Col. Lockett:

V. JAS. ROCKWELL,
Captain and Adjutant, Eleventh Cavalry, Adjutant.
LUDLOW, COLO., September 11, 1914.

To Mr. W. J. MURRAY,
Vice President and General Manager,
Victor-American Fuel Co., Denver, Colo.:

1. Returned. The examination of this man developed that he came of his own will without solicitation. He came into this State from Kansas after August 28, 1914, and for this reason was prevented from working in the mines, in accordance with instructions contained in letter from Headquarters United States Troops, August 28, 1914, copy inclosed.

D. R. C. CABELL,
Major, Eleventh Cavalry,
Commanding United States Troops, Ludlow, Colo.

PROPOSED ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-four Senators have answered the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. PAGE, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. STERLING, Mr. VARDAMAN, and Mr. WHITE answered to their names when called.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to state for the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] that he is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. MCCUMBER entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GRONNA]. He will be absent during the entire week, and I make this statement now for the week.

Mr. LANE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is necessarily absent, and that he is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

I wish also to announce that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is absent by leave of the Senate and is paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

I desire also to announce that the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is unavoidably absent, and that he is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. WALSH, Mr. COLT, and Mr. STONE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read as a part of my remarks the following telegram.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., September 28, 1914.

Hon. JAMES A. REED,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The shoe-manufacturing industry is one among the few great industries in this country in which no form of trust has ever existed. The shoe manufacturer, however, is surrounded by trusts and is absolutely dominated by the Shoe Machinery Trust. Since its methods have destroyed all competition in shoe machinery, no more grasping or domineering trust ever existed. The great work you have done to curb the Shoe Machinery Trust is very gratefully appreciated. Can you not get the criminal provision as provided in the Senate bill restored? It is very important that this be done.

INTERNATIONAL SHOE CO.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a telegram from Hon. John C. Roberts, who is proprietor of the St. Louis Star, a man who has been for many years a very successful business man and manufacturer, and who also is one of the best Democrats in the United States and an original Wilson man.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., September 28, 1914.

Hon. JAMES A. REED,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Your stand in the Clayton bill is most gratifying. I trust you will put the teeth back into it and fight to a finish. It seems the Democrats have forgotten their Baltimore platform pledge.

JOHN C. ROBERTS.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from the Vicksburg Clearing House Association and one from the secretary of the Mississippi Bankers' Association and that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the telegrams presented by the Senator from Mississippi will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The telegrams are as follows:

VICKSBURG, MISS., September 28, 1914.

Hon. JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We strongly urge you to oppose amendment of Clayton bill in such manner as to prohibit interlocking directorates, and particularly interlocking directorates of banks in smaller communities. Such legislation at this time would accentuate the unsettled conditions now existing and render more difficult than ever the return to normal conditions.

VICKSBURG CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION.

VICKSBURG, MISS., September 28, 1914.

Senator JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Tax imposed on banks by Underwood bill appears unjust and discriminatory. Banks are willing to pay their proper share, but urge that Underwood bill be modified so as to distribute tax more equitably, by assessing other classes of corporations. Would appreciate your efforts toward this end.

T. H. DICKSON,
Secretary Mississippi Bankers' Association.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have here an article printed in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of September 10, 1914, which contains an analysis of the bill now under consideration. Although the article does not bear directly upon the conference report, because it antedates that report, it is nevertheless pertinent. After digesting the bill the writer has some comments to make upon it, and I ask that that part of the article under the subtitle "Some serious flaws" be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SOME SERIOUS FLAWS.

The foregoing digest is made from the House bill as amended by the Senate, passed, and sent to conference. It is the substance of the bill as it stands to-day. Needless to say, it should be further amended, and presumably will have to be, if it is to receive the approval of President Wilson.

Because, in its present form, while it improves the position of the wage earner, the trust victim suing for redress, the corporation stockholder, and the Government, it falls far short of fulfilling either the Democratic Party's platform pledge or the country's need.

Whose crime is meaner, more infamous, than that of the forestaller and monopolist of life's necessaries, inflicting the misery of want upon a multitude of people?

Shall such a man, or group of men, being convicted, be found guilty, as this bill proposes, of nothing more serious than a misdemeanor? Shall the new law limit the possible punishment of such men to a "fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court"—a punishment which the court may, if he so please, fix at a fine of 1 cent, or of one minute in jail, or both?

Shall the officer or director of a railroad, having looted or permitted the looting of millions from his stockholders, be permitted, as this bill proposes, to escape with a possible fine of $500 or a minimum of a year in jail, at the court's discretion?

If guilt is to be "made personal" in this field, ought not its punishment to bear some nearer relation to the quantity and quality of the crime? Would it not be ridiculous expressly to limit that punishment, in the law, to a fine which the offender could pay without missing it, and which he can, as he so often has done, promptly collect from the people by raising the price of his goods?

Could Standard Oil ask for anything better than that paragraph of section 6 which authorizes the formation of subsidiary corporations to carry on its business in the several portions of the country? This is, indeed, precisely the device which Standard has long employed to operate in States from which it has been banished for law-breaking, and to keep up the false appearance of competition where in fact no competition existed.

Why exempt railroads from the prohibition of interlocking directors when it is notorious that this abuse has borne its worst fruits in railroad management?

Why is the bill silent on the subject of stock watering, among the gravest of corporate evils, which has defrauded investors out of millions upon millions of dollars and bred grave conflicts between corporate managers trying to pay dividends on the water and their employees demanding higher wages?

If it be desirable, as the Democratic Party declared in its platform, to "restore to the statute the strength of which it has been deprived (by the Supreme Court's "rule of reason" decision), why does not this bill specifically so declare? Is the Congress incapable of writing a law whose meaning shall be so clear that the Federal courts can not mistake it?

Far more than the fate of the Democratic Party is bound up in this proposed legislation. It is to cure old evils, prevent new abuses, and provide a foundation upon which America's commerce may go forward during a long period of years without further regulative interruption. Is it not, then, vital to give the bill in its formative period the sharpest scrutiny, the most searching criticism, lest it emerge as a betrayal of the dominant party's pledges, a profound disappointment of the country's deep desire?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that there has been no intervening business since the absence of a quorum was last suggested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has heretofore been the ruling of the Chair. No business has been transacted.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] presented two telegrams and asked unanimous consent to have them printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance. That was done. I do not see any reason why that is not business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was in error as to what had taken place. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Lane	Page	Sterling
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Perkins	Swanson
Chamberlain	McCumber	Pittman	Thompson
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Pomerene	Thornton
Colt	Martine, N. J.	Reed	Townsend
Crawford	Nelson	Sheppard	Walsh
Culberson	Norris	Shively	Weeks
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.	West
Hitchcock	Overman	Smoot	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. GORE, and Mr. MYERS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is paired on all votes with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

I also desire to announce that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is temporarily absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. KERN, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when the hour of recess arrived last evening I was discussing section 3 of the conference report, which prohibits tying contracts, and had undertaken to show that the conferees, by adding an amendment to the original House provision first taking out the criminal penalties and then adding the qualifying clause, "where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce," have so weakened the bill as practically to destroy its remedial effect.

I desire, before passing from this section, to make one additional observation.

The section as passed by the Senate contained this language:

That it shall not be lawful to insert or incorporate a condition in any contract relating to the sale or lease of or license to use any article or process protected by a patent or patents.

The words "or license to use" are of great import, because they exactly describe the practice now in vogue by the great monopolies that are employing this particular tying device for the purpose of extending their monopolistic control. The method is to attach to a machine which is patented a simple license stipulation providing somewhat as follows:

This machine is licensed upon the express understanding that the holder thereof shall use upon it only products which are manufactured by the lessor—

Or "the seller," as the case may be. Now, the term "or license" is left out of the bill as it comes to us from conference. Hence it is very probable that the particular practice I have referred to is not inhibited by the bill as it now stands.

The bill as we passed it covered the "licensing or selling of any article or process upon condition that the purchaser shall not purchase goods from another than the seller," and so forth. Now, it so happens that there are certain patented processes the right to use which is granted by sale, license ,or lease, the article itself not being sold, licensed, or leased. The striking out of the words "or process" leaves the bill so that it does not embrace tying conditions in contracts relating to processes. I simply call attention to these two matters in passing.

I might as well now as elsewhere discuss an important change which has been made by inserting, in section 4, the word "substantially." In this section you will find that the conferees have not provided that a tying contract shall be void in itself because it is against public policy, but it is to be void only when the making of the contract shall result in substantially lessening competition. In section 7 of the bill, which limits the acquisition of the stock of one corporation by another corporation, the Senate prohibition covered stock ownership where the effect of the acquisition might be to lessen competition In the conferees' report, however, we find that phrase changed to "may be to substantially lessen competition"; and further on in the same section some three different times the word "substantially" is written in to qualify the phrase as it existed when the bill left the Senate.

This leads me to offer some observations upon the word "substantially."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator proceeds to do so, it might be well to remark that the word "substantially" was in the bill when it came from the House; that the bill received very careful consideration from the Judiciary Committee, of which the distinguished Senator from Missouri was a member; that the committee was not moved to take out the word, but that it was taken out in the Senate, and simply restored by the conferees as it was passed in the House and approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Mr. REED. Yes; but I presume the action of the Senate in taking out the word "substantially," notwithstanding the fact that the Senate committee had allowed it to remain in, gives added force to what I am saying, because manifestly it is a much graver thing for the conferees to recede from an action taken by the Senate, after solemn debate and upon vote, than it is to recede from a proposition that was merely reported by a committee and accepted as a matter of course by the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I referred to the fact because I thought it might fairly be inferred, as I think is the case, that the Judiciary Committee was not impressed with the difference between "lessening competition" and "substantially lessening competition" sufficiently even to excite discussion upon the subject.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, whether the Judiciary Committee was or not, the Senate was; and the Senate, after full debate, struck out the word "substantially."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator mean to say that in all cases the conferees on the part of the Senate should insist and insist and stand all the time for what the Senate did? If that were true, could there ever be an agreement in conference?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not made any such insistence, and no one is warranted in drawing such a deduction from what I have said.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, the Senator has been criticizing——

Mr. REED. In commenting upon this bill as it is now before us as the result of the conferees' work, however, it is entirely proper for me to challenge the thought of the Senate to the fact that the bill as now presented is an unsound measure. Such comment need not be regarded as a reflection upon anybody or any criticism of anybody.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not take it as a criticism, but I am taking it as a principle and as a matter of procedure. How in the world, because the Senate has put on an amendment, can it be said that we have got to continue to insist and insist and never agree? If we did that, we never would have any bill at all. Where there was a difference between the House and the Senate, we never would have any legislation. These matters are matters of compromise, and all legislation is a matter of compromise, or you will have no legislation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the question we are considering now, or that we will consider before this controversy is over, is whether this bill will be recommitted with instructions; and as pertinent to that issue I propose to discuss every defect in this bill to the best of my ability and to discuss them as long as I shall feel like proceeding with the discussion.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am not criticizing the Senator. He is proceeding within his rights. He has a right to do this; but when he criticizes the conferees for yielding I want to know how we can ever agree to any bill without concessions on each side.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not mentioned this morning the fact that the conferees yielded or did not yield. My friend evidently did not sleep well last night or got out of the wrong side of bed this morning, and got out wrong end to. I have not said anything to-day about the conferees yielding.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator got up wrong about a month ago. He has been criticizing and continuing to criticize for weeks.

Mr. REED. I know that any man is wrong who criticizes the sacred action of the conferees. I know that there is a sentiment in the Senate, pretty generally disseminated, that if a man can get on a conference committee he can there write a bill to suit himself.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator has never been on a conference committee, so far as I know.

Mr. REED. Yes; I have been on a conference committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Probably when he does he will see that you have to agree with the other parties before you can have any legislation.

Mr. REED. I fully understand the duties of a conferee. When I have been here as long as the Senator from North Carolina has and have gained that wisdom which comes with the ripeness of age and great experience I may fall into the idea that when I am a conferee I have the right to do as I please. Just at present, however, being a mere tenderfoot and greenhorn who has blundered into this august body, and being almost completely overwhelmed by the intellectual superiority of my associates, I venture occasionally to entertain the old-fashioned notion that the Senate of the United States is bigger than the conferees of any committee. Further, I desire to say this in all kindliness, for the love I bear my good friend passeth all understanding, which he very well knows—also, I profoundly respect him and do most ardently admire him—that I am making no personal fight here. I make contention because I believe this bill is a betrayal of the Democratic Party and of the country. I do not care how innocent that betrayal may be; I do not care how much of good faith may have gone along with it; as I view this legislation it is an absolute turning around, a facing about, by our party. We march now to the rear where we promised the country an advance to the front. The proposition no longer is to proceed by penalties, no longer is to suppress by the fear of fine and imprisonment. For these methods we now propose to substitute a sort of regulation. Whereas formerly the penalties of the law hung like the sword of Damocles above the head of every man who, in willful violation of the law, sought to levy unjust tribute upon the country, we now propose to adopt a new method and to turn him over to the tender care of a commission that can not punish him by a single day in jail, the levy of a fine or imposition of any penalty whatsoever, and I shall continue to protest, sir, even though complaisant acquiescence might be for the moment more popular.

Mr. President, I am entirely willing to yield to any Senator at any time for a question, but hereafter when a Senator feels the spirit moving him so that he wants to make a speech or to express his spleen or to lecture me I trust he will restrain himself until he can relieve his feelings in his own time. These acrimonious interruptions are discords in melodies I am now producing and entirely destroy their soothing effects.

I was about to offer some observations on the word "substantially." It either has a meaning in this bill or it does not have a meaning. If it has no meaning, it should not be in the bill. If it does have a meaning, then it is important to ascertain to what extent it qualifies the language in connection with which it is used.

When we come to examine the word "substantially" in section 7 in its context we find it thus appears:

That no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of another corporation engaged also in commerce where the effect of such acquisition may be to lessen competition.

So said the Senate bill, but now we find it is made to read:

May be to substantially lessen competition.

Now, what does "substantially" mean as thus used? It has a meaning or it would not have been inserted by the conferees. Plainly it was intended to say that it is not enough that the stock owned by a corporation may lessen, but it must do more; it must substantially lessen competition.

Further on in the bill, in the clause relating to holding companies, as the bill is now drawn, the word "substantially" again appears, so that as to holding companies the fact that a corporation owns the stock of two or more corporations and that the effect may be to lessen competition is not sufficient to warrant the bringing of an action, the lessening must be substantial.

Further on in the bill the word "substantially" twice again appears. I will not stop to comment upon the context in these two latter cases, because I have said enough to lay the foundation for the observations I desire to make.

I regard it, Mr. President, as a general principle that when a law, general in its terms, is amended by singling out specific acts or practices which would otherwise be embraced within the general terms of the existing law these acts or practices thus singled out are thereafter to be governed by the provisions of the amendment. I believe it to be true that if a statute in general terms defines larceny and affixes a punishment, under such a statute a horse thief could be tried and the penalty of larceny inflicted. But if subsequently a law is passed dealing specifically with horse stealing and affixing a penalty, thereafter the horse thief would be tried under the latter statute and the penalty therein prescribed would be visited.

Applying the foregoing I have this to say: The Sherman Act denounced all agreements in restraint of trade and provided a penalty of fine and imprisonment. We now propose to enact a statute denouncing tying contracts and certain other practices which may be of such a character as to amount to a restraint of trade. Having thus singled out and specifically provided for this particular practice in restraint of trade, it is at least open to argument whether we have not thereby taken that particular practice from the purview of the Sherman Act itself.

If we fail in the present bill to reenact the same penalty provided in the Sherman Act, we are in danger of finding that we have removed the particular practice specified from the scope of the Sherman Act where it can now be penalized and place it under another law where no penalty follows.

THE INCORPORATION OF THE WORD "SUBSTANTIAL" IN THE BILL A MORE RADICAL CHANGE IN THE TRUST LAWS THAN THE INSERTION OF THE WORD "UNREASONABLE" BY THE SUPREME COURT.

We have changed the rule of the Sherman Act. The Sherman Act provided that all contracts in restraint of trade were illegal. The conferees, by their amendment, have interjected the word "substantial." It was enough under the Sherman Act to show that there was a restraint of trade. Under this section, treating of the same character of subjects embraced within the Sherman Act, we now provide that the restraint of trade—lessening of competition—must be "substantial." That is a very different thing from the rule of the Sherman Act. The change is radical, far-reaching, and is likely to be disastrous.

All will remember when the Supreme Court wrote the word "reasonable" into the Sherman Act. When that decision was announced it was recognized as being of a revolutionary character. It struck the country as being a deadly blow to trust litigation. Within a week's time some half dozen propositions to amend the Sherman statute so as to nullify the effect of the decision were introduced into the Senate. Now, however, by positive legislation, we propose to write into the act a vastly greater qualification than the Supreme Court injected into it.

The Supreme Court said that the restraint of trade must be "unreasonable." We say it must be "substantial." Unless the word "substantial" means as much as the word "unreasonable," it means nothing. In my opinion the word is of broader significance and the injury done to our trust legislation by its interpolation is greater than was accomplished by the Supreme Court when it manufactured and imported into the statutes of Congress the term "unreasonable."

Moreover, in the future, when the court comes to construe the trust act in a case against a trust and finds that one of the practices employed by the trust for the purpose of completing its monopoly is a tying contract, the court will naturally say that before it can hold such an act to be illegal it must find that the tying contract substantially lessened competition, a thing very difficult to prove and entirely different from the requirements of the Sherman law, which are to the effect that if trade is at all restrained then the act is illegal.

It is my opinion that by accepting the amendment of the conferees we shall give legislative sanction to the process of whittling away the body of our trust legislation.

SECTION 2 WORTHLESS WITHOUT A PENAL PROVISION.

I now come to consider section 2, and without indulging in any language which may be regarded as violent or strong I declare it to be my opinion that section 2 as now written is absolutely silly, because it is absolutely without any practical force. That is pretty strong language, and yet I believe I can demonstrate it to be fully justified.

What is section 2? It is brought forward here as a remedy for the existing evil of local price cutting. The common practice indulged by very great and wealthy concerns is to go into a trade territory where there is competition and drop the price of an article below the cost of production. In a little while its competitors have been absolutely driven into bankruptcy or forced to quit the field. Thereupon the great concern proceeds to advance the price on that same community and recoup itself for all losses. In the meantime, without the ultimate loss of a penny, it has established a monopoly in that country, State, or neighborhood by driving out all competitors.

The evil is not a trifling one. The House in its report, which is adopted by the Senate committee, had this to say:

Section 2 of the bill is intended to prevent unfair discriminations. It is expressly designed with the view of correcting and forbidding a common and widespread unfair trade practice whereby certain great corporations, and also certain smaller concerns which seek to secure a monopoly in trade and commerce by aping the methods of the great corporations, have heretofore endeavored to destroy competition and render unprofitable the business of competitors by selling their goods, wares, and merchandise at a less price in the particular communities where their rivals are engaged in business than at other places throughout the country.

The violation of any of the provisions of this section is made a misdemeanor, and is made punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.

Every concern that engages in this evil practice must of necessity recoup its losses in the particular communities or sections where their commodities are sold below cost or without a fair profit by raising the price of this same class of commodities above their fair market value in other sections or communities. Such a system or practice is so manifestly unfair and unjust, not only to competitors who are directly injured thereby, but to the general public, that your committee is strongly of the opinion that the present antitrust laws ought to be supplemented by making this particular form of discrimination a specific offense under the law when practiced by those engaged in commerce.

The committee then goes on to state that so great is this evil, and so widespread, that it has been made the subject of specific legislation in 19 different States, and adds:

In seeking to enact section 2 into law we are not dealing with an imaginary evil or against ancient practices long since abandoned, but are attempting to deal with a real, existing, widespread, unfair, and unjust trade practice that ought at once to be prohibited in so far as it is within the power of Congress to deal with the subject.

Mr. President, I ask to attach hereto as a part of my remarks, without reading, the list of States which have enacted laws denouncing local price cutting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

1. Arkansas, act of 1905, as amended March 12, 1913.
2. Idaho, antitrust act of 1911.
3. Iowa, Revised Statutes.
4. Louisiana, act of 1908.
5. Missouri, Revised Statutes.
6. Nebraska, act of 1913.
7. New Jersey, act of 1913.
8. North Carolina, act of 1913.
9. Oklahoma, act of 1913.
10. South Carolina, act of 1902.
11. Utah, act of 1913.
12. Wisconsin, act of 1913.
13. Wyoming, Revised Statutes, 1911.
14. Kansas, act of 1905.
15. Michigan, act of 1913.
16. Massachusetts, act of 1912.
17. Montana, act of 1913.
18. North Dakota, act of 1913.
19. California, act of 1913.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in every one of these States, so far as I know, the indulgence in this practice has been made a crime, and heavy penalties are laid against those who practice the evil. Among the States which have prohibited the practice is New Jersey, which covered it by the act of 1913. I again call attention to the language of the committee's report:

It is important that these State statutes be supplemented by additional legislation by Congress, for—

Says the report—

it is now possible for one of these great corporations doing business in not only the 48 States, but throughout the world, to lower the prices of its commodities in a particular State and sell within that State at a uniform price in compliance with State laws, and thereby destroy the business of all independent concerns and competitors operating within the State.

Mr. President, if that report be true, then we are dealing with an evil of gigantic magnitude; we are confronted by a situation where trusts, combinations, and vast aggregations of capital are able to go into a sovereign State, reduce the price upon some necessity of life below its actual cost, destroy every competitor within that State, then take and hold the field alone. Having taken the territory, it has power to levy the monopolist's toll and extort not only the pound of flesh but the blood that flows from the gaping wound. If one-tenth of what is said in that report is true, then we have no right to trifle with this evil. When we propose to trifle with it we betray the party that sent us here instructed to eradicate these great wrongs.

Mr. President, I again assert that for all practical purposes section 2 might as well have been eliminated from this bill at the same moment of time that its criminal penalty was eliminated. Why do I say that? How long would it take to suppress horse stealing if the law provided that you must first catch the thief, then carry him before a commission, then prove him guilty, then give him the right of appeal to the courts, then give him the right to go to the appellate courts, and, at the end of all the years of litigation, all you could do with him were to command him not to steal any more horses, and allow him to ride away on the horse he had stolen?

How long would it take to suppress burglary if the law provided that you must catch your burglar, take him before a commission, and after the commission had examined into the facts, after the long course of years had run, and on appeal the finding of the commission had been sustained, all you could do with the burglar were to say to him, "Go, thou, and sin no more; but keep the swag you have already accumulated"?

But this provision is even worse than that illustration. Under this provision a monopoly or trust can enter a great State; it can, as says the committee of the House, absolutely proceed by a system of price cutting to drive out of business every man engaged in that particular line of trade in that State. In the meantime, by advancing prices elsewhere, it can recoup its losses. Having driven all of these men out of business, it now occupies the field and can collect the enormous profit monopoly always exacts. It can continue to collect these profits to the day of final judgment.

What is the remedy we propose by this bill. The concern can be taken before a commission; weeks and months will undoubtedly elapse before the commission shall have concluded its hearings. All the skill of the best corporation lawyers will be employed; every method of delay will be sought, every technicality will be raised. The time necessary to collect the evidence will necessarily be very considerable. Depositions may be taken perhaps from New York to San Francisco. At the end of all the hearings will come the argument of counsel. Then days and possibly weeks or months of deliberation by the commission.

In the meantime what? In the meantime the practice goes on; in the meantime the concern collects its monopolistic toll. In the meantime what further? In the meantime the competitor is being choked to death; his trade is being destroyed; bankruptcy is impending, maybe it has come. At last the commission renders its decision. Then, with the look of a saint and with the manner of a martyr, the attorney for the corporation appeals from the decision of the commission to the United States court of appeals. Again comes the consumption of time incident to the filing of the record, the briefs of counsel, the arguments before the court. After about two years have elapsed—and that is the shortest time in which you can hope to obtain a hearing even under the provisions of this bill—a decision is rendered. In the meantime what? In the meantime the monopolist has still been crowding, crowding, crowding his weaker competitor from the field of action. The United States court of appeals decides against the practice, whereupon a writ of error is immediately sued out an dthe case is carried before the Supreme Court of the United States. Again come the counsel with their briefs and green bags. Again, after months, perhaps years, of delay, the Supreme Court reaches its decision. The final decision is that the practice has all along been wrong; that it has all along been wicked; that it has all along been unjustifiable; that it has all the time been condemned by the statute. But what has happened during the five or six years the case has been pending or the litigation going on? What about the competitor who stood there so weak that he needed aid and needed it at once? What about him? He has been driven into bankruptcy; he has quit the field; he is already ruined; perhaps he has been compelled to sell out to the combination.

I am not indulging in fancy, for the highways of commerce are strewn with evidence of the statements I am making. In almost every town and village of the land dead chimneys stand as a monument of the fact that an invader in the form of a trust has been there and has put out the fires in the furnaces of the smaller industries. What about the men who have been ruined? Is there any salvation for them in this bill? This bill, sir, is a letter of marque and reprisal authorizing the trusts to operate for four or five or six years, and at the end of that time to go unscathed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Senator seems to forget that the operation of the trust is prohibited all the time.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes. Every time I drive you from this bill, every time I show you that this bill is so absurd and ridiculous that it can not be defended, you take refuge in the old Sherman Act. You all act like a Kansas farmer who, when he sees a cloud as big as a man's hand, ducks into his cyclone cellar. The Sherman Act is the cyclone cellar for the defenders of this bill. When they can no longer defend this bill they cry out, "We have the Sherman Act." If the Sherman Act covers these practices, why obstruct the statute books with an unnecessary law?

Mr. WALSH. It does not; but it covers the operations of the trusts. That is what the Senator is talking about. The trust, the unlawful combination the Senator is talking about, is all the time amenable to criminal prosecution; but the Senator always argues upon the assumption that it is not.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I do not; I never made such an argument in my life. I do not mean to answer my friend abruptly, but he never heard such a statement fall from my lips or the suggestion of such a statement.

Mr. WALSH. I interrupted the Senator because the Senator said, substantially, that the trusts, the unlawful combinations, will continue in these unlawful practices while the procedure takes its regular course through the Trade Commission and eventually crush their independent creditors.

Mr. REED. Exactly; and the Senator fully understood that I was talking about what the trusts can do under this bill. The record will show that I have so said not once but twenty times.

Mr. WALSH. But meanwhile the trusts will be subject to criminal prosecution every day.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes. Mr. President. Then, why are you putting this bill on the statute books? You are putting it on the statute books as an additional remedy; you are putting it on as something that is better than the trust act; you are putting it on to reach the case of the big man and the little man.

Mr. WALSH. To reach the case of the man who is not subject to prosecution under the Sherman Act because he does not stand in the attitude of a trust or an unlawful combination.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator's views are at variance with the views laid down in the House report. I will come back and argue that in a moment, if the Senator can restrain his impatience long enough to let me conclude one thing at a time.

Mr. WALSH. I will try not to interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. REED. I am perfectly willing to be interrupted, but always these interruptions come just at the time one is about to conclude the discussion of a question.

I say under this bill, and so far as it is concerned, the trust magnate or the man, whether he be big or whether he be little, can resort to all the delays I have named, and during the time his rival is being destroyed and driven from the field can be pocketing the profits of his buccaneering expedition, and at the end of it all, so far as this bill is concerned, he keeps the money he has gained. All the commission can do is to tell him he must stop the particular practice. Whereupon he thrusts his hands into his pockets, fingers his profits, and looks for new fields of enterprise where he may with equal safety pursue similar methods.

What about the people who are to be considered? Can they recover anything? There may be here and there some large dealer who will be able to show sufficient damages to warrant him in bringing a suit, but the great consuming public, which buys at retail and which is robbed a penny or a farthing upon each little purchase, is remediless. The toll has been collected; the blood has been drawn from the people's veins drop by drop; they may look a little pale and anemic, but they can not prove their damages in any court on earth; and yet they have been grievously damaged.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator except to correct him in his statement of what I said. I did not say that these are the practices of trusts and monopolies alone, nor that they are to be prohibited as such. These are the practices of trusts and monopolies, and when they are the practices of trusts and monopolies those trusts and monopolies are subject to prosecution under the Sherman antitrust law. Unfortunately, however, they are the practices of business organizations that are not trusts and monopolies, and those are the things that this bill is intended to reach.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator claim that this bill was not intended to reach the big man as well as the little man?

Mr. WALSH. Why, of course it was intended to reach the big man who can not be reached under the Sherman Act.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator say that it was not intended to reach the big trust as well as the little concern?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Montana asserts that it was not intended to reach the trust, big or little; that the trust is reached by the Sherman Act. It was intended to reach the business organization that can not be reached by the Sherman Act, that is not subject to it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana does not stand with the committee of the Senate, and he does not stand with the committee of the House, and he does not stand with the President of the United States, whose message I read here yesterday. I now read from the report of the committee of the House. Let us see whether this legislation was intended only to affect the small man.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Montana has said that that is not the case. It is intended to reach the big man, no matter how big he is, who can not be reached by the Sherman Act.

Mr. REED. Let us see if it was not intended to reach the trust and if it was not intended to reach trust practices, born in the brain of a trust, worked out through trust methods, and the profits carried over and put into the coffers of the trust. I read from the House report on the bill:

> The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes, report the same back with the recommendation that the bill be amended as follows:
> * * * * * * *
> Your committee, after the delivery of a message by the President of the United States, on January 20 last, to the Congress, making certain recommendations relating to the matter of trusts and monopolies—

Not of little men, not of retailers, but "making certain recommendations relating to the matter of trusts and monopolies"— > immediately prepared and published tentative bills which were designed to give legislative expression to the views contained in the President's message, and in order that the country might be given ample time to discuss them the committee conducted public hearings until April 4, at which time they were concluded.

>
> The bill is not designed to destroy or hinder business, but, on the contrary, to help business and the whole people of the country who are related to or affected by it. The able and patriotic message of the President has been ever before us and the program which he proposed is contained in the provisions of the bill, and if enacted into law will in truth be "additional articles in our constitution of peace—the peace which is honor and freedom and prosperity."

There is not a word there about the little fellow. We are dealing with trusts and monopolies; and the President's message that I read yesterday and that I shall not take time to read again dealt with trusts and monopolies.

Now, I read a little further:

> Every concern that engages in this evil practice must of necessity recoup its losses in the particular communities or sections where their commodities are sold below cost or without a fair profit by raising the price of this same class of commodities above their fair market value in other sections or communities.

Let us stop and analyze that for a minute. A concern must be a pretty large concern before it can indulge in this practice with any effect. It must be able, first, to stand the financial loss of cutting the price of an article in a trade territory below the cost of production, else it could not drive out a rival. Second, it must be able to withstand the financial drain for many months, perhaps for years. Third, it must be so large a concern that it not only covers the particular trade territory where its practice is being indulged, but it is so spread over the country that it can collect in other States and other communities the profits with which to sustain its unholy warfare.

Why, this can not apply to little things. A little concern can not employ such methods. It is only the large concern that can ever use them with any effect. And what says this report?

> The necessity for such legislation is shown by the fact that 19 States have enacted laws forbidding this particular form of discrimination within their borders. These State statutes have practically all been enacted in the last few years, and most of them in the years 1911, 1912, and 1913. It is important that these State statutes be supplemented by additional legislation by Congress—

Now, listen to the description of one of your little things that is not a trust or monopoly:

> for it is now possible for one of these great corporations doing business in not only the 48 States but throughout the world to lower the prices of its commodities in a particular State and sell within that State at a uniform price in compliance with State laws, and thereby destroy the business of all independent concerns and competitors operating within the State.

And yet the Senator says this legislation was not intended to apply to anything but little concerns.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I never made the statement, and the Senator ought not to charge me with doing so. On the contrary, I expressly declared that it was intended to be applicable to anybody, no matter how big he was, and the bigger the more applicable it is.

Mr. REED. Very well; then it does apply to the trusts.

Mr. WALSH. Excuse me; it is not intended specifically to apply to the trusts that are already subject to prosecution.

Mr. REED. But does it or does it not apply to trusts?

Mr. WALSH. Why, it may. A trust may do these things; but the trust, when it does them, is liable every day to prosecution under the Sherman Act.

Mr. REED. And so is any individual who does them liable to prosecution under the Sherman Act. So also is a corporation, whether big or little, whenever it does them in a way to restrain trade; and if it does not do them in a way to restrain trade then, whether it is a big concern that we commonly call a trust, or whether it is a little concern that we commonly call a corporation, its acts are not unlawful and can not be reached under the Sherman Act.

This section of the bill was originally intended to have some practical effect. That intent has been nullified. As it passed the House, it is true, it would have taken some time to have enforced the statute. The delays of courts would have occurred. The wrongful practice might still have gone on for some time, and in the meantime a competitor might have been put out of business, but at the end of the litigation the trust magnate or the man indulging in the practice, big or little, was in danger of adorning his dishonest back with the stripes of a felon. But by this bill you say to him, "We will simply issue an order telling you that you must not do it any more."

Such a law is worse than farcical, because it is a betrayal. It is a pretense to the public that we are offering a remedy when we are offering no remedy that will effectuate any good end.

It is singular, but every time the conferees touched this bill they drew its teeth. I am aware of no single provision the conferees put in this bill that tended to make it a more drastic bill against trusts, combinations, monopolies, or restraints of trade.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator would like information about the matter——

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to have it.

Mr. WALSH. I will call his attention to this fact: The Senator moved to amend by changing the word "is" to "may be." The language of the bill as it came from the House was "where the effect is to eliminate or substantially reduce competition." It was adopted by the Judiciary Committee, and as it came to the Senate it read in that way. The Senator himself moved to amend by substituting the words "may be" for "is." He made a very strong argument in favor of his amendment, a convincing argument. He convinced the Senate that that was the way it ought to be. We agreed with him. That amendment was adopted. I find that the Senate conferees, of whom I was not one, required the House conferees to yield to that amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not intended to say that none of the Senate provisions went into the conference report. What I meant to say—and if I did not make myself plain, I will do so now—was that when the conferees got up an amendment of their own they invariably weakened this bill. They diluted it. I commented upon some of those changes on yesterday. I shall have more to comment upon as I proceed.

I repeat, it is a singular thing that whereas the conferees amended this bill in a number of particulars, I know of no single instance where they did not weaken the bill, so far as it bears upon trusts or monopolies.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator would like some further light on that point, I think I can furnish it.

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to have it.

Mr. WALSH. In the same connection, I moved to strike out the provision, which was to the effect that if the effect of the things denounced by the act is to create a monopoly, they were made unlawful. The Senate refused to strike that out on my motion, but left it as it was—where the effect is to create a monopoly.

Mr. REED. In what section is that?

Mr. WALSH. In the same sections, 8 and 9. The Senate conferees changed that so as to make it where it may tend to create a monopoly. That made the provision very much more drastic.

Mr. REED. Did the Senator say section 9?

Mr. WALSH. Sections 2, 4, 7, and 8. I speak of the sections as they were. I do not know how they stand in the conference report. I will give them to the Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. Sections 7 and 8 of the conference report are the ones to which the Senator from Montana refers. The Senator will find the first one at the bottom of page 5 of the conference report.

Mr. REED. Why, Mr. President, that whole clause is an assassination of the section itself.

Mr. WALSH. I will call the attention of the Senator to it.

Mr. REED. I refer to the one that the Senator from Texas, the chairman of the committee, has just called attention to. What was the section? I am referring now to section 3 of the conferees' report, which was section 2 of the House bill and corresponded to section 2 of the Senate bill, and which appears at the bottom of page 5 of the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. I refer the Senator to section 7.

Mr. REED. In a moment. I shall discuss the one that is called to my attention by the Senator from Texas and then I will take up the other.

The Senate bill and the House bill had absolutely prohibited the making of contracts which had tying clauses to them; the Senate bill, however, being limited to patented articles. In that form such a contract could not be made. The conferees, however, added the clause—

> Where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale, or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

In other words, since this clause has been added, it is not enough, as I argued yesterday at length, to show that such a contract was made—which was sufficient under the House provision or under the Senate provision—but you must go further and show its effect to be to substantially lessen competition or to create a monopoly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARREN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. How would it be possible for a person examining a separate act or transaction, individually, to determine whether or not that particular act had a tendency to create a monopoly? In other words, if you do not prohibit the tying of itself, almost any shrewd organizer of monopoly could show that the particular act which you had undertaken to prohibit would not tend to create a monopoly; that if it was created it would be in another way. So you can not look ahead and see what the effect of a particular act will be in the matter of creating a monopoly.

Mr. REED. The Senator's observation is, as most of his observations are, very lawyerlike and very wise. In support of that observation and in illustration of the fact that he has put his finger upon the very weakness of this measure I call attention to this fact: You may read every trust petition filed by the Government of the United States in the great number of trust suits it has brought and in no single instance, to my knowledge—I do not claim to have read them all, but I have read many—do you find the Government in its petition singling out any specific act and resting its case upon that act. On the contrary, the petition usually begins by attacking the method of organization. It sets forth a condition of facts showing that there was a bringing together under one control of a great many institutions, the tendency of the combination being to produce monopoly. These allegations are followed by pleading innumerable oppressive practices and acts such as local price cutting, the hiring of a competitor's employees, the slandering of a competitor's business, the effort to forestall him in his market where he purchases his raw material, the effort to drive him out of a particular corner by the rental of the property which he had expected to obtain—these and a multitude of other instances are all grouped together so that out of the vast mass of circumstances may be woven a mesh so fine that the trust proprietor can not escape. In no one of these cases can you find the Government bottoming its case upon one act.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. WALSH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. In just a moment. The Senator from Montana has risen.

Mr. WALSH. I rose in response to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. The section found on page 8 is section 7 of the conferees' report and is equivalent to section 6 of the bill which passed the Senate. The first part of it, as the Senator recalls, deals with one corporation holding stock of another corporation; the second part deals with what is known as the holding corporation. The language of the bill originally was:

> Where the effect of such acquisition or the use of such stock by the voting or granting of proxies or otherwise may be to eliminate or substantially lessen competition between such corporations, or any of them, whose stock or other share capital is so acquired, or to create a monopoly of any line of trade in any section or community.

The conferees made it read:

> Or to restrain such commerce in any section or community or tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce.

In the latter part of the section the conferees changed the language "or to create a monopoly" to the language "or tend to create a monopoly." I thought that that strengthened the bill rather than weakened it.

Mr. REED. If those clauses stood alone, they would strengthen the bill, as also would the other two interpolations made by the conferees, which I read:

> Or to restrain such commerce in the section or community.

Those words appear twice. If those words alone had been added by the conferees they would have strengthened this section. But, Mr. President, the conferees put back the word "substantially."

Mr. WALSH. Does it not occur to the Senator that that is a separate change? I understand the Senator believes that to weaken the bill. Let us dismiss that. Let us agree with the Senator that that weakens the bill.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. Now take the other and consider it separately.

Mr. REED. But it can not be considered separately, as I am going to try to show, and I shall be as fair as I know how to be in discussing this report. I say that the words "or to restrain such commerce in any section or community" do strengthen the bill, but they are not here alone. At the same time the conferees restored those words they put in the word "substantially," so that the words put in do not mean "or to restrain such commerce in any section or community," but they mean to substantially restrain such commerce in any section or community, which is a very different thing. That word "substantially" I have protested against. It is there to qualify these new words. So we do not get their full benefit. However, I will say to the Senator frankly, if the phrase interpolated by the conferees had gone into the bill alone, it would have strengthened it.

Now, Mr. President, coming again to section 2 of the conference report, I call attention to the fact that in addition to cutting out the criminal penalties which are the very vitals of that section, without which, as I have argued here at length, it has no potentiality, will produce no results, and will protect nobody, the conferees have added a qualifying clause, which follows the language providing that goods shall not be sold at different prices in the same or different communities, and that clause is:

> Where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Again, they have added the words:

> Or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition.

I do not object to the last clause, but as to the former let us give it a moment's attention—the seven Senators who are present.

SEVERAL SENATORS. There are nine.

Mr. REED. I am corrected; there are nine Senators present. Let us give it attention, and I say now, as Senator LA FOLLETTE once said on this floor, "If we do not attend, the country will." What is meant by the phrase "where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce"?

Mr. President, when you prove that you have made out a case under the Sherman Act, as I understand the decisions. So the effect of this whole section is, you shall not discriminate in price in such a way that you violate the Sherman Act, and if you do, we will take you before a commission that can not do anything to you except tell you to stop, instead of taking you before a court under the Sherman Act, fining you, and sending you to jail. If I am not mistaken in my construction of those qualifying words, you can not get a conviction under that section unless you are able to prove a case, which would entitle you to go to a jury in a prosecution under the Sherman Act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that statement strikes me as rather important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH. That is a case which challenges our very earnest attention, and I should like to inquire about it.

Where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition.

So if an individual should cut prices on another, and the effect of that cutting would be to substantially lessen competition, he would be amenable to the Sherman Act?

Mr. REED. If I am correct, the term "substantially lessen competition" is synonymous with the term "restraint of trade." I have argued that——

Mr. WALSH. The Senator must bear in mind that section 1 of the Sherman Act deals simply with combinations and conspiracies. That contemplates the union of two or more organizations. That is not this case. The second clause says that it is criminal to create or attempt to create a monopoly. That is not this at all. You may not attempt to create a monopoly at all; you may not create a monopoly; but if you do a thing which tends to create a monopoly, you are amenable under this bill.

Mr. REED. The Senator is wrong in his analysis of the Sherman Act, in my opinion, and I want to be plain in what I am saying now in regard to this section. I am not setting up my opinion as final upon it. I am not saying that I am necessarily right; but I am arguing and appealing to Senators to consider it. I am giving my opinion, which I frankly say I may change, but which I do not think I am likely to change. I hold that the words "substantially lessen competition" have no other meaning than "restraint of trade"; and that therefore this section means nothing different than it would if it were to read "where the effect of such discrimination may be to restrain trade." I argued that at great length yesterday, and I do not intend at this time to cover the same ground. If I am correct in that, it could be, in my judgment, met under the Sherman Act. As I understand the decisions under that act, it is not necessary to prove that an actual restraint of trade has been worked.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that he ignores the essential part of section 1 of the Sherman Act, which relates to combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade.

Mr. REED. That section applies to more than mere combinations. There are two sections. The Sherman Act covers the act in combination and it covers the individual action.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; section 2 covers the individual act.

Mr. REED. Section 1 reads:

Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations is hereby declared to be illegal.

I do not think that section is limited to conspiracies. I do not think that language is——

Mr. WALSH. Combination contracts.

Mr. REED. Every contract. You can cut out all the rest of it except in restraint of trade. It does not say every contract and combination in restraint of trade, but every contract, and then follows the language:

Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination.

All that is necessary is to make a contract which restrains trade. It can be done by an individual or it can be done by a combination of individuals. That is my opinion, and I think I can satisfy the Senator on that point, but I can not do it now, for I have no time to go and get the law books. However, I think if the Senator will examine it himself he will arrive at the conclusion that an individual may be guilty of restraint of trade under the Sherman Act.

Mr. President, while these interruptions are very entertaining and I do not complain of them, they are taking some time and throwing me a little off of the thread of what I intended to talk about. I am not engaged in any filibuster or attempt to consume time. I believe I could have, without interruption, concluded what I wanted to say on yesterday.

HOLDING COMPANIES FAVORED.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate now to sections 7 and 8. As I have already discussed the word "substantially," inserted in these sections, I pass the sections with simply one observation: When you give to a holding company the full right to own the stock of other companies and then impose upon the Government the duty before it can prohibit that holding to show that there has been a substantial lessening of competition, you have required it to show more than it is necessary for it now to show under the Sherman Act. The section, in my opinion, in its present form is without the slightest value.

The criminal penalty also is here stricken out. I want to know why it should be stricken out. No man ever organized a holding company and substantially restricted competition who did not do so with his eyes open. He did not err through inadvertence. The reason he organized that holding company in the first instance was to lessen competition. That is what holding companies are for.

Will somebody tell me why a man who deliberately sits down with his lawyer and evolves a scheme to organize a company to hold the stock of 10, 20, or 30 companies that are in competition, thus effectuating a monopoly through the form of one company instead of a trust through the form of a trust agreement—will some one tell me why the man who does that should not be fined, should not be imprisoned, should not be treated at least as severely as we treat a man who does not pay a license on a box of cigars that he has made in the back room of his house?

SMALL OFFENDERS PUNISHED—GREAT CRIMINALS ESCAPE.

We have no difficulty in prescribing criminal penalties for the little fellow. We can with the knife of the law disembowel the little criminal and smile at his expressions of agony. We can, without compunction, arrest a poor, unlettered fellow who has been reared away off in the mountains and who regards it as a sort of a God-given privilege to make whisky and not pay any Government license, who has a little still that cost about $10 originally and has been handed down from father to son unto the tenth generation. We have not a bit of difficulty in putting that poor fellow in jail, not because he made the whisky, but because he did not pay the tax. But, then, he is only a little fellow. He wears plain, common clothes. His boots are coarse and run down at the heels. He does not shave every day. He is just an ordinary individual; besides, he is poor. We throw him in jail without the slightest hesitation. His overworked wife may trudge along the stony paths of the mountain toting little baskets of vegetables to the market to get money upon which she may live while the father of the household is in jail. There is no trouble about sending the moonshiner to jail or keeping him in jail. He has not robbed anybody; he just beat the Government out of a little tax, that is all.

But when a gentleman sits down behind a mahogany desk along with a lot of other gentlemen who look like they own the diamond mines of South Africa, the case is quite different. These wealthy gentlemen are consorting together for the purpose of getting up a scheme to rob entire communities, to crush great business concerns, to bankrupt States, to put out the fires in the furnaces of a hundred factories, and in the end to pilfer and filch with monopoly's cruel fingers from the pockets of the poor and the needy. They intend to gather the farthings and the pence and the nickels and the dimes from thousands of homes and pile them up in the vaults of banks. They intend to unload a vast amount of watered stock upon the unwary. They intend out of the accumulated profits to pay for bacchanalian feasts. They contemplate plowing the oceans with yachts big enough for trans-Atlantic steamers. They intend to take a part of the criminal loot and with it capitalize the campaigns of those who are willing to do their service in public places, to bribe legislators with their evil gains, to buy the souls of men, to even pollute the bench and stain the ermine of the judge—when such as these are to be dealt with we do it through a commission. This is the frightful, the bloody, penalty we intend to inflict. We shall say to them in mild and gentle accents, sweet as the notes of an æolian harp, "Dear respected friends, we are very sorry, but really you must quit it."

That is the whole trouble, sir, with our civilization; it is the rotten spot of American jurisprudence. We usually have one law for the impoverished and the same law for the wealthy, but when we come to the application of the law we enforce it against the man in rags and we fail to enforce it against the man in broadcloth. Just now we are making a law for the rich rogues; we are making it for the public plunderers; we are making it for the buccaneers of commerce; we are making it for the pirates who sail the high seas of trade, and in dealing with them our touch is as tender and as harmless as the kiss of a mother to the cheek of her first born. We do not send them to jail. Ah, no; we investigate them before a commission.

"DEMOCRATIC PARTY PLEDGED TO ENFORCE CRIMINAL PENALTIES AGAINST TRUSTS."—BRYAN.

We are playing the hypocrite, sir. We came here sounding our cymbals, girding up our loins, burnishing our weapons; we said to all the world, "When this great Democratic host shall assemble, when it shall bear down upon the citadels of greed, of corruption, of plunder—ah, then you will see how valiant arms, backed by honest hearts, will hew a clean path for the common people to tread." But now, having marched up the hill to the heroic voices of the bugles of war, we are sitting down by the camp fire and attuning our ears to the seductive notes of Home, Sweet Home. Some of us will hear from home—not now; the people are hypnotized just now, some of them. But I have never seen a fraud put off upon the American people that at the end of 10 days there was not somebody in every community who knew about it, and at the end of six months everybody in every community knew about it.

Have we promised criminal penalties? I read you the platform—one platform only, though I might have read many—demanding these criminal penalties. I also call your attention to the fact that we are here pledged, not by platforms alone, but by the utterances of our great men. Ah, I have been following those men, and I hope that as the years go by I may still follow them as with flaming swords they stand in front of the hosts of the people to battle against those who live by plundering the people. I read:

Other criminal laws are enforced against all offenders who can be found: why should we draw a distinction between the horse thief who violates the law against horse stealing and the trust magnate who violates the law against trusts?

Let me paraphrase that: "Why should we draw a distinction between the horse thief who violates the law of horse stealing and the organizer of a holding company who is engaged in creating a trust through that corporate form?" I read further:

The Senator [Mr. Beveridge] complains because I have said that private monopoly must be eliminated, that the trust must be destroyed root and branch.

Let me interpolate, that was the doctrine of the Bull Mooser—not to destroy monopolies, but to regulate them; not to carry them to the courts of justice, but to a commission; but said this great man whom I now am quoting in reply to Mr. Beveridge:

That is my position—that is, to destroy them root and branch—and that position was set forth in the Democratic national platform in 1900 and was indorsed by more than 6,000,000 voters.

Again, this great statesman said:

In the beginning the executive officers thought the civil part of the statute sufficient, and attempted to break up the trusts by injunction. That proving unsatisfactory, resort was next had to the criminal provisions of the law with the idea that a fine would be sufficient. The fine has been shown to be ineffective, and the President is turning more and more toward the imprisonment clause. It is useless to attempt to prevent combinations by fine levied against corporations when the fines are small compared with the sums made by the combination. Imprisonment, however, is real punishment, and the trust magnates will become scarce as soon as the penitentiary doors close upon a few of the offenders.

That is the language of William Jennings Bryan, the present Secretary of State, honored by the President with the highest position within his gift. That, sir, is yet the doctrine of the Democratic Party. You may strike out the criminal penalties of this bill; but I say to you that the aroused conscience of the American people will demand their restoration. You may, instead of providing courts and juries and jails for the great criminal, provide that he shall go before a commission, as you do by this section, and that the commission may finally tell him he must quit his practices and let him go free; but the day is coming when you will be obliged to write criminal penalties into this statute, and I predict they will be more severe when written in than those you have stricken from this bill.

If, sir, in the opinion of Mr. Bryan the Sherman law was not sufficiently drastic or was not enforced in a sufficiently drastic manner, what shall be said of this law, which proposes to say to the man who has organized a holding company for the purpose of creating a monopoly, "You can not even be fined; you can not be sent to jail; nothing can be done to you, sir, except you will be told to quit"?

I call attention to this statement. It is no anemic, expurgated thing; it is not of uncertain meaning; it has red blood in it, the fire of battle animates it, the courage of the statesman blazes through it.

CHAMP CLARK'S POSITION.

If I had my way, I would fill the penitentiaries and jails of the United States so full of trust magnates that their arms and legs would stick out of the windows.

That was the declaration of honest CHAMP CLARK. There is nothing in anything CLARK ever said that suggests a reprimand before a commission for a monopolist.

I shall be met with the argument that I am still fighting the commission. I never fought the commission. What I have objected to and object to now is the denuding of the courts of the authority that ought to be reposed in them and transferring the care of great criminals to a tribunal that is as impotent to prevent their evil practices as is the weak arm of a child to choke to death a Numidian lion.

In May, 1908, the American Lawyer, at pages 267 and 268, printed this:

Government ownership and Government regulation by commissions are not radically different and will be discredited by experience. Regulation by definite prohibitions of law is the effective process.

That was the contribution of Woodrow Wilson to the thought of the time. It was a wise statement; it was a profound utterance; it has the ring that goes with sincerity of purpose.

Mr. President, I could read to the Senate for hours similar pledges made by great Democrats. In my own small and weak way I have uttered equivalent expressions. I believe that the doctrine of prohibition with a criminal penalty attached to the prohibition is an essential part of the Democratic creed.

Mr. President, I raise the question of a quorum.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I make the point of order that no business has intervened since the last roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] suggests the absence of a quorum. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] makes the point of order that no business has intervened since the last call for a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I remember, after the lack of a quorum was shown, there was a motion made instructing the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. But not after the result of the roll call was announced.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the motion was made after the result was announced, and that the RECORD will so show.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to my friend the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. He is very courteous; I can not refrain from expressing my appreciation. In the Senate at the present time is the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]——

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I dislike to interrupt the compliment to myself, but I make the point that no debate is in order.

Mr. REED (continuing). The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent, of course. The Chair believes that there has been sufficient business to authorize the suggestion of the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Lee, Md.	Perkins	Smoot
Bryan	Lewis	Poindexter	Stone
Chamberlain	McCumber	Pomerene	Swanson
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Reed	Thornton
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Robinson	Vardaman
Gore	Nelson	Shafroth	Walsh
Hughes	Norris	Sheppard	Warren
Kern	O'Gorman	Shields	Williams
Lane	Overman	Shively
Lea, Tenn.	Page	Simmons

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] by leave of the Senate, and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. CHILTON, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, and Mr. WEST answered to their names when called.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. BORAH, Mr. WEEKS, Mr. WHITE, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. JOHNSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am delighted to know that 49 Senators have answered to their names, but by actual count there are not 16 Senators in the Chamber now.

Mr. ASHURST. And there will be less in a few minutes.

Mr. REED. And there will be less in a few minutes, as is said by the Senator from Arizona. Incidentally, I venture the remark that two-thirds of those who are not here have not read the conference report. I am not complaining on my own account. Having for a long period of my life been accustomed to address 12 men who could not get away, because they were in charge of a sheriff, I view with great delight the fact that 6 more than are necessary for a jury voluntarily remain.

The result of this bill concerns me no more than it does the other Members of the Senate. I have a great deal of sympathy for Senators who absent themselves from the Chamber. The fact that I am addressing the Senate is perhaps a sufficient excuse.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to finish this sentence.

Mr. BORAH. I simply want to say that one of the Senator's jury has gotten away.

Mr. REED. I felt that virtue had departed—not from myself, but from the Senate Chamber—when I noticed the vanishing coat tails of the last gentleman who left. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, a condition of indifference, resulting from fatigue, apparently exists at both ends of the Capitol. The cry is that things must be done at the present moment. The disposition of many Senators is to pass this bill regardless of its provisions, for I have heard that sentiment expressed repeatedly. The word is being circulated, "Pass this bill, and we will amend it hereafter."

In this condition of mind we approach the most important legislation that has been or that will be before this Congress. In my judgment, men will vote upon this bill who have never read the conference report, who have neither read the bill nor heard a word of the discussion. That, of course, is for them to do if they see fit so to do; but the fact remains that we are here, under these conditions, legislating for 90,000,000 people, not for to-day, not for to-morrow, but for many years in the future. The policies we determine by this legislation will affect, for weal or woe, the people of this great country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption here?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I was particularly careful not to interrupt the Senator while he was indulging in such observations of a general character as he cared to make in connection with the section of the bill which now receives his attention; that is, the holding-company section.

The Senator will recall that when the bill was before the Senate I moved to amend it so as to outlaw holding companies absolutely. The Senator voted with me upon my amendment, as I perceive by the RECORD now before me. I desire, however, to call his attention to the fact that with respect to that matter, as well as with respect to the penalty clause, the conferees carried out the instructions of the Senate.

The Senate refused to take out the provision in relation to holding companies, and it took out the provision in relation to penalties. The conferees did what was their duty—to maintain the provisions as the Senate wrote them, if they could. They seem to have done so.

I desire to inquire of the Senator now if he feels that it is quite fair to those of us who deem it our duty to sit here and listen to the Senator to detain us upon the question of the adoption or rejection of the conference report, with a criticism of the measure as it stands now, when the conferees did just exactly what the Senate directed them to do?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senator at all, whether my discussion be fair or unfair. Of course, his presence is always a delight to me; but while his vacation of the room would wound me very deeply, I nevertheless do not desire him to stay if he regards remaining as in the nature of a punishment. I have seen fit to comment upon this bill in a general way, because it is very difficult to select just a particular item. I am contending that this bill ought to go back to conference, and I am contending that when it does go back to conference every criminal penalty ought to be restored, and that the House conferees, who represent the body that first wrote these criminal penalties into the sections, ought to be willing to put them back, and that our conferees ought not to oppose it.

Mr. WALSH. But, Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator whether it was not the duty of the conferees to insist that they should not go back, since that was the vote of the Senate?

Mr. REED. Oh, perhaps on this one section; but why pause to discuss such a question? There are plenty of cases where they yielded that which the Senate had gained, and I am about to discuss one of the most important of those propositions.

I call attention to section 14 of the conference report. There has been a change worked here which apparently, at first glance, is innocent, but which, taken in connection with the other things the conferees did, absolutely, or almost absolutely, destroys the effect of the provision.

When this bill came to us from the House it provided:

That whenever a corporation shall violate any of the provisions of the antitrust laws such violation shall be deemed to be also that of the individual directors, officers, or agents of such corporation who shall have authorized, ordered, or done any of the acts, etc.

A penalty of $5,000 fine, or imprisonment, or both, was prescribed for these officers. As the bill came to us the section was of great potentiality, because by a number of sections the House had provided criminal penalties. These sections as they came to us from the House were penal sections. Therefore, when we provided that any officer of any corporation who was a party to the violation by that corporation of any of the penal antitrust acts should be criminally liable we reached the officers of great numbers of corporations who will be brought within the purview of this bill.

The conferees, however, took all of the penal clauses out of the antitrust legislation contained in this bill, and kept the word "penal" in the provision relating to the officers of corporations; and as the penal provisions are stricken out, this section has not left in it a particle of vitality so far as trusts or monopolies are concerned. It will now be held, and must be held, to apply only to the section that deals with railroad securities, and I believe with banks.

The section as now drawn does not apply as it would before these penal clauses were stricken out. It is almost as though we had stricken out all criminal clauses from the bill, and then said that any officer who permits a corporation to violate any of the penal clauses, there not being any, shall be sent to the penitentiary.

Let us apply the section. Suppose a corporation goes out and organizes a holding company. Suppose it restrains trade through the holding company. You undertake under this provision to arrest its officers. You can not hold them, because the act of the corporation is not denounced as a penal act.

SECTION 26 STRICKEN OUT.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention to two other sections, which were inserted in the Senate and stricken out by the conferees. I refer first to section 26.

It shall be unlawful for any corporation engaged in commerce to do any business in any State contrary to the laws of the State under which said corporation was created or contrary to the laws of the State in which it may be doing business. The District of Columbia shall be deemed a State within the meaning of this section.

Let us give that section a few moments' consideration.

It shall be unlawful for any corporation engaged in commerce to do any business in any State contrary to the laws of the State under which said corporation was created.

That is the first clause. Why should anyone object to that? Why should a corporation be permitted to do business contrary to the very laws that breathed into it the breath of life?

I shall wait a long time for any man to answer that question on ethical grounds. The man who undertakes to answer it must assume the position that it is right for one of these artificial bodies to violate the very law of its existence, and to do the very thing that the power which created it said it should not do. The opponent of this provision must contend that he is unwilling to punish an institution for violating law. He must place himself side by side with the concern that breaks the law that gave it life.

The second clause of the section is as follows:

Or contrary to the laws of the State in which it may be doing business.

Again I ask, why should that clause be stricken out? An individual can not do business in a State contrary to the laws of that State. Why should we hesitate to add the strength of the Government to the protection of a State against an institution created in some other State which enters its domain and violates its laws?

Why should this Government that possesses the exclusive right to regulate interstate commerce deny to a State protection against a corporation which enters its borders and violates its laws? With that section in the statute it is my opinion that two-thirds of the trusts of this country would be forced to dissolve to-morrow. With it out they still will exercise the same privileges they at present enjoy.

That section was added in the Senate. I must assume that the Senate conferees contended for it. It would be interesting to know upon what basis the House conferees refused their concurrence. I challenge gentlemen to stand in the open and tell us why a corporation should be permitted to engage in interstate commerce that violates the law of the State that gave it birth or violates the law of the State in which it transacts business.

SECTION 25, PROVIDING FOR REAL DISSOLUTION OF TRUSTS, ELIMINATED.

Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate I offered an amendment, which appears as section 25 and which reads as follows:

SEC. 25. That whenever a corporation shall acquire or consolidate the ownership or control of the plants, franchises, or property of other corporations, copartnerships, or individuals, so that it shall be adjudged to be a monopoly or combination in restraint of trade, the court rendering such judgment shall decree its dissolution and shall to that end appoint receivers to wind up its affairs and shall cause all of its assets to be sold in such manner and to such persons as will, in the opinion of the court, restore competition as fully and completely as it was before said corporation or combination began to be formed. The court shall reserve in its decree jurisdiction over said assets so sold for a sufficient time to satisfy the court that full and free competition is restored and assured.

That amendment was accepted by the Senate. It is stricken out by the conferees. Once more the trusts win. No word of criticism was offered against the section on the floor of the Senate, and no successful criticism can now be made. It was offered to meet a real evil. All of us know that many of the trust decisions, wrought out as the result of much travail and time and money expended, have practically been of no value to the people. The Department of Justice has spent months in digging out of musty tomes and dusty archives the evidence to demonstrate that the primary organization of a trust was violative of the law. It has sent its agents, at the expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars, to gather evidence in every nook, corner, and cranny of the land. Its attorneys have been met in the tribunals of justice by the most skilled advocates the monopolies could employ, and at the end of a long and arduous battle the Government has gained its case. Then this suit, brought for the purpose of relieving against monopoly—this suit, bottomed upon the fact that there was an unlawful combination—this suit, in which it was alleged that a great number of independent concerns had been brought together into one concern for the purpose of plundering and plucking the people of the land—this suit, that had these purposes for its basis and its aim, has too often resulted in a decree that left the situation worse than it was before the case was brought. The victory has been turned to disaster because courts, like Congresses, seem to be unable to look two or three hundred million dollars in the face without blinking their eyes. I am not presenting only my individual opinion. I call attention to a letter that came from the Attorney General's Office a few weeks ago, which I read into the RECORD. It contains this statement:

The fundamental weakness in the enforcement of the antitrust act in previous administrations was the failure to insist upon a real dissolution of monopolies and combinations which the courts had adjudged unlawful.

The prosecution had to be begun in response to the voice of outraged public opinion, it had to be carried on for the same reason, the decision had to be secured for the same reason, and then, having gained the victory, the people were at the end robbed of the fruitage of the labor. This is the indictment brought by the Attorney General's Office. He does not say whether it was the fault of previous Attorneys General or the fault of the courts.

In such a condition as that, with such a fact as that before us, the plain duty of Congress is by law to provide that there shall be a real dissolution. Why do we pass antitrust laws? Is it that we shall have a long trial, a full hearing, eloquent arguments, logical briefs, and in the end not dissolve the thing we have denounced as a monster of the commercial world and as a menace to our country?

Why do we have these cases? Why do we bring them? Is it merely to allay public indignation, or is it to accomplish substantial results?

Now, if it be true that a combination has been formed and that it is a wicked thing, why should we not dissolve it into its constituent parts? You would have no difficulty in so providing for the little fellow. You would find no one shying at the proposition of putting the knife into his emaciated and skinny form and then turning the knife around. But when it is proposed by law to say to a combination that has a capital of a billion dollars, you shall be dissolved into your constituent parts, the loot shall be disgorged, the decree shall be a real mandate of dissolution, the punishment shall fit the offense, you can not get such a law passed—not in this Congress.

I read you what the Attorney General's Office had to say about the past dissolutions. We did not need the word of the Attorney General's Office. All we needed to do was to listen to the ticker on Wall Street, which told the story of many of these dissolutions in columns of figures that eloquently recorded the story of the profits of dissolution.

It seems that we might almost apply to these dissolution suits which were supposed to be the death of the trusts the philosophy of the fellow who had his life insured for $100,000, and who, when some one warned him against reckless conduct, said, "It does not make any difference if I do get killed; I can make money by getting myself killed." These concerns after dissolution and death have been more valuable than they were before, if we can trust the stock market. The winding sheet seems to give an added value. The funeral is a profitable thing. The requiem sung over their corpses produces a resurrection and a new life, with enlarged opportunities and more dollars and cents in bank.

When I propose that we shall have a real decree, that there shall be a real burial, and that we shall sod down the grave upon the monster that was created in defiance of law, but that we shall at the same time preserve its parts and restore them to competition and activity, the conferees say, "You must not do that. Gently, my friends; do not touch these great trusts with rude hands. Let the courts by easy methods persuade them to somewhat change their form without in so much as by a hair's breadth changing their methods."

FAKE DECREES AGAINST TRUSTS—STOCK OF DISSOLVED TRUSTS INCREASES IN VALUE—STANDARD OIL CASE.

When the Standard Oil case was in court and there was danger of some real legal surgery being performed that might divide it into parts and destroy its monopoly control and consequently cut off its monopoly profit, the stock actually declined to 585. Even in the period before the patient had been put on the judicial operating table the mere fact that the nurses were assembling and that the smell of anesthetics was in the operating room beat down the price of these stocks to 585. There was some chance that the knife might go deep enough to reach a vital point. But after the legal surgeons had made their incision it was discovered that they had not even stained the blades of their knives. The operation was bloodless and painless. The patient instantly recovered. Evidently it did not even experience a shock. Accordingly, its temperature, as recorded in the stock exchange the next day, was not only normal but health and vigor had been greatly increased by virtue of the remarkable judicial operation. The stock which had been 585 now registered 900. This result obtained because the patient had been discharged not only as completely cured but was certified as sound in wind, limb, and eyesight, and, moreover, was immune from any future punishment for any of the acts that had been then and there adjudicated.

Suppose we had had this statute on the books then; the Standard Oil Co. would have gone out of existence. It would not be able, as it is to-day, to go into States and by local price cutting destroy the independent concerns. It would not be able, as it is to-day, to cut down the price 10, 20, 30, 40, 60 per cent upon crude oil and close the markets of entire States whenever it sees fit so to do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say for the information of the Senator that this was the last amendment that was settled in the conference. It was considered from every standpoint. Our attention was called to a very important case in the Senator's own State with which the Senator is very familiar. The court said that in dissolving the corporation, as to selling them out, the public interest must be considered. The court said in the United States against St. Louis Terminal:

We come now to the remedy. In determining what this should be we, as said by this court in Standard Oil Co. v. United States (221 U. S., 1, 78), must not overlook the fact that in applying a remedy "that injury to the public by the prevention of an undue restraint on or the monopolization of trade or commerce is the foundation upon which the prohibitions of the statute rest, and moreover that one of the fundamental purposes of the statute is to protect, not to destroy, the rights of property." If, as we have already said, the combination of two or more mere terminal companies into a single system does not violate the prohibition of the statute against contracts and combinations in restraint of interstate commerce, it is because such a combination may be of the greatest public utility. But when, as here, the inherent conditions are such as to prohibit any other reasonable means of entering the city, the combination of every such facility under the exclusive ownership and control of less than all of the companies under compulsion to use them violates both the first and second sections of the act, in that it constitutes a contract or combination in restraint of commerce among the States and an attempt to monopolize commerce among the States which must pass through the gateway at St. Louis.

In the Senator's own State, in the city of St. Louis, I think, there were some 39 corporations that had their terminals; and, quoting from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, the court said if all those corporations were sold out and dissolved it would have been impossible for the great railroads to secure rights of way through that great city; that it would have been impossible for them to have different stations for each railroad and detrimental to the public interests.

St. Louis is a city of great magnitude in the extent of its area, its population, and its manufacturing and other business. A very large number of trunk-line railroads converge in this city. In the brief of one of the well-informed counsel in this case it is said that St. Louis is one of the largest railroad centers in the world. Suppose it were required of every railroad company to effect its entrance to this city as best it could and establish its own terminal facilities, we would have a large number of passenger stations, freight depots, and switch yards scattered all over the vast area and innumerable vehicles employed in hauling passengers and freight to and from those stations and depots. Or suppose it became necessary in the exigency of commerce that all incoming trains should reach a common focus, but every railroad company provide its own track——

Mr. REED. For the sake of getting myself right, I wish to ask if the Senator was asking me a question?

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to show our reason for finally yielding on this matter after a contention for weeks. I should like if the Senator will kindly yield to me to show how it would work in a corporation in my own State.

Mr. REED. I will yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. There was a tobacco company there. The American Tobacco Co. owned 51 per cent of its capital stock,

The owner of the 49 per cent of the stock brought suit against the American Tobacco Co. to dissolve the corporation and also brought suit for damages and also to get the stock back, because it had been obtained under a false representation, as I understand. They took that State corporation into the Federal court in my State and removed it to a Federal court in New Jersey and made it a party in New Jersey to the celebrated American Tobacco case. One man, who owned the 49 per cent, was taken to New Jersey, out of his own State, and made a party to this American Tobacco Co.'s case. The Senator will find that fact stated in the Supreme Court decision in that case. Now, if there had been a receiver appointed, as this amendment provided, this man who had been contending against the company would have had his property sold out entirely, with nobody to buy it, and 49 per cent of the stock would have gone into the scrap pile. There would have been $40,000,000 worth of property sold out in the entire property of the American Tobacco Co. in my State, with nobody to buy, if you had compelled the court to sell out.

Therefore to punish one man you might injure 10,000 innocent men, and, as the Supreme Court says, the public interest, the interest of innocent people, must be thought of in connection with dissolution and appointment of receivers. If it could have been worked out to protect innocent people, it ought to have been done, and the courts should not be put in a strajt-jacket.

Mr. REED. Yes; and who are the innocent people? The innocent people are the 90,000,000 people of the United States. They are not the mere stockholders of the trusts and corporations.

The argument which the Senator has just made amounts to nothing more than this—that the trusts and combinations must be kept, because we can not dissolve them without doing more harm than we do good.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; Mr. President, not dissolved, but selling them out.

Mr. REED. If it is true that you can not dissolve them without doing more harm than good, then let us repeal our trust and monopoly statutes and embark upon a new public policy.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think he is fair there when he uses the word "dissolution"? The question is as to a receivership and selling them out. The court uses the language to sell out. That was the question. That was the Senator's amendment.

Mr. REED. Very well. How will you work a dissolution that is a real dissolution without a sale? How are you going to dissolve a corporation? How do you ordinarily dissolve a corporation by any court except through the appointment of a receiver?

The Senator objects to the word "sale." Everyone understands, and these conferees must have understood, that any court of equity ordering a property of that kind sold, if it saw fit so to do, could divide the property into its original part and dispose of it by sale without the sacrifice of the property. There is no difficulty if we want to accomplish the task.

ST. LOUIS TERMINAL CASE.

The Senator [Mr. OVERMAN] referred to the St. Louis Terminal case—the court said that it had the right to dissolve that company, but that it would not do so. When the court took that position it denied the city of St. Louis the relief for which it had contended and battled for 25 years. If we had had this law, we would have had a real dissolution instead of the decision cited by the Senator, which, by the way, is now back again with the original court. The long, weary road to the Supreme Court is now once more being traveled, and still the old monopoly does business.

Let us see. There was a ferry across the Mississippi River known as the Wiggins Ferry. It carried trains of cars; it was the one entrance for cars coming from the East to the city of St. Louis, which is on the west bank of the river. Its prices were extortionate, so much so that it greatly burdened the commerce of that growing city. Thereupon a bridge was built to carry trains, which it was expected would be a rival of the Wiggins Ferry Co., and that thus, through rivalry, the rates would be reduced to a reasonable sum. I think they charged at that time 50 cents to haul a single passenger over that ferry when the passenger was in a train of cars. The rates upon freight were equally extortionate. The bridge was built. It had been built but a short time when it was discovered that the bridge and the ferry companies had been brought into one common control; the stock had been exchanged, the officers were the same, and the rates were the same.

Years went by. The manufacturers of the city of St. Louis found they could not compete with the manufacturers upon the Illinois side because they were compelled by this monopoly to pay extortionate charges on freights crossing the river. Thereupon enterprising citizens, in the hope of relieving their city from this burden and to gain for it the advantages which naturally it ought to have, organized a company known as the Merchants' Bridge Co., the stock of which was to be owned by the local people. They obtained a charter from Congress. That charter expressly provided that if ever that bridge company came under the same control or pooled its earnings with the old monopoly the charter should be forfeited by virtue of that act. They had scarcely finished the bridge when they discovered that somebody had slipped down to Congress and had an amendment passed to the charter taking out the prohibitive provision regarding stock ownership. Thereupon the stock was pooled, a common control obtained, and, after having built the bridge at great expense, the people discovered that they had only added to the assets of the monopoly. I have a bill here now pending to forfeit the franchise of that bridge company.

Unable to get relief in the courts, the people of the city of St. Louis voted bonds to build another bridge; but when they came to arrange for its approaches sinister influences were at work, which three times have succeeded in defeating the issue of bonds to build an approach to the bridge. That very matter is still pending.

A great city has sprung up on the eastern bank of the river, where manufacturing industries have located because they could not locate on the western bank and pay the extortionate rates. If the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States had known the situation as the citizens of St. Louis knew it, they would not have argued that harm would come; they would have dissolved this miserable monopoly; they would have broken the shackles upon the commerce of the great southwestern metropolis; they would have given new life and new energy to that people and to that community, and the blessings of the fathers and the mothers and the children would have been upon them. The case cited by my friend from North Carolina is a very unfortunate illustration.

Representing the people of Missouri in part, I am prepared to say that St. Louis will build a monument in its chief public grounds; it will construct it of Parian marble and it will surmount it with the bust, in heroic proportions, of the man who will dissolve that terminal monopoly. Please God, if we had had this provision in the law when that case was tried, St. Louis would have broken the thralldom of 30 years. It is because courts take that kind of view that I am here to appeal for a law that we who represent the people and speak for them ought to enact.

I was, however, when interrupted by Senator OVERMAN, commenting on the good old Standard Oil Co. and on the rise in the value of its stocks. That decision did not make as much difference to the Standard Oil Co. for all practical purposes as it would if an individual defendant had been in court and it had been solemnly decreed that he must go to the barber shop and get shaved. The penalty amounted to no more than that. That institution still fixes the prices not only upon the oil that is consumed by the people, but it fixes the price upon all the oil that the Almighty stored beneath the surface of the earth to light the feet of the shadowy hosts who shall march across this "bank of time" in the next thousand years.

TOBACCO TRUST DISSOLUTION A FRAUD.

The American Tobacco Co.: That company was created out of a vast number of institutions. It built itself up by practices that were brutal and cruel and criminal. It struck down and destroyed as remorselessly and with as little feeling as does one of the great guns of the Kaiser when it hurls its 2,000-pound missile, loaded with explosives, against a fortress. It took great men and wealthy men in its powerful grip and crushed them as easily as a giant can crush the infant child.

I had an old friend who, by shrewd investment, by the practice of economy, and by careful attention to business, had accumulated a fortune that was supposed to reach something like a million and a half dollars. Notice was served upon him by the trust to surrender. He had the temerity to refuse. In a few months' time the iron bands were tightened here and tightened there until, in order to save himself, he sacrificed something like a million dollars of his property and surrendered, glad to escape with part of his fortune.

These mighty combinations go into communities where there are not little men, but where there are men of great affairs, and strike them down as coldly, as criminally, as does a murderer who, from the dark, strikes an unsuspecting victim. Power like that is too dangerous to be lodged in the hands of any one concern.

The Tobacco Trust was at last brought to the bar of justice. It came with the insolent swagger of the bully who thinks he owns the court, the sheriff, and the jury. But the storm was rising; popular opinion was making itself felt even in the citadels of the mighty. It appeared at last possible to put the iniquity of this concern into the balances of justice and obtain a righteous decision. Long and fearsome was the struggle. The legal athletes battled back and forth in the forum of the court, but at last the clock of time struck the hour of judgment. A judgment was rendered dividing this trust, which was a combination of 250 concerns, into 14 corporations which permitted common-stock ownership; and, as there was common-stock ownership, of course there was common control. Common-stock ownership is the vital bond that binds these corporations together as the attachment of flesh and blood and skin bound together the Siamese twins from birth to death. After it had been dissolved the stock of the company rose from $390 to $529 per share in a single day.

Why was that? Let me tell you. Until that decree was entered there was always the possibility that the law might be enforced; that some day and somehow, in the providence of God, that institution would be brought before a judge who would strike it down. Even before the case was begun shrewd investors knew that its practices were illegal and that impending over it always was the threat and possibility of punishment and dissolution. But when a decree had been rendered that did not in any way injure the trust, that still left it able to dominate the commercial world, the danger was past. The decree of dissolution was, of course, at the same time a bar to any further prosecution. It was a sort of perpetual corporate franchise granted by the court, the terms and conditions of which were fixed in the decree, and so fixed that the institution was as powerful after the decree as it was before. No longer was there any danger of prosecution. It was all ended. The Government of the United States, desiring to prosecute to-day, must begin at that decree, and can not go back of it for a single potential fact or base upon such fact a judgment hereafter to be rendered. Therefore the stock of the Tobacco Trust went up in the markets of Wall Street.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if it is his view that a judgment in a civil action against a trust under the Sherman Antitrust Act is a bar to a criminal prosecution either against the corporation or against its officers?

Mr. REED. I am not speaking of that; I am speaking about a civil action; that the judgment in the civil case having been rendered and having been complied with——

Mr. WALSH. No other civil action could be prosecuted.

Mr. REED. No other civil action could be brought.

Mr. WALSH. But the Senator does not contend, as I understand him, that the Standard Oil Co., its directors, or trust magnates, may not be prosecuted even yet under the criminal provisions of the law?

Mr. REED. Possibly they might if the conferees had not been so busy. We put in a section extending the statute of limitation to six years, but it disappeared in conference. The three-year statute has run against nearly all of these enterprising buccaneers to whom I am referring.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator further, then, if the statute has run, is it his view that we could institute a prosecution even if the statute of limitations were subsequently extended?

Mr. REED. I do not think we could if it has actually run. When I said "has run," I perhaps ought to have said "has run or is about to run."

Mr. WALSH. Then, I desire to inquire of the Senator whether the criminal court is not still open to the Government, and whether those remedies are not available, notwithstanding the judgment which has been rendered in the civil action?

Mr. REED. The Senator means for the enforcement of criminal penalties?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. REED. Undoubtedly the civil judgment is not a bar to criminal prosecution.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad the Senator takes that view of it.

Mr. REED. If the criminal prosecution is not barred by the statute of limitations, it may still go on; but, Mr. President, while that is true, that does not by so much as one jot or tittle take from the force of my argument, if it have any force, that there should be a law demanding a civil judgment that will restore conditions as they were before the trust was organized.

Mr. President, as part of my remarks, I desire to have incorporated into the RECORD, without reading, a short article pertinent to the matter to which I have just been referring, from the Literary Digest of June 15, 1912, under the title "Dissolved trusts under scrutiny."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The article referred to is as follows:

DISSOLVED TRUSTS UNDER SCRUTINY.

A few months ago the public learned, to its amazement, that the securities of the various companies which had made up the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trusts represented on the stock market a value many millions in excess of the rating of those trusts before their dissolution. Now, two cases before the courts give rise to the curious suspicion that the oil and tobacco octopi are not only richer since their disintegration, but more active, more predatory, and more powerful. In one of these cases the litigation had its beginning in the refusal of Henry Clay Pierce, president of the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., to count the proxies offered in behalf of the Standard Oil interests, although those proxies represented a majority of the Waters-Pierce stock. In defense, Mr. Pierce argues that the alleged dissolution of Standard Oil has not really robbed the trust of any of its potentialities, and that if his company recognizes the Standard Oil control it will lose its charter in Missouri, its home State. In the course of the proceedings it has been testified that the secret daily meetings of the directors of the Oil Trust did not cease after the dissolution, but are still held every day in room 1500 at 26 Broadway. And it is contended by the Pierce interests that the same group who controlled the subsidiaries through the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey are still in control of all of them, and are trying to control the Waters-Pierce Co., in violation of the Supreme Court's decree and of the mandates of the Missouri courts.

As a witness John D. Rockefeller testified that he had "given no attention at all" to the matter of reorganizing the companies in accordance with the dissolution decree, but when Samuel Untermyer asked, "then how do you know whether it is being managed so as to cut loose and hold tight?" he answered with heat that "there has been no such thing as cutting loose and holding tight." The effect of his testimony is thus summarized in the news columns of the New York Times:

"Although Mr. Rockefeller parried almost every thrust from Mr. Untermyer, and usually slipped away from committing himself, the general effect of his testimony was to show that the men who formerly dominated the trust—and Mr. Rockefeller didn't hesitate to refer to it as a trust—were the men who decided what individuals should take charge of the subsidiary companies after they had been 'liberated,' as he expressed it."

"No more elusive, subtle, noncommittal, impossible witness ever took the stand," exclaims the New York American, which quotes the opinion of the London Economist that "there are more brains behind the Standard Oil 'crowd' than there are behind the whole United States Government at Washington." Mr. Rockefeller's very evasions, thinks the chief counsel for the Waters-Pierce contestants, will convince the public that the Standard Oil reorganization has not been all that it pretends to be. And in the New York Herald we read:

"The Federal authorities made their best efforts and operated under the most stringent laws on the books to abolish this fattest of trusts. The result was a paper victory for the people. The real victory, it is now admitted by Mr. Rockefeller, was won by the oil company, which is run in practically the same old way, by the same old men, with profits even greater than formerly."

A lawyer connected with this case estimates "from fairly exhaustive data," we read in the New York World, that Mr. Rockefeller's fortune now amounts to $900,000,000, and that it has increased $100,000,000 since the dissolution of Standard Oil.

The New York Evening Journal notes that before its dissolution the Standard Oil Trust was worth "just about $321,000,000 less than it is worth now," and it goes on to say:

"When you compel a Tobacco Trust or a Standard Oil Trust to dissolve, what do you do?

"You give the insiders a chance to make millions at the expense of innocent stockholders.

"Some of these separate Standard Oil concerns have jumped up to the most phenomenal prices of $2,000 and $3,000, and even $6,500 a share.

"Can't you imagine which particular individuals knew what would happen?

"Don't you know that the insiders, the men who control the trust, knew perfectly well that one particular subsidiary concern was valuable and that another particular concern was running at a loss or small profit? * * *

"As long as the trust was run all as one concern the stockholders of the trust stock got his part of the profit from everything.

"When you divide it up you find a few big, rich men holding the valuable parts in their hands and getting all the profit, and the poor, silly fools—the public—holding in their little pockets the worthless stuff."

Turning to the litigation which has dragged the Tobacco Trust again into the limelight beside the Standard Oil octopus, we read that it is a suit brought by an independent tobacco concern, E. Locker & Co., against the American Tobacco Co., the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., and the P. Lorillard Co. The petition claims that despite the dissolution decree, these companies are doing business virtually as the same old Tobacco Trust and employing the same old methods to crush independent dealers.

Referring ironically to the efforts of the officers of the companies which once made up the trust to restore competition between these companies, the petition says:

"One of the means employed by them in their earnest efforts to restore so-called competition is for four of the big companies to come into a territory, apparently to compete with each other, but in reality to attack the common enemy—that is, the independent manufacturer—simultaneously and from all sides, so that whereas the independent tobacco people had a fighting chance before when attacked by one trust, their annihilation is now a matter of certainty, for who can withstand a simultaneous attack of four trusts operating in concert and at the same time? And so there have been more failures of independent tobacco jobbers in this city within the last few months, since these new companies have started out to restore competition, than there have been in so many years."

Mr. REED. I also desire to incorporate in my remarks an article from the Literary Digest of April 4, 1914, entitled "Steel and oil prosperity."

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

A sign of the times with Standard Oil, we are informed, is that while many Wall Street brokers have been laying off employees, dealers in Standard Oil subsidiary shares have in some offices doubled their pay roll and keep their people busy until 9 in the evening. Since the dissolution of the Standard Oil Co. two years ago these shareholders of the old New Jersey company, says the Wall Street Journal, who have held onto all their fractions, have benefited during this period of the appreciation in the market value of the companies' shares and of the cash dividends paid, and this paper adds:

"These indicate a total profit in Standard Oil shares since the dissolution of at least 115 per cent. On December 15, 1911, Standard Oil stock, which included the New Jersey company, and all subsidiaries, sold at $640 a share, while to-day these shares are quoted around $1,230, an increase of $590 a share, or over 90 per cent. Cash dividends paid by the Standard Oil Co. during the past two years have aggregated more than $160,000,000, equivalent to over 160 per cent on the capital stock of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, and equivalent to over 25 per cent on the investment in the old shares at $640.

"A review of the 34 companies included in the Standard Oil group for 1913, the second year of restored competition between these companies under the watchful eye of the Washington Government, discloses a state of prosperity probably unequaled by any other group of companies in the United States."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have never posed as a trust baiter; I have never posed as the enemy of capital. My interest in this subject springs from no such narrow ground. Ever since we have had civilization there have been two different philosophies. One of them has asserted that it is the God-given right of a few men to control in affairs of government, and that God-given right has always been translated into the privilege of the few to plunder the many. It was for centuries contended that only a select few were sufficiently intelligent to conduct affairs of government, and that they alone could protect the people against their own foolishness. The idea that all of the people were possessed of natural rights was scorned by the philosophers and leaders and teachers of the world through thousands of years.

Governments granted patents of monopoly entitling certain favored individuals to enjoy the exclusive privileges of trade. Those gentlemen always used the privilege to extort the last possible penny from the masses of the people. It was thought that trade could not exist and prosper if it were not carried on under the protecting ægis of the Government. But a new thought was born in the world: Some wild dreamer conceived the idea that if you gave everybody a chance the sum total of good that would result would be greater than if you gave only a few men a chance. Accordingly we wrote it into our creed, that all men were created free and equal, and that all are entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We construed "liberty" to mean not merely the right to walk upon the streets of cities or through the lanes of the country, but liberty to embark in business, to engage in commerce, to solve for one's self the problem of one's own happiness and success. We came to the conclusion, too, that there could be no liberty in commerce if the entire field of business was controlled in a few hands; that to say to a man, "You have a right to engage in business," but at the same time to create or permit a condition which made engaging in business an impossibility, was simply to tickle his ear with a delusive phrase while denying to his soul the substances of liberty.

So we began enacting legislation calculated to produce a condition which would leave open for all men, big and little, the opportunity to engage in the affairs of life. The man who holds to that doctrine is not the enemy of business; he is the friend of business.

The nation that first drove from the ocean the pirate craft was the best friend of commerce, for it made possible the voyage of all vessels, big and little, bearing an honest cargo. The Government that says to men, "You shall not build monopoly upon the ruins of the hopes and aspirations and fortunes of the millions" is not an enemy of business; it is the friend of business in the broader sense. It opens the field of enterprise so that all men may there enter and lay the foundations not only of their own private fortunes, but of the fortunes of their country.

After 24 years of trial of the Sherman Act, we have found in the school of experience that there are defects in our antitrust legislation. We entered upon the present attempt at amendment with the idea that we could reach much of the evil of monopoly by condemning its favorite practices. That thus we could provide a short cut to their vitals. We thought it would be easy to prove a particular practice and to impose a swift and speedy penalty. We end by taking every penal provision out of the trust sections of this bill. We end by providing a smooth and easy road which may be traveled through the years, until finally a commission shall issue an innocuous, nonenforcible decree, a decree that can be vitalized only by being affirmed by a court. At the conclusion of all the litigation we propose to impose no penalty, levy no fine, send no one to jail, and we permit the culprit to preserve his swag!

This is the proud record we are writing. Against it I have for hours now protested, perhaps to deaf ears; but I shall, at least, have the satisfaction of knowing that every position I have taken is in accordance with the platforms of my party; with the declarations of the great leaders of my party; that every position I have taken here is a part of the warp and woof of Democracy.

It has been hinted more than said here this morning that we have reached a point where it is not safe to dissolve these great concerns; that by dissolving them we shall do more harm than good, and therefore we must touch them with gentle hands. If that be true, it can only be true because monopoly is a beneficent thing; and if monopoly be a beneficent thing, then let us have done with the false pretense that it is to be exterminated.

THE FIRST MONOPOLY.

I deny, sir, that monopoly is a good thing. There can be no monopoly that is not built upon the grave of human hopes. There can be no monopoly that has not crushed out the life and the prosperity of individuals and of communities. There never has been a good monopoly, and there never will be. Until you can find a beneficent murderer, or a Christian burglar, or a kind-hearted assassin, you will not find a good monopoly. Monopoly is born of greed; it is cradled in avarice; its soul is cupidity. There never was a monopoly created in this world but that the man who created it did so in order that he might take advantage of the necessities of his fellow man. Always and forever the vision before the eye of the monopolist is so to control a prime necessity of life that he may be able to compel the people to pay his price. His object is not to compete in the market, but to sell to hungry mouths at the price hunger is willing to pay.

It has been so from the first. The earliest monopoly of which we have record was in the land of Egypt. There were seven fat years. The world laughed with glorious harvests. The Valley of the Nile was rich in fruitful crops. Vast fields of grain stretched away like shoreless yellow seas. The king learned that there were to be seven years of famine, and so, at the cheap prices of the hour he gathered into vast granaries the immeasurable crops of corn. He awaited the hour when the people must buy. Then came the years of drought. The hot sun shot its fiery arrows into the burning soil. The earth opened its mouth and cried for water. Nature refused to produce her fruitage.

Then came the brown hosts of Egypt—the women whose sons and brothers had died to give glory to the Empire—the soldiers upon whose stout shields had been borne to a thousand victories the imperial monopolist.

With parched lips they cried, "Give us corn, O Pharaoh." Then spake the king: "Bring hither your silver and your gold." They piled it in shining heaps at the feet of the monster they had worshiped as a god.

Again they cried, "O Pharaoh, give us corn lest we perish." The merciless reply came, "Bring hither your flocks and your herds." They drove the lowing kine through the dusty valley of the Nile and surrendered them to the tyrant's insatiate greed.

Once again came the piteous appeal. "Give us corn, O Pharaoh, for we die of hunger." He looked upon them; the lips of want were drawn back from the teeth of starvation; their eyes were bloodshot from the agony of hunger; the flesh had fallen from their bones. They crouched before him, a skeleton army upon which death had cast his ashen mark. Pharaoh knew the time was ripe to enslave the people, and he said: "Bring hither your sons and your daughters, your manservants and your maidservants." When the ancient monopolist had concluded that hellish bargain he owned all of the lands, and all of the cattle, and all of the gold, and all of the silver, and all of the bodies of the countless hosts of the empire of Egypt. Five hundred years afterwards the Sacred Writer declared "the people are slaves even unto this day."

Such is the story of the first monopolist of whom we have record in history. Every man who has since gathered the necessities of life, cornered the means of production, or combined and combined until he dominated the commercial world has been inspired by the same motives, has pursued the same methods, and is no better than was the heathen king of 4,000 years ago.

We are dealing with that century-old question to-day. The American people are looking on and saying, "Give us bread," and we are responding, "We will give you this stone. We will not harass or annoy these gentlemen who build monopolies. We will deal gently with them. In fact, we are a little afraid to dissolve them at all. We dare thus to answer in the name of Democracy and reform!"

What change has come over the spirit of our dreams? Where now are the soldiers of Democracy who said, "Lead us to the charge"? Where now the bold and dauntless orators who on a thousand platforms and a hundred thousand stumps declared to the people of the land, "Open to Democracy the doors of the citadel, and we will expel the rogues. Give us the key of the temple, and"—in imitation of the Savior 1,900 years ago—"we will make a scourge of cords and drive the money-changers from the high places of the land"? Your scourge of cords is but a wisp of straw, to which you set the match, that even it shall be turned to ashes which may be blown about by idle winds.

Mr. President, I have too long wearied the Senate. I thank the Senate for its attention.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent to take up House joint resolution 241, for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that I know very little about that bill; but the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has asked to be present when the bill is considered. I understand that he will be in the city either tomorrow or next day, and I ask the Senator to let the bill go over until the Senator from Ohio returns.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will not insist, Mr. President, though I understood when the matter was first broached that the Senator from Ohio wanted to be present, and that when it was taken up he was present, and he did not ask to be present the next time it was considered. If the Senator insists, however, of course I do not want to take it up in the absence of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not want it taken up in the absence of the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. STERLING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Kern	O'Gorman	Shields
Bankhead	Lane	Overman	Smoot
Bryan	Lee, Md.	Page	Sterling
Chamberlain	Lewis	Perkins	Swanson
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Poindexter	Thompson
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Reed	Thornton
Fletcher	Myers	Robinson	Vardaman
Hitchcock	Nelson	Shafroth	West
Jones	Norris	Sheppard

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is detained from the Chamber by official business at one of the departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN in the chair). Thirty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. WARREN answered to his name when called.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am requested to state that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is absent from the Senate on public business.

Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. STONE, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. GORE, and Mr. JOHNSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

After a little delay Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. WHITE, Mr. WALSH, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield for a moment that I may submit a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. KERN. Does the Senator wish to have me yield for any considerable length of time?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I wish to ask unanimous consent to have matter printed in the RECORD, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. KERN. I yield for that purpose.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTION FOR AN INTERNATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a proposed constitution for an international government by Dr. Taylor, editor of the Medical World, together with some comments made by Dr. Taylor on it. I do not desire, however, to say by this action that I approve of everything in the constitution, neither does Dr. Taylor offer the constitution as a perfected instrument, but for the purpose of getting discussion and general debate on the subject of international peace. He conceives this to be an opportune time to offer some suggestions in regard to what he believes may bring that about. In carrying out that idea I desire to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PROPOSED CONSTITUTION FOR AN INTERNATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

PREAMBLE.

In order to prevent war, abolish national armaments (except limited police provisions to preserve internal peace, law, and order), diminish national prejudices, and to promote peace, prosperity, happiness, and the general welfare, we, the people of the nations which shall agree to this compact, as signified by affirmative popular vote after thorough discussion and authoritative submission, do ordain and establish this inviolable instrument, and proclaim it as a sign and evidence of a higher civilization than any that the human race has heretofore attained.

ARTICLE 1.

All local governmental authority shall remain as at present constituted or as may hereafter be legally constituted within the constituent nations, except as necessarily modified by this constitution.

ARTICLE 2.

All general governmental authority shall be given, and is hereby given, to two bodies, a senate and a representat, composed as provided herein, which shall constitute the international government. But the constituent nations and the people therein reserve the right of initiative, referendum, and recall, as shall be provided.

ARTICLE 3.

1. The senate shall consist of three members from each constituent nation, and an additional member for each 50,000,000 population and (or) major fraction thereof in any constituent nation, not including colonial possessions.

2. The international senators shall be chosen by the legislative authority of each constituent nation, in joint session if such authority be lodged in two bodies.

3. The regular length of term for international senators shall be seven years, but succession shall be so arranged that a change of not more than one-third of the body shall be made in any one calendar year.

4. The compensation of international senators shall be $15,000 per year, with 10 cents per mile for the necessary traveling distance from the home of each senator to the place of meeting and return once per year.

ARTICLE 4.

1. The representat shall consist of a representative for each 5,000,000 population and major fraction thereof in each constituent nation, not including colonial possessions, popularly elected by the regular voters in each constituent nation according to regulations to be established by the popular representative body or "lower house" in each constituent nation; but each constituent nation shall have at least one such representative.

2. The regular length of term for representatives shall be three years, and the term of not more than one-half of the membership of this body shall expire in one calendar year.

3. The compensation of representatives shall be $10,000 per year, with the same mileage as that allowed for senators.

ARTICLE 5.

1. The senate shall be in constant session except for one permissible recess in any calendar year not to exceed 30 consecutive days, counting Sundays. During such recess a committee of at least three members shall remain on duty, with such discretionary power as may be granted by the senate. Longer or additional vacations may be granted to individual members by majority vote of the senate, but not more than one-fourth of the body may be absent from duty at any time except during a recess.

2. The representat shall have annual sessions, and it shall determine the time of convening and length of sessions, but extraordinary sessions of the representat may be called by a two-thirds vote of the senate.

ARTICLE 6.

1. The senate and representat shall each select its president and other officers, and shall determine the duties, powers, and compensation of the same. The president of each body shall be a member, but the other officers need not be members. Each body shall determine its own rules.

2. The credentials of membership of each body shall be determined by a court to be designated or established by both bodies in joint session. But until such court is designated or established, each body may judge the credentials of its own members.

ARTICLE 7.

Senators and representatives shall be subject to recall at any time after six months' incumbency in office by the constituencies represented, respectively. The process of recall may be established by the different constituencies represented; but if not so established within three years after the establishment of this constitution the senate shall establish a process of recall for senators, and the representat for representatives, to be applied in constituencies in which no process of recall has been established, until said constituencies shall establish a process of recall.

ARTICLE 8.

1. Powers of the international government: The government hereby established shall acquire, possess, and have full authority over all military and naval establishments in the signatory nations. This shall mean all ships of war, fortifications of all kinds, artillery for land and sea, arms of all kinds for both cavalry and infantry, ammunition and military stores of all kinds, and all military apparatus for navigating the air. Police provisions for the maintenance of internal peace and order shall be permitted to the constituent nations; but the total strength of the same may be limited by the international government. Militia may be permitted to the constituent nations, but its regulation and control must primarily reside in the international government.

2. A standing army and navy shall be maintained by this government sufficient to maintain peace among the constituent nations and to protect any and all the constituent nations from outside aggression.

3. All international relations of a political nature among the signatory nations shall be under the entire control of this government, which shall, in its discretion, deal with them directly, or establish a court for this purpose.

4. Declaration of war against, or the conclusion of peace with, any power foreign to this international government shall be the exclusive province of this government as herein constituted.

5. This government shall be supported by revenue raised by its own authority from individuals or private corporations, and not by assessment of the constituent nations. Taxes may be laid in any manner that the wisdom of the government may devise, but the method or methods adopted shall be applied uniformly in all the nations constituting the international government.

6. Commerce may be regulated among the constituent nations of this government, and between this government as a whole or any one or more of its constituent nations, and any one or more nations foreign to this government, by this government as herein constituted.

7. An international coinage system may be proposed by this government to its constituent nations, and it may put the same into operation among those constituent nations assenting to the plan.

8. Each constituent nation shall have full control of education and language within its boundaries; but the government may make regulations as to the language or languages to be used orally among its individual members. All public documents must be published in the legal language of each constituent nation for use in each nation.

9. All treaties, either between constituent nations or between a constituent nation and a nation foreign to this government, may be revised by the senate.

ARTICLE 9.

1. The government shall make international laws for the purposes set forth in this instrument.

2. The business of the senate and representat shall be coordinated by a coordinating committee consisting of three members elected from and by each house in a manner to best secure a fair representation of varying sentiments or factions, and one member to be appointed by the highest court established by the government, and this member may be a member of said court, but not a member of either house; and until such court shall be established, the seventh member of the coordinating committee shall be elected by a majority vote of both houses in joint session.

3. This coordinating committee shall have authority over the sequence of consideration and voting upon bills in both houses, to the effect that neither house shall neglect bills passed by the other house.

4. A quorum of either house shall be a majority of its members.

5. Ordinary bills shall become laws upon passage by both houses by a majority of members present, and the signature of the president of each house.

6. All revenue bills shall originate in the representat; but they may be amended by the senate if said amendments are acceptable to the representat. Any revenue bill, when rejected by the senate, if passed by a two-thirds vote of the entire membership of the representat twice, the votings to be separated by an interval of at least 30 diurnal days, including Sundays, shall become law.

ARTICLE 10.

The chief administrative branch is the senate. Additional administrative provisions may be established by law. Additional administrative officers shall be proposed by the senate and confirmed by the representat. They shall be under the direction and control of the senate, and subject to dismissal by a majority vote of that body; but they shall be subject to recall by a two-thirds vote of the entire membership of the representat.

ARTICLE 11.

At the first general election for the election of the representat after this constitution shall have been in operation 10 consecutive years, the senate and representat shall, by majority vote of each, submit to the popular electorate a system of popular initiative and referendum, both for ordinary general legislation and also for constitutional amendment, which shall be deemed a part of this constitution if favored by a majority of the voters voting thereon in a majority of the constituent nations. If such majority shall also constitute a majority of the sum total of all the votes cast thereon in all the constituent nations.

ARTICLE 12.

1. This constitution may be amended, in addition to the provision in the previous article, as follows:

Upon demand of the senate and representat, by majority vote of each, or by a two-thirds vote of either the senate or representat on two separate occasions, separated by a period of not less than two years nor more than five years, any proposed amendment of this constitution shall be submitted to the electorate at the next election of the representat, but it shall be passed and made a part of public records not less than one year previous to said election; and said amendment shall be considered adopted and made a part of this constitution if favored by a three-fifths majority of all the votes cast thereon in three-fifths of the constituent nations, if such majority also constitute a three-fifths majority of the sum total of all the votes cast thereon in all the constituent nations.

2. Provisions shall be made by law for informing voters concerning measures or constitutional amendments submitted to popular vote.

COMMENTS BY DR. TAYLOR.

One of the "bones of contention" in this constitution will be the composition of the senate, as it was in our convention in Philadelphia in 1787. The problem was a new one then. The small States contended for equal representation in the Senate, while the large States contended for representation according to population. This question came near breaking up the convention. Finally the large States yielded, as, it was argued, the lower House was based on population. Really, the line of difference is that the Senate represents the State governments, while the House represents the people. That is the idea in the above proposed constitution—that the senate shall represent the government. In 1787 our State governments wanted representation as such, as the State idea was then dominant, the national idea not being developed much at that time. But the recent amendment providing for popular election of United States Senators changes somewhat the original idea. United States Senators will henceforth represent the people of their States rather than the State government.

In any international constitutional convention this same question would arise, and at the present time, governments, as such, would demand representation, just as our States demanded representation, and equal representation, as such. In the course of years, under such a constitution, particularly after free diffusion of the people from one nation into another, which as we have seen takes place to a considerable extent under the present restrictions, the local national feeling would become much less than it is at present. The State feeling among us has almost entirely disappeared.

One danger might be that some of the empires, as Germany, would wish to break up and claim representation in the senate for each constituent part, and thus control the entire senate. This would have to be guarded against. And I think that rather more representation in the senate according to population would be demanded than I have provided for, as France, for example, would want more senators than Holland or Norway. The problem would be to keep the senate small, and yet satisfy the small nations. A better plan than I have presented for this could doubtless be devised. My plan is "the first dash," and I add these comments for modification.

Perhaps a better way to constitute the senate than the one given above would be by the Norwegian plan for constituting the upper house; that is, provide that the representat select the senate from its own members. In this way the senate could be strictly limited in numbers, and there would be no complaint of excess of representation of the smaller nations in the senate. Provision could easily be made that one-third of the senate pass out of office and renewed each second year. It might be desirable occasionally to make a selection for the senate outside of the representat. The constitution might grant permission to the effect that one-third of the senate may be constituted from outside of the membership of the representat.

The giving up of armies and armaments would be "a bitter pill" to the governmental authorities of some nations, but they would have to yield to this absolute necessity. The first step for peace among people who want to fight is to disarm them; and if all are disarmed they are on as equal a footing as if all were armed to the utmost, only they could not do much harm when disarmed—and the first object of an international government would be to put a permanent stop to the waste, destruction, and horrors of war. And we want to put a stop to the contention that battleships make for peace. They would if one nation were sufficiently strong to dominate the whole world; but that would be peace only on the terms of that one nation. We want to make one power sufficiently strong to dominate the whole world, but we want that to be an international power, controlled by an international government constituted justly to all concerned. Then battleships, owned and directed by that government, would make for peace, both among the constituent nations and between the "union" and the outside world, by protecting the constituent nations from both internal and external aggression.

The only way to secure and certainly preserve the world's peace is by some such combination of nations, the aggregate of which would be sufficiently strong to successfully meet aggression by the rest of the world, the internal peace being secured by disarmament of the constituent nations, and placing all armaments under the control of the international government, for the preservation of internal peace and protection from external aggression.

This is a large subject, but we must take it up some time, and just now it is forced upon us. Its importance overshadows everything else. Shall we shirk or face it? The most important task that humanity has before it is the permanent prevention of war. This should be done in a way in which the support of armaments shall be reduced to the minimum, in order to reduce the burden. A plan by which the armaments of the constituent nations shall be united and maintained only to the point of domination over outside opposition would secure this minimum, which would be reduced as new nations would come into the plan, until it would disappear entirely The main object of war prevention being secured, many other advantages would come along in the wake of cooperation along this line, which would be far-reaching beyond our present conception.

THE COPPER INDUSTRY.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have just received a telegram from the International Metals Selling Co., of 42 Broadway, New York, which I desire to read into the RECORD:

NEW YORK, September 29, 1914.

Hon. REED SMOOT, Washington, D. C.:

British Government's interference copper shipments, neutral bottoms, Rotterdam, seriously endangers copper industry this country. Appeal to you, as Senator representing large copper industry, make representations State Department stop unreasonable interference our neutral trade. British royal proclamation, Second Hague Conference stipulations, American War Risk Bureau do not mention copper as even conditional contraband. Unless shipment copper to neutrals can be kept open, afraid further reduction production inevitable.

INTERNATIONAL METALS SELLING CO.,
42 Broadway.

Mr. President, I read this telegram into the RECORD at this time and express the hope that everything will be done by the State Department to prevent interference with copper shipments in neutral bottoms, and thus allow the copper industry of this country to maintain the present number of men employed, which is only about one-half of the usual number. If interference is allowed with the shipments into neutral countries and in neutral bottoms, it will mean the total suspension of the copper industry of this country.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 29, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, impart unto us wisdom, strength, courage, fortitude that we may walk worthy of the vocation where unto Thou hast called us, and weave into the tissues of our being something noble, something worthy, and thus add to our moral character that we may know the purity of the divine life. In Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I introduced a resolution last July for a constitutional amendment, and as there seems to be no opportunity of getting time for discussion of measures not connected with the pending measure, I am forced to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD which I have prepared upon that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon a resolution which he has introduced submitting a constitutional amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address delivered by my colleague, Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, of Pennsylvania, delivered at the recent session of the Atlantic Deep Waterway Association.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to print a speech made by the Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, of Pennsylvania, in the deep-waterway project. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Journal was approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FRENCH, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 28, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I am to-day writing as follows to the Hon. David I. Walsh, governor of Massachusetts:

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Governor of Massachusetts.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: President Wilson nominated me some weeks ago to be postmaster at Boston, in place of Hon. Edward C. Mansfield, resigned. Mr. Mansfield's resignation is effective at the close of business September 30, 1914. I shall become postmaster on the 1st of October, and therefore I herewith tender my resignation as Representative in Congress.

With great respect. I am,
Very truly, yours, WILLIAM F. MURRAY.

May I ask you to lay this resignation of mine before the House? With kindest regards, I am,
